and Industry shows output down 13 per cent. in October 1989 compared to a year earlier. Job losses in the 12 months to December 1989 were 23,000, and the outlook for 1990 is extremely worrying.

The United Kingdom's knitting and allied industries are efficient and well equipped, with a strong reputation for quality and design. Their work force is skilled and adaptable. That commendable tribute is supported every time I visit a factory in my constituency. My latest visit was to the Viyella menswear factory in Hucknall. It preceded an important visit by the Princess Royal. We saw the latest in computer design and a new production line system of gents' shirtmaking—revolutionary but necessary for the company to stay in business and to meet its customers' growing need for a quick response to rapidly changing consumer preferences.

Despite the continuing rise in exports, the trade deficit in textiles and clothing is likely to have reached £3·5 billion in 1989—almost 20 per cent. of the national balance of trade deficit. In those extremely difficult circumstances, it is vital to avoid adverse changes in the international trading framework. Any phasing out of the MFA must be dependent on progress in strengthening GATT rules and disciplines, and signs that those new rules are truly effective in eliminating the trading abuses that adversely affect our constituents.

It is too early to specify the period required to bring about such progress, but it is unrealistic to expect that strengthening GATT rules will remove trade distortions and allow the benefit to be felt until at least 10 years after the integration process begins. Even the exporting countries whose exports are limited under the MFA recognise that the process cannot take place overnight. Virtually all have recognised the need for a phasing-out period of at least five years, and some will be seeking considerably longer.

Therefore, it is essential that the MFA should be renewed in its present form in 1991 when the current term expires. Without the MFA, despite its serious imperfections, there is no doubt that the present critical situation would be even worse.

In my constituency there is an added dimension. The House and the country know that Sherwood is Britain's premier coal-producing constituency. It was also the home of Rev. William Lee, the inventor of the knitting machine, whose quincentenary we celebrated last year.

Miners' wives invariably work in the textile industry. The two industries run hand in glove. The textile factories take advantage of the available female labour and the wives' salaries complement the household income. However, since 1983 6,500 miners in Sherwood—50 per cent. of the total work force—have left the industry. Miners over the age of 50, having worked underground for almost 40 years, were encouraged by their wives to accept early retirement and enjoy their remaining years, but before doing so, all the options were considered, including the wives' earnings. Due to the textile recession and the unfettered dumping of garments, wives' jobs are disappearing, bringing hardship to many households. If there is no alternative female employment available, as a last resort retired miners will have to seek work again. That would be grotesquely unfair.

However, my hon. Friend the Minister has said that he will fight like a tiger. Perhaps he should not have said that, knowing that these days the only people who win fights are the lager louts. I know that he is listening to the arguments and that he will act in the best interests of my constituents who work in the knitting and allied industries.

1.47 pm

Mr. David Young (Bolton, South-East): Debates on the textile industry have one factor in common: right hon. and hon. Members from both sides of the House who represent constituencies with textile interests rally round an industry which is vital to Britain. The textile industry is the fourth largest light manufacturing industry in Britain. It employes 485,000 people. Its output per head has been increased by 50 per cent. in the last 10 years. Its annual sales amount to £14 billion and exports in 1988 reached £4 billion. It represents 9 per cent. of manufacturing employment in the United Kingdom. However, the textile industry is concentrated in particular regions. Therefore unemployment in the industry means unemployment in those regions which were hardest hit by the recent recessions. Often there is little alternative for employment. Therefore it is the duty of the Government and Back-Benchers to support the textile industries in those regions.

I was taken aback by the Minister's rather laid-back approach—it was almost horizontal. Of course, he has no direct responsibility and of course the decision will be taken by the EC, but it is the duty of the Government to speak for the textile industry in the councils of the EC and those negotiations are no place for sleeping tigers.

Management and unions have the feeling that the Government look upon the textile industry as something from the past. Financial services are the up-and-coming thing and there is an impression created by the Government that we may have to do without the textile industry. I hope that that impression is wrong and that in his winding-up speech the Minister will say that the Government are fully behind the renewal of the multi-fibre agreement. I hope that he will tell us that the Government will do everything that they can to see that the agreement is renewed.

I recently found a quotation which sums up the matter fairly well. It is from a speech by Mr. Tony Benson, president of the British Textile Employers Association, and was delivered in 1985 before the last renewal of the multi-fibre agreement. Describing the agreement he said:

"The developing countries have been provided with an assured, quantified market in the developed countries, and with reasonable annual growth rates. The more vulnerable developing countries receive equal treatment and are protected from the crushing power of their more advanced neighbours. We must have confidence to invest in new and modern equipment in order to improve our international competitiveness, and the prospect of a balanced trading environment, in which the MFA is an essential part, is a pre-requisite for this advance."

That quote from a speech made some years ago sums up the present position.

The Government must seek the renewal of the MFA because it is all that we have at the moment to safeguard the textile industry. We must not throw away such an agreement by actions or by default. The textile industry has an efficient, skilled and adaptable work force. Management has done what it can to modernise, but that is not enough to counter the grinding effects of high interest rates. I am sorry that in his opening speech the Minister seemed to place responsibility for success entirely on the management and work force. In the battle to retain our share of the textile market, Government have a part to play. It is worrying that a great deal of the severest competition comes from countries whose Governments have taken up the cudgels and are prepared to support their textile industry in every way.

I hope that the Minister will do everything in his power to help our industry. More than anything else it needs confidence. It must be assumed that Back Benchers and Government are speaking on its behalf and that the Government will argue in Europe for the renewal of the MFA.

This nation is a member of the EC and must fight its corner within that organisation. We have a tremendous textile industry, but its is facing increasing difficulties, which in many cases such as high interest rates have not been caused by its own actions. It is for us and the Minister to back the industry and to help Britain to retain an important part of its manufacturing base. That can be done only by supporting a renewal of the multi-fibre arrangement.

1.54 pm

Mr. Ken Hargreaves (Hyndburn): Perhaps it is appropriate that the last Back Bencher to speak in the debate is from Oswaldtwistle, where James Hargreaves invented the spinning jenny. Not so many years ago, a debate on textiles would have prompted a large postbag for the Member of Parliament representing my constituency. That that has not been so on this occasion reflects the massive loss of textile jobs in Hyndburn in recent years, with those involved in the industry now numbering hundreds rather than thousands. I may be speaking on behalf of fewer constituents, but they are no less important for that.

The debate does not concern propping up the domestic textile industry but is about maintaining a fair and stable environment that will give it confidence to invest in the future. It asks not for protectionism but for the enforcement of fair trading practices. Given that, there is no doubt that massive investment on the scale of recent years will continue.

The present rules are unsatisfactory, in that in many instances they allow a case to be proved only after damage has been done. Blackburn and District Textile Manufacturers Association supports the view that any erosion of the rules would be catastrophic and that strengthening of GATT is of paramount importance prior to the ending of the MFA.

I welcome the fact that that view is widely shared by the Government, by the European Community and by Professor Silberston. It is important that before the arrangement is ended, stronger and more efficient safeguards, especially those relating to dumping, subsidies and fraud, are put in place. I welcome also the statement by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs that "The main issues for discussion in GATT are clear. It is accepted that the integration of textiles and clothing into GATT could only be gradual and progressive."—[Official Report, 9 November 1989; Vol. 159, c. 1304.]

In a letter to me on 8 January, Mr. David Duckworth, secretary of Blackburn and District Textile Manufacturers Association, commented:

"To achieve an orderly transition from the MFA to GATT rules will need a period of five to ten years in order that the effectiveness of the GATT rules may be tested."

I believe that he is absolutely right.

The textile industry and the fine people whom it employs deserve our support. The industry has shown remarkable resilience over the past few years and has acted to improve its competitive position. Even in the uncertain conditions that now prevail, investment is increasing, with some £8 million of investment in north-east Lancashire over the past five years.

Increasing importance is being placed on design. Hilden Manufacturing Company in my constituency, under the enthusiastic leadership of its managing director, Mr. Peter Hargreaves, has succeeded in expanding through a combination of positive attitudes by all and a determination to break into the often difficult export market. I know that Mr. Hargreaves will ensure that its export earnings continue to rise.

The survival of such firms depends on improving further their competitiveness in both domestic and overseas markets. The investment required in new technology will be made only if companies are confident of the future. Without the present system of restraint on low-cost imports, the prospect of reasonable stability would be removed—and with it, much of the confidence on which investment depends. Job losses would inevitably follow.

Professor Silberston himself acknowledges that almost 33,000 jobs will be lost if the MFA is ended. Many in the industry believe that he underestimates the danger and fails to take full account even of his own statement that imports entering this country at very low prices

"if sustained for some time, could make it impossible for competing domestic production to survive at all."

Professor Silberston has also paid too little attention to the additional job losses resulting from the knock-on effects in other related manufacturing and service industries. Despite the increased investment in east Lancashire, which I mentioned, in the past 12 months there has been a return to short-time working in many companies, together with a number of redundancies and mill closures—at a time when unemployment has fallen dramatically in north-east Lancashire. The loss of jobs in textiles is sad in an industry that is made up of skilled, hard-working people with an industrial relations record second to none, people who have readily accepted attempts to improve competitiveness—shift working, job flexibility and low wage increases.

Those are real people, as the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) said. To those of us who have lived in textile areas all our lives, these are our family, friends and neighbours. I believe that the Government care about the textile industry. Although the British Government in isolation cannot have their own way in the important decisions and discussions ahead, I hope that we can look to my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State to argue Britain's case forcefully.

2 pm

Mr. Henderson: With the leave of the House, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I wish to make a few concluding observations on an interesting debate. Much information about the industry has emerged and the passion felt about the industry and the communities that depend on it has been displayed. The number of hon. Members who have spoken shows the strength of feeling on this subject on both sides of the House. I welcome the fact three former Ministers were prepared to give us their experiences of industrial affairs in making the case for strong support for the industry—the hon. Members for Pudsey (Sir G. Shaw), for Pendle (Mr. Lee) and for Calder Valley (Mr. Thompson). The Minister should be in no doubt about the opinion of the House.

My hon. Friend the Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) commented on the Minister's lack of energy in presenting his case. I hope that there is nothing physically or mentally wrong with the Minister. I hope that he has some appetite for his brief. He is remembered, especially by Conservative Members, as a somewhat energetic tiger when he was involved in the No. 10 think tank. I hope that he is not burnt out. Industry needs something better than a paper tiger in the Department of Trade and Industry tank. Unless the Minister explains the Government's position more clearly, the House will be in great doubt about their intentions.

The hon. Member for Harborough (Sir J. Farr) said that he was scared stiff of the consequences for his constituency. My hon. Friends the Members for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes), for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer), for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden), for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon), for Oldham, Central and Royton (Mr. Lamond), for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) and for Bolton, South-East (Mr. Young) said that they, too, had been scared stiff by the possible consequences if we do not get this matter right. The industry will be scared stiff if, at the end of the debate, it is not clear where the Government stand.

The Under-Secretary of State must not hide behind any brief that the civil servants have prepared for him in the hope that he will play for more time before it is necessary to make the Government's position clear. I am not saying that this was your intention, Minister, but I do not believe that the Government's intention was clear from the opening remarks. You must give the House a clear answer—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Henderson: I apologise. The Minister must give a clear answer to the House so that we know where he and the Government stand on the matters that we have raised.

I have four final questions for the Minister. First, will he make it clear that he will support a multi-fibre arrangement renewal by the European Community in the talks that are about to begin? Secondly, will he guarantee that any outcome of the talks at the GATT negotiations on safeguards, anti-dumping and market access will be reported to the House before a final decision is reached by the EC negotiators? Thirdly, if the results of those talks are unacceptable to the House, will he give us a commitment that it is not the timetable, but the substance of the issue that then matters? Will he guarantee that the British Government will seek to toughen the MFA, if that is the situation that we face? Fourthly, does the Minister accept the argument that whatever one's long-term strategy, there is a strong and essential case to be made now for a tightening-up and renewal of an MFA 5?

2.5 pm

Mr. Redwood: With the leave of the House, I shall reply to the debate. We have had a good debate in which many hon. Members have put forward strongly held views from their constituencies, and have stressed to the House the importance of the textile industry and the way in which it has changed in recent years. I appreciate all those comments and I understand the importance of the textile industry to many communities. In the mid-1970s, I was a textile analyst and I travelled the country extensively visiting the textile industry, so I learnt a great deal about it. Although I travel less frequently these days in my new job, I see textile companies, and I am impressed by how great the changes have been and how much progress there has been in introducing new machinery, new ideas and new products. Nothing that I said at the beginning of the debate was intended to cast aspersions on the industry, and I went out of my way to stress its importance and its achievements in increasing productivity and exports and playing an important role in our economy and in many individual communities.

I understand that some hon. Members have had to leave before the conclusion of the debate and I am grateful to them for letting me know in advance. Friday is the day on which hon. Members like to be in their constituencies and I am grateful for the courtesy of those hon. Members. Much comment has been made about my remark that I would fight like a tiger against unfair trade practices. I reassert that now. I have no love of unfair trade practices, whether they are state subsidies and state aid, dumping or other types of market distortion which are widely condemned by GATT provisions covering individual products, and in the framework set out in the treaty of Rome and subsequent documentation aimed at creating a fair and level playing field in many areas of the market place within the European Community.

I repeat that assertion, but the House should remember that most of the remarks today were addressed to my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Trade. I am not in the same position as my predecessor at the Dispatch Box at the end of 1988, who was Minister for Trade and who was himself handling these detailed matters. My right hon. and noble Friend is doing a good job standing up for British interests in matters such as Turkish and Indonesian imports and he will read the comments made in the debate. I know that he is doing the best possible job for Britain in trying to put across our point of view through the EC and directly when he meets his opposite numbers. He has, for example, recently been to Turkey and has made strong representations about the points on which the House is concerned. The House will have noticed that I have been here throughout the debate listening attentively and I have made copious notes. I shall report the strength of feeling in the House to my right hon. and noble Friend and to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. Three times in recent weeks the Government have set out their attitude to the negotiations in the EC and to those in GATT. My hon. Friend the Minister for Industry put it clearly in a recent Adjournment debate. I have tried to be more expansive today as we have had the advantage of a five-hour debate. I have tried to explain some of the intricacies of the negotiating position that has been assumed by the European Commission in the early negotiations with GATT and the type of questions that the British Government are pursuing as a result of the consultation replies to Silberston, this debate and other representations that have been made.

When the record is read, it will be quite clear that a number of issues of importance to the textile industry are being covered in those negotiations but that the negotiations must be looked at in the round. The EC negotiators will, in the end, have to do the best possible deal for European interests at large and for industry and commerce generally. Those negotiations are a matter not for the British Government but for the Commission.

It was good to see my hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Sir J. Farr) here today, and I hope that his health continues to strengthen. It is a sign of his great concern about the issue that he came today to give us the benefit of his views. He said that the final decision on the MFA had to be a firm decision of the House. That is not the legal or constitutional position. Some hon. Members may regret the fact that these decisions are made following EC negotiations; others will welcome it because they wanted such powers to be exercised at European level. Under our treaty obligations and under the other legal arrangements with our Community partners that have developed, the simple fact is that the European Community is a party to the MFA and the European Community handles the GATT negotiations.

Mr. Haynes: The Minister is not being very helpful. We get this sort of talk all the time. It is time it stopped and the British Government did some fighting over there in Brussels. Proposals come to us when they have already been decided in Europe. That is all wrong. We should be deciding our own destiny in this place and it is high time that the Minster said so over there.

Mr. Redwood: Usually the Government are criticised for fighting too hard for British interests, so it is strange to hear the Opposition level the opposite criticism. I assure the hon. Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) that I fight extremely hard for British interests in the Council of Ministers. I look at them in the light of wider European interests, but there is no way in which I will let Britain down when I am handling negotiations because I believe that it is my job, as a member of the British Government, to make the point for Britain.

Mr. Henderson: On the question of how the negotiations have been considered in Europe, may I ask the Minister how the British Government have argued? Have they argued that there should be a further round of MFA, an MFA 5? If the Government have argued for an MFA 5, have they argued that it should be the same as MFA 4, less strong than MFA 4 or tougher than MFA 4?

Mr. Redwood: As I explained, the British Government have said that they seek the best possible series of market-opening measures in GATT. We have been making the necessary representations to Brussels and my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Trade and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will keep in touch with Brussels as the negotiations develop. They have not proceeded that far yet.

Mr. Kirkwood: Surely the GATT textile committee will have to meet initially in five or six months' time—in June 1990. The Uruguay round of GATT will not be completed until the end of the year and the Government will have to strike a position in four or five months. I realise that the Minister cannot give away his bargaining hand but the House is entitled to know what attitude the Government will strike in June or July this year.

Mr. Redwood: I have explained the Government's position on the GATT negotiations and on the negotiations through our European Commission friends. By June, other issues may be on the table but I do not intend to prejudge those because they will, of course, depend on progress being made in the general negotiations on GATT.

Mr. Foulkes: Can the Minister clarify something? I am sorry to interrupt, but this is the most crucial point. Am I right in saying that the answer that the Minister gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson) is that, rather than the strengthening or continuing the MFA, the Government propose to opt for the GATT alternative? That effectively means that they are abandoning the MFA. Is that what the Minister meant?

Mr. Redwood: I have described the way in which the European Commission is approaching the GATT round negotiations. The Government are happy for the Commission to negotiate in good faith in that round to get the best possible deal. The implications of that for the MFA were set out by my hon. Friend the Minister for Industry in the Adjournment debate on 12 December. I have tried to enlarge on that today in the interests of keeping the House informed.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bosworth (Mr. Tredinnick) asked what scope was available for funding and other hon. Members wanted me to clear up what my hon. Friend the Minister for Industry meant when he commented on that in the recent Adjournment debate in response to hon. Members from Leicester.

My hon. Friend the Minister for Industry meant that there are various types of money available for which textile companies may be eligible and in particular research and development money. Research and technology initiative money is available via bodies such as the British Textile Technology Group and the Clothing Technology Centre. Those technology-based bodies can advise people about that funding and the sort of project that would qualify. The Department of Trade and Industry can also offer advice. If companies have projects which they believe might qualify, the Department would be more than happy to make information available and offer guidance on how the system works. My hon. Friend the Minister for Industry recently issued a press release stressing the nature of those schemes from which the textile industry could benefit.

Many hon. Members, including the hon. Member for Oldham, Central and Royton (Mr. Lamond), referred to eastern Europe. Of course, changes in eastern Europe will have a major impact on many elements in the European Economic Community as the economies in those countries develop and they widen their horizons and liberalise their trading patterns. Many eastern European countries are now aware of the dangers of extreme protectionism and they see the way in which their poverty has been underlined or enforced by the absence of open trading with western Europe. They naturally now seek greater trading links with western Europe to try to remedy the obvious defects in their economies created by many years of closed markets.

The European Community and the British Government believe that it is right for us to respond to those changes, particularly where the countries concerned are making good progress in returning to democracy. In many cases countries have specified when they will be holding open elections and they are moving to multi-party systems. We also believe that Commission negotiators should be interested in the question of reciprocity so that market opening should not be one way, as that might be damaging to British and Community interests. There should be give-and-take in those market-opening devices and our businesses should gain access to their economies. We believe that our companies and economies have much to offer the eastern European countries as trading partners, as inward investors and as advisers in many sectors.

That is the basis for the tentative steps taken so far and I described one such step at the beginning of the debate in connection with the USSR. I am sure that Hungary and Poland will be close to the top of the Commission's agenda.

There are other considerations about China, which has become a worry. It is an important textile producer and exporter. The British Government have always argued that we should reflect the fact of increasing Chinese dominance in the textiles trade and the fact that it is heavily dependent on state trading when constructing trading arrangements with that country. That has been the consistent British Government line to the Commission. Once again, those are matters that can be settled primarily by the Commission, in which Britain has an important voice, but not the sole voice, in determining how those matters are achieved.

My hon. Friend the Member for Pudsey (Sir G. Shaw) made a powerful speech in which he gave advice about the time scale of transition, which he said should take five years or a little more. He was particularly worried about dumping. Many hon. Members, words on dumping will be taken on board by the Department. I have already said that the Government do not like dumping and, through the normal procedures in the European Commission, will vigorously pursue any case that hon. Members or companies can bring to our attention. If hon. Members have more evidence or information about dumping, or they know of companies that have evidence or information about dumping, of course I pledge, as the Goverenment always have done, that those cases will be vigorously pursued.

Mrs. Peacock: In my experience, whatever evidence is brought to the Department, by the time the case is proved, jobs are lost. That has happened in my constituency with imports of acrylic yarn mainly from Turkey. By the time the system works, jobs have gone and quotas gone up. We need to change the system to get faster action.

Mr. Redwood: I quite understand the point. It is now firmly on the record that many hon. Members are worried about the time that it takes to deal with anti-dumping cases. I pledge that I and my noble Friend will do anything in our power to make sure that the delays are not in the Department of Trade and Industry. But the procedures themselves are designed at European level. Of course, they must relate to a range of industries, not just the textile industry. For that reason, they are complex and difficult to change. My noble Friend and I will take that point on board.

The hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) began his speech by saying that the industry is in a state of financial haemorrhage. He implied that there had been a financial collapse. There have been problems in the industry in recent months, and they have been well documented in the debate. However, I do not think that the results of the major companies in the industry can in any way be said to represent a financial haemorrhage. I recently looked at the reports and accounts of three of our major textile companies. Courtaulds, for example, had more than £250 million of operating funds flow. Coats Viyella had £172 million of funds generated in the past year in which it has reported. Tootal had £51 million of funds generated. Those three major companies are central to our textile industry—Courtaulds is a major textile producer of some significance—with profitable businesses generating good profits for their shareholders because they have made such good strides in investment and productivity.

Mr. Foulkes: In each case can the Minister work out how much of the profit was from manufacturing overseas rather than in the United Kingdom?

Mr. Redwood: I could work that out if I spent a little while with the reports and accounts, but there are profits from the United Kingdom operations, and the picture in the accounts is of companies that are a great deal stronger than the textile industry was in the mid-1970s. That reflects the fact that they have made major investments, taken care of their staff, opted for training schemes, and completely changed their product ranges. They have spent a lot of time wondering which is the niche market for which they can opt or how they can enhance their markets, how they can brand their products, and how they can use the techniques of modern manufacturing to reduce their costs and boost their productivity and output. I want the House to admit that the great British textile companies have done a good job in adapting to changing conditions. That is manifest in their recent results.

Mr. Kirkwood: Of course there have been successes in my constituency. I refer to Pringles, the Dawson Group and so on. They are coping and are doing very well in the circumstances, but there are many small companies in my constituency. Small companies with 20 or 30 employees are struggling hard and swimming against the tide. When the Minister is doing his research on the results of the big companies, will he extend it to smaller businesses, too?

Mr. Redwood: I am sure that some small companies will be under cash flow pressure. I began my researches with the major companies because they happen to be major employers and, therefore, of major concern to many hon. Members. Of course I am concerned also about small businesses. I understand what the hon. Gentleman says.

I was staggered to hear the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson) say that there had been a dismal performance by the industry. Many hon. Members have explained that the industry is working extremely hard and well at improving and changing its market position. I was glad to hear that Professor Silberston has moved from being "mad" to almost a good thing because the hon. Gentleman now seems to have found some things in Professor Silberston's report with which he can agree. However, I remind the House of the hon. Member's clear statement on 9 December 1988, with which I entirely agree. He said:

"I must make it clear that the Opposition recognise that for a trading nation such as the United Kingdom it is important that we encourage the maximising of free trade."—[Official Report, 9 December 1988; Vol. 143, c. 567.]

[Mr. Redwood]

He went on to say that trade should be fair. I entirely agree with his sentiments. Indeed, that is the central objective of the EC negotiating position in GATT and it is an objective that the British Government entirely endorse.

I got a little lost when the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North said in December 1988 that he wanted both a lower currency and no currency fluctuations. However, I was pleased to hear that he welcomes the level now. Perhaps we can agree that the current level gives people good export opportunities. The battle against inflation is a central task for the Government.

The hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) expressed concern about the Turkish sock problem. I have already explained that that issue is being handled by my noble Friend who will continue to take whatever action is possible to deal with that difficulty.

My hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Lee) made a good, penetrating speech in which he considered the way in which the negotiations could be progressed. Many of the points that he made very much covered the issues that the EC Commission is bringing to the negotiations. My hon. Friend talked about the need for transitional arrangements and the need to strengthen the GATT rules. Most importantly, he referred to the need for reciprocal market-opening. That is what this is all about. The whole point of GATT is that all countries should take action to remove barriers and blocks to trade because that is the way to achieve a more prosperous international community and that is how good companies can have a chance to export to other countries and therefore create employment and opportunity. That is exactly what the Government will be arguing for.

The hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer) was concerned about recent changes in unemployment benefit which affect those who might be working short-time. I remind the hon. Gentleman and the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon), who also made this point, that other benefits are in place for which such people may be eligible. People on low incomes may qualify for income support or for family credit, which was designed deliberately to help people on low incomes with family responsibilities and to encourage people into work. That is the Government's aim.

The hon. Member for Bradford, South thought that there was no assurance that I would support the textile industry. I thought that a bit harsh, since I had already covered the way in which the Government have offered a great deal of help to the industry in past years and still intend to do so. The Government have represented the industry's case in the past over issues such as dumping and unfair trading practices. I note that along with several other hon. Members, the hon. Member for Bradford, South is concerned about the possibility of our losing national quotas and about the transition to a single EC-wide quota. The Government will take that point into account when making decisions on such matters.

My hon. Friend the Member for Calder Valley (Mr. Thompson) was worried about hidden French subsidies that might make competition unfair between ourselves and some French companies. Again, if there are any hidden subsidies that can be exposed—as long as they are not so hidden that we cannot find them—they are a suitable case for treatment under the Commission's attack on state aids. It is the policy of Her Majesty's Government to ensure that the Commission is given every help in pursuing unfair state aids wherever they may be in the European Community, with a view to levelling the playing field for competitors between one country and another.

The Government are willing to help through the British Overseas Trade Board and through the organisation of trade fairs. If individual companies have problems or questions about that, the DTI would be more than happy to supply the necessary information about the type of assistance that is available for companies that are starting up in a new country and wish to have some guidance and support in that task.

The hon. Member for Ashfield wanted to start kicking me all round the House and all around the pitch—[HON. MEMBERS: "Hear, hear."] He made a lively speech. I was glad that my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, East (Mr. Knowles) did not think that he would join the hon. Gentleman, so I shall not be quite as sore as I would have been if I had been kicked from both sides at the same time. That might have caused me some anatomical difficulty. I repeat that the Government are not going in the wrong direction. We are going in the direction of more open trade across the board. That must be good news for jobs and customers.

It is a pity to talk in this high-quality debate about the industry——

It being half-past Two o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment of the House lapsed, without Question put.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Ordered,

That, at the sitting on Wednesday 17th January, the Motion in the name of the Prime Minister for the Adjournment of the House shall lapse at Seven o'clock unless it has been previously disposed of.—[Mr. Nicholas Baker.]

Ordered,

That, at the sitting on Thursday 18th January, notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1)(b) of Standing Order No. 14 (Exempted business), Mr. Speaker shall put any Questions necessary to dispose of proceedings on the Motions in the name of Mr. Secretary Patten relating to Local Government Finance not later than Ten o'clock. —[Mr. Nicholas Baker.]

Sports Facilities (London)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Nicholas Baker.]

2.30 pm

Miss Kate Hoey (Vauxhall): I am grateful for this opportunity to bring to the attention of the Minister for Sport serious worries about the future of sport and recreation throughout the country, but particularly in London.

As we start a new year and a new decade, it seems appropriate to have this Adjournment debate. It has been recognised for some time that, in spite of being a city of apparent wealth, London has real problems that are spread through much of the inner city. Government statistics show that 13 of the 20 most deprived local areas in the country are in London.

London has special needs that can be tackled only by special measures. What is true of London in general is more particularly true of London's sport. It has had buoyant days. We are all proud of the sports men and women who have achieved so much on the international sporting scene. We are all proud of the medals that they have won, but today anyone who participates in sporting and recreational pursuits at whatever level of excellence, who is committed to safeguarding such opportunities for future generations of community use, has genuine cause to feel that all this is threatened.

Ever-increasing commercial exploitation of land, insensitive planning and lack of awareness are contributing to the growing threat to our outdoor recreational space. Too many playgrounds and playing fields are deteriorating or disappearing altogether.

Recently, the Central Council of Physical Recreation brought to public attention some 800 public sites nationally that it targeted as at risk. It estimated that the recent total loss of recreational land exceeds 100,000 acres. The Minister may say, as he has said on many other occasions, that those figures are open to question, that some local studies have suggested that, in a number of areas, there have been gains in provision and that they outweigh the losses, but is that not precisely one of the fundamental weaknesses of the present system?

We do not know the quantity of the national stock of educational playing fields in the public or private sector. We do not know the regional variations in provision per head of population of urban recreational space. We do not know the percentage of urban land that has been lost to development. We do not know the number of planning applications for development of recreational or open space that have been approved by planning authorities or at appeal.

A recent survey by the National Playing Fields Association showed that, at local authority level, the position is rather similar. Only half of our local authorities knew the number of sports pitches that were being used for dual use. Less than a quarter of our local authorities knew the total recreational landholdings within their boundaries. Nevertheless, time and again, we hear the words, "Surplus to requirements." That is the catchphrase used to cover every sale or potential sale.

How can anything be surplus to requirements when we do not know either the total amount of recreational open space or its quality? Whose surplus? Whose requirement? Who decides the surplus and who decides the requirement? How can we plan for the future if we do not have the facts about today? That is why I am calling on the Minister for Sport to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to start immediately the process that enables every piece of recreational playing space to be registered. There should be a statutory responsibility on all planning authorities to maintain a register of recreational playing space within their jurisdiction.

Time after time in the House, when the Minister is questioned on this subject, his response to practically every question has been to say that the information is not held centrally. It should be. Just before Christmas the hon. Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway), who is present today and whom I am allowing to contribute to the debate, received a response saying that the Minister had asked the National Playing Fields Association, the Central Council of Physical Recreation and the Sports Council to combine to consider the matter and to determine whether it is desirable to compile a register of playing fields. The Minister already knows that those organisations want a register to be compiled. Admittedly it was a different Minister who answered the question put by the hon. Member for Ealing, North and that is one of the problems in this place; different Ministers answer questions about different things all the time.

The NFPA document, "The State of Play", which was published recently, specifically called for a register. The CCPR has also called for a register. There is no need for the working group to advise the Minister; the organisations have already told him that they want a register. The working party is looking not at playing fields in general, but at sports pitches. It will count pitches rather than the overall number of playing fields and recreational spaces. I hope that the Minister can tell me why, as Minister for Sport, he cannot start that process and draw up a register.

School sport is already in crisis. The shortage of qualified physical education teachers means that many of our children are not enjoying even a basic minimum of physical activity. Physical education will prepare each child for satisfactory participation in sport through the development of the necessary skills. The extra duties imposed on teachers preparing for the national curriculum, the savings that have had to be made in transport costs and the way in which the national curriculum seems to be downgrading PE are worrying factors.

Physical education must be seen to be as at least as important as any other subject presently categorised as a core subject in the national curriculum. In reality, however, we shall not achieve that end unless at least 10 per cent. of time is allocated for PE for all five to 16-year-olds. We must get that base input right as it is at that base that we ensure that young people also learn the social skills inherent in participation in sport. Social awareness is developed through PE and team competition teaches the importance of co-operation and the meaning of interdependence.

As well as the problems that I have outlined, we face falling school rolls in London. That has made it much easier for education authorities of all political complexions to declare certain playing fields as—that same old phrase —"surplus to requirements".

At the moment education authorities are not required to take account of the increase in the number of children forecast by the end of the century, when there will be more than 1 million more children. Because the Department of Education and Science's regulation 909 states "minimum" requirements, many authorities are interpreting the regulation as a maximum over which all else is considered surplus.

The other major concern is the local management of schools. That management will rightly mean that the governing bodies are encouraged to serve the community by allowing access to school facilities. I have spoken out many times about the way in which many facilities, in public and private use, lie empty at the weekends. With the exception of some areas, we have been unable to bring together education and leisure facilities so that dual use becomes a right. However, under local management, schools would have to seek a financial return on the use of those facilities. The Minister for Sport must intervene to ensure that that does not prevent and restrict use. Similarly, where the Sports Council has already put money into school facilities for community use, there must be safeguards to ensure that those facilities continue to be available to the community.

Within London, the abolition of the Inner London education authority and the arrangements for dealing with its playing fields are adding to the insecurity. The Minister of State, Department of Education and Science, in a letter to the Greater London Playing Fields Association said:

"Under the Education Reform Act the Secretary of State may transfer ILEA property to an Inner London council only where, in his opinion, it needs to be transferred for the purpose of enabling the council properly to perform its ILEA functions. These functions include providing for school and college sport, but do not of course include the provision for general recreational facilities. Any property that the Secretary of State does not transfer to an inner London borough or existing LEA must, under the provisions of the Act, be transferred to the London Residuary Body for disposal."

Up to today, the Department of Education and Science had still not published the final property transfer order. Therefore, nothing definite is known and insecurity continues. The draft order attaches covenants to those ILEA playing fields for which successive boroughs have identified an educational use, requiring the maintaining authority to consult other boroughs before taking the property out of use. In those circumstances, if another borough wishes to maintain the property for educational use, it is to be transferred to that borough.

The convenant suggestion is a nonsense; it is not nearly foolproof enough. The sites will be just as much at risk because the possibility of raising funds for the boroughs will not be the issue. It may well be the severe decrease in income due to the community charge and the uniform business rate that will ensure that the boroughs do not have the necessary resources to spend on keeping sites in active use. That is misleading.

The covenant will not provide any safeguard unless it states that the land must be kept for recreational use. Put another way, there may be severe pressures on some of the inner London boroughs—and the outer London boroughs—to dispose of the land not because they hope to make financial gain, but because they cannot afford to keep it. Everything that we have read so far seems to show that the effect of the poll tax and the uniform business rate will be to take money out of the inner London boroughs.

Why cannot we do other than transfer for educational use? Although there is no power to allow for special transfers of land, it is not too late for the Minister to ask for that power, and that is what he should be doing. More crucially, he should be calling on the Secretary of State for the Environment to place an immediate stop notice on the sale of all sports fields and recreational land in London until such time as the register is complete and we can consider the overall position.

With such powers, it might be possible to vest the land either in the National Playing Fields Association or in one of its affiliated associations. The management would be either through the association or it would be farmed out to the local authority or voluntary organisations. The security would be having the land vested in a charitable organisation for use as a recreational space for ever more.

Instead, what we have ended up with is a response from the Department of Education and Science, which is too blinkered to look further than narrow educational requirements, with a national curriculum so crowded with mandatory subjects that physical education will not get a look in; and the Department of the Environment's view that, in planning matters, the presumption is still in favour of the developer.

We all know that there is still a crisis, the scale of which is unquantifiable. The Central Council of Physical Recreation, the National Playing Fields Association and the London region of the Sports Council have all said that. We feel passionately about the importance of sport and recreation to society, of the capacity of sport to teach us self-discipline and of the opportunity that it gives many youngsters to achieve, to participate and to succeed in competition as an individual or in a team. Those at the grass roots who do so much of the voluntary coaching should not have to spend increasing amounts of time worrying about whether they can continue to use a facility or campaigning to stop a development. That is the challenge that sport provides at all ages and levels.

There are incidents of rugby clubs in Mitcham being moved twice in one year and still being insecure about where they will be going next. I know that the Minister has occasionally intervened. I am pleased that he did so in the case of the Port of London Authority playing fields in Redbridge—a high-quality facility—and I thank the Evening Standard for its campaign urging the local authority to consult other organisations interested in recreation and sport. However, urging is not enough. We have seen that. More needs to be done and more statutory support must be given. Where is the planning policy guidance note which was promised but which so far has not been delivered?

At the root of the debate is the fact that sport in this country is still undervalued. Either the Government should accept its case for adequate funding on the grounds of its contribution to education, health, social welfare and the economy or the Government should provide a tax and legal environment that encourages voluntary effort and facilitates fund raising for sport.

The paltry increase in the grant to the Sports Council of less than inflation compares with the much larger increase given to the Arts Council. In real terms that constitutes a direct cut in school sports funding. As a recent example, why did not the Minister for Sport protest to the Department of Education and Science that the Inner London federation of school sports was refused a paltry amount of money? Why is there no Question Time on sport in the House? We have questions on the arts, so why not on sport?

We need the Minister for Sport to stand up for sport. He should not be an apologist for the rest of his Department and the Secretary of State. We need a Minister who will take the lead in trying to prevent the loss of our playing fields and sports facilities. I hope that he will respond to the positive suggestions that have been made, to ensure that the future heritage of young people and the sporting life of this country remain secure.

2.47 pm

Mr. Harry Greenway (Ealing, North): rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Does the hon. Gentleman have the consent of both the hon. Lady and the Minister?

Mr. Greenway: Yes.

I am grateful to the hon. Member for Vauxhall (Miss Hoey) and the Minister for allowing me to participate in this crucial debate. I congratulate the hon. Lady on securing it and on her excellent speech. She said, rightly, that the Central Council of Physical Recreation, the National Playing Fields Association and the Sports Council have called for a strengthening of the position concerning playing fields in London. That means opposing present moves by statutory organisations, including local councils, to take away playing fields from communities and schools. Playing fields also make an environmental contribution to areas in which there are often excess amounts of buildings.

The demise of PE and games in London schools in recent years has been tragic and must be reversed. It is partly due to misguided educational policies and also because the facilities have been progressively lost, and that must be reversed. However, I strongly support the present links which have grown, and are growing daily, between schools, clubs and the youth service. I hope that there can be dual use not only of club facilities by school pupils, youths and others, but of manpower—expert teachers and coaches—available to teach the sports and games. Such dual use could be most valuable.

I shall refer to a specific case in my constituency with which I know the hon. Lady associates herself. I do not want the Warren Farm sports complex to be placed under the control of the London borough of Ealing because that borough will not give an assurance that if it takes on the sports complex—which I have known for 30 years to be a valuable and excellent facility—it will abandon plans to build on the 17 acres of the Cayton road playing fields in my constituency which belong to Ealing Green high school. Without that assurance I and the community know that if it possibly can Ealing council will go ahead with a building project in conjunction with the Notting Hill Housing Trust to build on 10 or 11 acres of those 17 acres of playing fields. The sleight of hand is that the remaining six or seven acres will be released for community use.

I and the community that I represent want to maintain those 17 acres of playing fields at Cayton road for school and community use. We need all 17 acres to serve a heavily built-up area. No sleight of hand by Ealing council or any other body must be allowed to take away those facilities from the school or the community. That would be wicked and tragic.

Generally speaking, as the hon. Lady said, is it not time that the Department of the Environment and my hon. Friend in particular gave some planning policy guidance on sport and recreation? We really need guidance stating that from now on not another inch of playing field shall be released for building or any use other than sport. We need all we have and more.

2.50 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. Colin Moynihan): I congratulate the hon. Member for Vauxhall (Miss Hoey) on securing the debate and on presenting her case so eloquently. I also thank my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway). In the short time available I shall attempt to respond to a number of points and possiby add a different dimension to the perspective of London sport that the hon. Lady has presented to the House this afternoon. She has painted rather a gloomy picture which takes scant regard of the excellent initiatives that have been and are being developed by many London boroughs and by the numerous voluntary organisations based in the area.

The hon. Lady also underestimated the importance of the role of the London Regional Council for Sport and Recreation. The council is the strategic planning body for sport and recreation in the region and has great influence among those involved in this area. I take this opportunity to pay tribute to the council for its achievements and in particular I congratulate it on its work in bringing together the private sector and more customary partners in the public sector to develop facilities in the capital.

Local authorities have traditionally been the main providers of sport and recreational facilities, and that is certainly true in London. CIPFA estimates show that over the past decade the net expenditure on sport and recreation by the London boroughs has been in excess of £1 billion. Part of that sum has been used to maintain existing facilities, but a considerable amount has been used to provide new ones. The decade has seen the construction of nine new swimming pools, taking the total to 118. Six more are currently under construction. There are 144 sports halls compared with a little over 50 10 years ago, and there are 40 synthetic pitches compared with 11 in 1981.

The residents of London also benefit from many of the sports facilities owned by the local education authorities which, over the past five or six years have been opened up for dual use by schools and local communities. I echo the importance that my hon. Friend attached to the need to develop the concept of dual use. A particularly good example of which my hon. Friend will know is in the London borough of Enfield where there are seven dual-use school sports halls. The regional council is doing much to encourage similar schemes in other boroughs, for example, Newham. The Government will continue to work for more facilities in schools to be made available to the wider community and will soon be issuing a dual-use guidance booklet on the subject.

Then there are the specialist facilities, a number of which have been developed since 1980. Examples are the indoor athletics training facilities at Wood Green and Crystal Palace, the football facility at Douglas Eyre playing field in Walthamstow and the ice rinks at Lea Valley and Romford.

Some of the most exciting sport and recreation facilities developed in conjunction with the private sector are in the Docklands. The Docklands arena became fully operational during 1989. Costing £30 million it is

[Mr. Colin Moynihan]

London's first major, post-war, purpose-built arena capable of seating 13,000 people. It will provide recreation opportunities for the local community as well as people coming from further afield. The private sector made a significant contribution to the development of the new water sports centre on the Isle of Dogs which became operational last spring. The centre offers a variety of water sports including sailing, canoeing, windsurfing and angling for use by the local community and by elite competitors.

In addition to those more ambitious projects many smaller projects are every bit as worth while. As the hon. Lady is aware, the Sports Council allocates annual grant aid to the regions. In the last financial year the London region received some £2·5 million from the council. This was used as pump-priming money and more than 150 projects received financial support. Eight capital grants, totalling £550,000, were given towards the construction of new facilities with a total value of £3 million. Some 62 grants, worth £300,000 in all, were given to voluntary organisations towards projects worth just under £3 million. Those included projects as varied as improvements to the Heathrow gymnastic club; the installation of floodlighting at the multi-games area at the Marvels Lane boys' club in Lewisham, the purchase of equipment for a group of people with disabilities at the Otter canoe club in Wandsworth and the conversion of churches in Richmond, Harrow and Balham for community use.

All 150 projects which received aid from the Sports Council during the period in question were aimed at making a wider range of facilities available to a wider range of people. That could mean constructing new facilities, but could just as well mean refurbishing existing ones to ensure that the best possible use is made of them.

In its strategy document "A Capital Project", published in 1987, the London Regional Council for Sport and Recreation estimated that 40 per cent. of Londoners participated in outdoor sports and 22 per cent. in indoor sports. Those are among the highest participation rates in the country, but clearly they could be even higher. The London council has done a great deal of good work in this area, particularly with the special programmes that it has developed to encourage participation among target groups such as women, young people, people with disabilities, and ethnic minorities. There are now some 20 sports-specific development officers working in the region and a similar number of local authority development officers. Much good similar work is being carried out by the Central Council for Physical Recreation.

I deal now with the additional points made by the hon. Member for Vauxhall and by my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North who made particular reference to the Warren Farm playing fields in Ealing. I understand that ILEA submitted a formal application yesterday seeking the agreement of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to dispose of the playing fields at less than best price. I am sure that my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North would commend that to the House. That is the present position, and I give my hon. Friend the undertaking that Ministers will carefully consider that request and will have noted the important points that my hon. Friend has brought to the attention of the House. My hon. Friend will accept that as I hold a quasi-judicial planning position in my Department, I have difficulty in going further today. However, I have noted carefully all that he said and undertake to see that it receives careful consideration.

Mr. Harry Greenway: The danger about Ealing council taking over Warren Farm is that as it has built on Cayton road playing fields, it will build on Warren Farm playing fields. It cannot be trusted.

Mr. Moynihan: My hon. Friend's point has been noted by the House. He will accept that in the House I must take a neutral position on the issue, but it is important that it has been placed on the record.

The hon. Lady asked about a register of recreational land. I was not the one who said that the group to which she referred should consider setting up a register. The contrary is the case, because a long time ago I urged the setting up of a register and when I was a Back-Bencher I actively supported that principle. I did that because it is quite clear that, despite the hard work carried out by many interested groups to draw up a register, inevitably it requires more than the input of just one body.

It is far better that the Sports Council, the CCPR and the NPFA should get together and work together in moving swiftly to establish a comprehensive register. That would be in the interests of establishing the important guidelines that hon. Members mentioned. For that reason, as long ago as 14 April 1989 I initiated an arrangement to ensure that the Sports Council and the regional councils monitored and developed an assessment of the national situation. I share with my hon. Friend the belief that there should be a move in that direction.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at one minute to Three o'clock.

Monday 18 December 1989

PRIME MINISTER

Public Libraries

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received on public libraries.

The Prime Minister: None.

Official Travel (Rail)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister when she last travelled on official business on a public transport train in (a) London and (b) Singapore.

The Prime Minister: I regret that for reasons of practicality and security it is difficult for me to travel by rail on official business. I do so when a suitable opportunity arises. I last travelled by train from King's Cross, London to an official function on 31 August 1989. I last made a journey on the mass rapid transport system in Singapore on 31 July 1988.

CIVIL SERVICE

Disabled People

107. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what percentage of staff employed within the Civil Service on 1 November were then registered as disabled persons.

Mr. Luce: The latest figure available is 1·3 per cent.

TRANSPORT

A1 (Roadworks)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether, pursuant to his reply of Monday 4 December, Official Report, column 93, to the hon. Member for Stockton, South, he will make a statement on the extensive roadworks being undertaken on the A1 in Yorkshire.

Mr. Atkins: The roadworks now being carried out on the A1 in Yorkshire are essential maintenance works to protect the structural integrity of the road and at the same time keep it in a safe condition. The present scheme at Scotch Corner is for major resurfacing, whereas the other schemes in progress are short-term minor works. In accordance with the Department's policy, the works are phased and spaced out as much as possible to keep traffic disruption to a minimum.

Travel Concessions

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to make an order under section 93(7)(f) of the Transport Act 1985 to enable men between the ages of 60 and 64 years to receive the same travel concessions as are currently available to women.

Mr. Portillo: I have no plans to change the present arrangements which link eligibility for travel concession for the elderly to state pensionable age.

Air Services

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what restrictions he sets down on the number of hours that crews of British airlines may fly; and what information he has on the restrictions that apply to foreign registered and operated air services.

Mr. McLoughlin: It is the Civil Aviation Authority that is responsible for the regulation of the working hours of crews of British airlines, in accordance with the Air Navigation Order 1989. The order requires that no member of the flight crew may fly for more than 100 hours in any consecutive 28-day periods or more than 900 hours during the period of 12 months expiring at the end of the previous month.

Furthermore, the order requires operators to establish a scheme for the regulation of crew duty times and the scheme must be approved by the Civil Aviation Authority. The Civil Aviation Authority provides guidelines, CAP 371, to assist operators to develop acceptable schemes. The guidelines cover such matters as rest periods, standby duty, days off, extended range operations by two pilots, delayed reporting times, acclimatisation to local time, the records that must be kept and the reports that must be made.

Guidelines are also issued by the International Civil Aviation Organisation. I understand that other states' regulations are in general comparable with the Civil Aviation Authority's requirements.

A40, Acton

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why the work of cutting down shrubs on the central reservation of the A40 Western avenue at Acton was scheduled for the current time of year; what assessment he has made of the effect of the work on the journey time from Uxbridge to London; and if he will give intructions for this work to be postponed until the new year.

Mr. Atkins: This work is part of a rolling programme to provide central reservation safety fencing and guard railing on trunk roads. The work along the A40 Western avenue is being co-ordinated by the Department's agent, the London borough of Ealing, and is being carried out in the interests of safety. Some disruption is inevitable, but efforts will continue to be made to minimise any inconvenience to the public.

Work will be suspended over the Christmas and new year holiday and should then be completed in mid-January.

A40, Ealing

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how long the present work on the central reservation of the A40 in the London borough of Ealing has taken; what it is costing; when it is expected to end; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: These works are part of a rolling programme to provide central reserve safety fencing and pedestrian guard railing on the A40 Western avenue in the London borough of Ealing.

The current phase of these works began in mid-September and is expected to be completed by mid-January 1990. The total cost of these works is approximately £960,000.

Further works will be required in the coming months. I will write to my hon. Friend when the contractual arrangements have been finalised.

Near-Miss, London-Belfast Route

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will ask the accident investigation branch to investigate the near-miss involving a civilian aircraft travelling from London to Belfast on the evening of 11 November and then publish the results of the inquiry.

Mr. McLoughlin: No near-miss, or airmiss, was reported for the date and time referred to. However, a mandatory occurrence report was filed with the Civil Aviation Authority by the captain of a British Midland aircraft en route from London to Belfast.

It is for the chief inspector of air accidents to determine whether an investigation into an incident or accident shall be carried out. I understand that the chief inspector has found no reason for instituting an investigation in this case. It is thought possible that there may be a meteorological explanation to the phenomenon observed.

Driving Licences

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many motorists have had their licences withdrawn as a result of medical advice given to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre regarding lack of fitness to drive a motor vehicle; and if he will make a statement on the procedure for advising the licensing authorities on such matters.

Mr. Atkins: The figures available are given in the table:

Year
1985-86	8,216
1986-87	9,318
1988-89	10,891

Advice about the obligation to notify the onset or worsening of medical conditions which might affect ability to drive safely is printed on all driving licences. Further information is available in the leaflet "What you need to know about driver licensing", Form D100, which is available from most Post Offices.

I will write to my hon. Friend to give fuller details about the statutory powers available to the Secretary of State in this area of driver licensing and how the driver licensing centre carries out its medical investigation of drivers.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many motorists over the age of 75 years hold current driving licences; and what proportion of these has been declared medically fit to operate a moter vehicle.

Mr. Atkins: No details are available of the number of drivers over the age of 75 years.

There are 1,656,818 current licence holders over the age of 70, all of whom have been considered to be medically fit to hold a driving licence; 117,586 of these drivers are recorded as having a medical condition. All drivers are obliged by law to notify DVLC of the onset or worsening of medical condition which could affect their ability to drive safely.

American Airlines

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what attempts are being made by the Government to persuade American airlines to adopt a more flexible attitude towards new routes and services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The United Kingdom pressed the US Government during talks held between 29 November and 1 December to join the United Kingdom in addressing the broad question of liberalising the air services arrangements between our two countries. We also suggested an exchange of opportunities to meet the shorter-term ambitions of the airlines of both sides. Arrangements are in hand to resume these talks shortly.

Foulridge Bypass

Mr. Lee: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest assessment of the level of overcrowding in the Foulridge bypass; if he will bring about an early start to the construction of the Foulridge bypass; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: These are matters of Lancashire county council as the highway authority for the A56 north of Burnley. I understand that the council hopes to start construction of a Colne-Foulridge bypass in late 1991. I shall write to my hon. Friend.

London Assessment Studies

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what budget he has set aside for information to the public on the London assessment studies after publication of the next stage of the London assessment studies.

Mr. Atkins: The cost of providing information is included in the overall budget for the studies.

Free copies of the reports have been provided to local authorities throughout the study areas with a request that they should be put on display to the public in main libraries and suitable locations. They will also be sent to representative organisations in the study areas. Summaries of the consultants' work and leaflets giving the Department's initial views and request for comments are also available at those locations, or free of charge direct from the consultants. A short summary in Bengali of the options for consultations in east London will be available from Ove Arup.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many residential properties his Department has acquired along the line of the east London river crossing; how many have been offered to housing authorities; how many have been refused; and how many are currently unoccupied.

Mr. Atkins: The Department owns 111 residential properties along the line of the east London river crossing; 54 are let to the London borough of Greenwich and three to the London borough of Bexley; 35 are let to various housing associations; 13 are let directly to individual tenants; and six are currently unoccupied.

There is no readily available record of refusals.

Disabled People

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to introduce a national corporate orange badge scheme to enable essential medical staff to park to visit disabled people in city centre areas.

Mr. Atkins: Arrangements already exist whereby police and traffic wardens exercise discretion in respect of parking controls where doctors or nursing staff on urgent visits display the authorised British Medical Association badge. We are not aware of any reasons to extend these arrangements.

By contrast, the orange badge scheme conveys specific parking concessions to enable severely disabled people themselves to get close to their destinations.

M3

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has had negotiations with the main contractor on the Compton to Bassett section of the M3 to widen all bridges and gantries to enable his Department to construct a fourth lane at some time in the future; and if he will make a statement as to his policy for a fourth dual lane on the M3 at Winchester.

Mr. Atkins: The section of the Compton to Bassett section of the M3 motorway north of Leigh road, Eastleigh, is being constructed with dual three-lane carriageways. However, as a prudent measure my Department has negotiated with the contractor a small modification in the design of one bridge to allow for any possible future widening that may be required.

As my hon. Friend is aware, proposals for the remaining section of the proposed M3 motorway round Winchester were considered at the 1985 public inquiry and the re-opened inquiry in 1987-88. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Transport are considering the reports of the independent inspectors who conducted the inquiries and they will announce their joint decisions as soon as possible. I am sure my hon. Friend will understand that it would not be appropriate for me to comment further until that decision is announced.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make an early statement concerning resurfacing work on the Severn bridge and associated problems and the consequent hold-ups on the M4 motorway.

Mr. Atkins: From Tuesday 12 December eastbound traffic on Severn bridge was restricted to a single lane in the interests of road safety due to unexpected difficulties with skid resistance on the new road surface. This caused extensive delays. Two-lane working was restored on Friday 15 December. The underlying cause of the problem is being investigated.

SCOOT Programme

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many countries have bought the SCOOT programme for traffic signals developed by his Department.

Mr. Atkins: Six.

Jubilee Line

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much of the cost of constructing the Jubilee line extension will be paid for by (a) developers, (b) fare payers, and (c) the Treasury.

Mr. Portillo: In my right hon. Friend's written answer of 16 November to the hon. Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) Official Report column 398, he said:

"The Jubilee extension will cost about £1 billion in today's prices to which developers will over time be making a cash contribution of over £400 million."

We do not yet know the full total of developer contribution as negotiations with some are still continuing. London Regional Transport's present fare revenue is not earmarked to particular projects; and the fare revenue that will be generated by the Jubilee line extension itself will depend upon decisions on fare structures and levels that will not be determined by London Regional Transport until much nearer the opening of the line. In the meantime the Government will meet that proportion of the costs of the line not covered by developer contributions.

Panamanian Registered Ships

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what calculation he has made of the likely impact on British owned Panamanian registered ships which will arise when the United States Administration bans Panamanian flag carriers from United States ports;

(2) what information he has on British owned Panamanian registered ships re-flagging as a result of the impending ban on Panamanian flag carriers from United States ports;

(3) what representations he has received from British shipowners following the decision of the United States Administration to ban Panamanian registered ships from United States ports.

Mr. McLoughlin: The General Council of British Shipping has objected to the ban on principle. It has told us of one United Kingdom shipowner who may re-register a Panamanian flagged vessel that operates in the United States trades.

Traffic Pollution

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has of the likely atmospheric pollution caused by the increase in traffic as forecast by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My Department's traffic forecasts are of demand up to 2025. But it is not possible to foresee the extent to which it will be possible or desirable to meet forecast levels of demand for such a long period ahead. Another cause of uncertainty is that the total level of vehicle emissions will depend upon the progress of current initiatives to reduce emissions by individual vehicles.

Port of London Authority

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the rank and function of Mr. P. Graham Hewett within his Department; if he will indicate on how many occasions Mr. Hewett had meetings with (a) officials of the Port of London Authority and (b) the authority itself in the period 1 January to 31 July; and if he will indicate the purpose of such meetings and the subject matters discussed.

Mr. McLoughlin: Mr. Hewett is an assistant secretary currently employed in the European and general division of the Department. Between January and November this year he was seconded to the Port of London Authority at its request in connection with the financial reconstruction of the authority. The terms of his secondment and his work there were entirely for the PLA; Mr. Hewett, during his endorsement, did not report to my Department.

Congestion, London

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he is taking to reduce congestion in London; and when he expects to see the first results.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made to the House on 14 December (Official Report, columns 1184-86) by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

Coastguard Service

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply of 12 December, Official Report, column 538, what was the cause of the technical fault on the Swansea coastguard line, timed at 15.25; how it was detected; and how it was made good before the 999 call to Swansea timed at 15.35 on 16 August.

Mr. McLoughlin: This information can be obtained only from British Telecom.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply of 27 November, Official Report, column 81-82, what was the origin of the VHF radio call timed at 15.22.

Mr. McLoughlin: The radio call, from Milford Haven coastguard to Swansea coastguard, passed information received as a result of a re-routed 999 call, concerning an incident at Ilfracombe. The logged time of 15.25 at Milford Haven reflects completion of both the telephone call and the relaying of the information to Swansea, while the logged time of 15·22 at Swansea reflects the initial radio call from Milford Haven indicating distress information.

Roads (Funding)

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much local authority expenditure he intends to accept for transport supplementary grant in 1990-91; what supplementary credit approvals and what level of annual capital guidelines he will be issuing for local roads expenditure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: I have decided to accept £466 million of local authority highway expenditure for transport supplementary grant in 1990-91. Grant will be paid on this expenditure at a flate rate of 50 per cent. The total of £233 million TSG is nearly 15 per cent. higher than for 1989-90.

I have also decided to issue supplementary credit approvals of £50 million and total annual capital guidelines of £352 million, bringing coverage for local roads and parking for 1990-91 to £635 million. The capital allocation for 1989-90 is £513 million.

Seventy new major (over £1 million) schemes will be supported through TSG for the first time. Among these are the Birmingham Heartlands spine road; a major new link road from the M57 to the A562 in Merseyside; the Littlehampton bypass; further stages of both the Avon ring road and the Leeds inner ring road; as well as the Thornaby bypass and the Beddington-Mitcham relief road other important improvements in both urban and rural areas. Twenty-two of these schemes will directly assist inner cities.

Some 270 other major schemes will continue to receive TSG support, including 90 in inner-city areas. Most of these are already under construction or are due to start in the current financial year.

Local authorities have reported completion of 59 TSG-supported schemes costing £245 million in 1988-89 and a start of works on 65 such schemes costing £401 million. During 1989-90, they plan to complete a further 62 schemes costing £290 million and start 76 costing £538 million.

In deciding the distribution of transport supplementary grant for 1990-91, I have considered carefully the transport policies and programme document submitted by each local highway authority, and have looked at the extent to which authorities' programmes relate to roads of more than local importance. Many local authority roads —such as major urban roads and roads on the primary route network—carry significant amounts of through traffic, and thus complement the trunk road network. Improvements to such roads are important locally because they save lives, reduce congestion and relieve communities from the effects of through traffic. They are also of national benefit by aiding the efficient flow of goods, people and services. TSG reflects the national taxpayer's interest in helping local authorities to improve these roads.

I have also given special priority this year to schemes which will assist in the regeneration of our inner cities. New and improved roads are often crucial in unlocking inner-city potential, either by removing through traffic from inner-city streets, thereby relieving congestion, increasing safety and improving the environment, or by providing high-quality access to the motorway network for inner-city industry and commerce.

Many smaller schemes on heavily trafficked roads produce very significant accident savings and other benefits. My right hon. Friend has therefore also taken into account £38 million of expenditure on minor (under £1 million) schemes for grant in 1990-91.

Annual capital guidelines, together with supplementary credit approvals, will provide local highway authorities with the necessary resources to meet the balance of their

TSG-accepted expenditure and to undertake a further wide range of improvements and expenditure to which TSG support does not extend.

The amount of expenditure accepted for TSG, the amount of grant, the annual capital guideline, and the supplementary credit approvals which the Government intend to issue for highway expenditure for each local highway authority are set out in the table. Councils are being informed individually today of their own figures.

Western Environmental Improvement Route

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what response he received to the public consultation on the western environmental improvement route which took place in the spring.

Mr. Atkins: Some 7,000 responses in one form or another were received to the consultation exercise. These, together with any further comments made in the context of the London assessment studies, will be taken fully into account in reaching a decision on the future of the Western environmental improvement route.

Speed Limits

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 4 December, Official Report, column 84, how many representations he has received in favour of a speed limit (a) higher and (b) lower than 70 miles an hour; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 15 December 1989]: This year I have received 95 letters concerning the 70 mph maximum speed limit. Of these 13 were in favour of a higher limit; 29 asked for a lower limit and 53 for the rigorous enforcement of the existing limit.

The maximum speed limit on motorways was fully reviewed in 1984 and 1985. I am satisfied that the existing limit allows for safe and sensible maximum speeds in normal driving conditions and gives a correct balance between the need for fast, convenient travel and safety.

Car Pollution

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has conducted a comparative study of the pollutant gases and particulate matter released from (a) cars run on leaded petrol, (b) cars run on unleaded petrol, (c) cars fitted with catalytic converters run on unleaded patrol and (d) diesel engined cars, each in terms of weight carbon monoxide, carbon dioxide, nitrous oxide and sulphur dioxide per mile.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 15 December 1989]: The Department has not conducted a comparative study of the type suggested, but the following points may be of assistance. There should be no difference in emissions, other than of lead, between non-catalyst vehicles running on leaded or unleaded petrol. Sulphur emissions are directly related to the sulphur content of fuel, which is regulated in the United Kingdom to 0·3 per cent. by weight for diesel and 0·2 per cent. by weight for petrol. Particulate emissions from petrol engines, provided they are not worn out and burning lubricating oil, are negligible compared with particulate emissions from diesel engines.

In general, the same gaseous emission standards are achieved by both petrol and diesel engines. The emission standards on the current urban cycle type approval tests are expressed in grammes per test (g/test). These standards, recalculated in grammes per mile (g/mile), are as follows:

	Co (g/mile)	HC + NOx (g/mile)	Particulate ((g/miles)
EC Directive 83/351 (the current non catalyst standard)	23·24	7·6-11·1	No standard until October 1990
EC Directive 89/458 (the future standard to be applied from 1992)	7·6	2·0	0·44 (diesels only)

The standards set by directive 89/458 will be revised when the emission directives are consolidated in the near future. The consolidation will include a revision of the drive cycle used in the test. At present it is 2·58 miles long and simulates urban driving. The revised cycle will be 6·8 miles long and include some high-speed driving. It is likely that a reduction of about 27 per cent. in the particulate limit will also be included in the consolidation.

Health Services

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has had to date from organisations treating and providing services for the elderly and chronically sick about the effect of the current National Health Service plans, and how many of these representations are in favour of the proposed changes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have been asked to reply. We have received a large number of representations from a wide variety of sources. Many ask questions, many support some or all of our proposals, some refer only to specific aspects. It is not possible to distinguish individual representations in the way the hon. Member requests.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Violence to Women

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take steps to ensure that women are made less vulnerable to crimes of violence through a review of the present framework of legislation and its application in order to sustain a more appropriate relationship between the damage done to victims and the penalties awarded to convicted criminals.

Mr. Cope: The criminal law is reviewed on a continuous basis, but the application of the legislation concerned is a matter for the courts to determine, taking into account all the circumstances of each individual case. The hon. Gentleman will be aware that the maximum penalty in Northern Ireland for attempted rape has recently been increased to life imprisonment, and that any sentence regarded by the Attorney-General as too lenient can now be the subject of a reference to the Court of Appeal.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what function is served by the Northern Ireland negotiating body on teachers' salaries.

Dr. Mawhinney: To negotiate the remuneration and terms and conditions of service of teachers in recognised schools in Northern Ireland. It is also the vehicle for consultation by the Department of Education on matters relating to teachers' superannuation.

Prison Searches

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many strip searches were made on female prisoners in Her Majesty's prison, Maghaberry monthly since July, giving the number of persons involved and the number of times each person was searched; if any prison contraband, smuggled item or illegal correspondence was discovered in any search, indicating which items; in how many cases prisoners refused to be searched and had to be restrained while the search was being conducted; and what were the reasons for the search;

(2) how many strip searches were made on female prisoners in Her Majesty's prison, Maghaberry, monthly since July; giving the number of persons involved and the number of times each person was searched; if any prison contraband, smuggled item or illegal correspondence was discovered in any search, indicating which items; on how many cases prisoners refused to be searched and had to be restrained while the search was being conducted; and what were the reasons for the search.

Mr. Cope: Details of the numbers of and reasons for strip-searches made of female prisoners in Her Majesty's prison Maghaberry from March 1989 to June 1989 have already been provided—Official Report, 28 July 1989. Details from July 1989 to November 1989 are as follows:

	July	August	September	October	November

No prohibited article was found during these searches and no prisoner refused to be searched.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the dates of the five meetings of the Anglo-Irish intergovernmental conference between 1 January and 31 July 1990.

Mr. Brooke: No dates have yet been fixed.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Meal Requirements)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will include in the relevant code of practice a requirement for the provision of drinks to prisoners on remand or in custody, additional to the existing statutory right to have three meals in any 24-hour period.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The term "meals" in the code of practice is always interpreted as including drinks, and the custody officer will respond to reasonable requests for drinks between meals. This will be clarified in the revised code which we are now preparing.

Vehicle Security

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage of all reported crimes are listed as thefts of, or thefts from, motor vehicles;

(2) what percentage of offenders involved in theft of, or thefts from, motor vehicles are apprehended; what percentage are convicted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The available published information can be found in the annual Command Paper, "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales": the latest issue, for 1988, is Cm. 847, and a copy is available in the Library. In 1988 about one quarter of all notifiable crimes recorded by the police were thefts of, or from, motor vehicles, and about a quarter of these offences were cleared up. The number of persons prosecuted and found guilty of thefts of or from motor vehicles in 1988 is given in the following table:

Persons proceeded against and found guilty of thefts of and from motor vehicles—England and Wales 1988

	Total proceeded against	Total found guilty	Percentage found guilty
Theft of motor vehicles	6,111	4,080	67
Theft from motor vehicles	10,796	8,316	77

British Summer Time

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received concerning the implementation of British summer time throughout the year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Following the publication in June of the Green Paper "Summer Time—A Consultation Document" (Cm. 722) a total of 30,797 representations have been received to date. We hope to have completed an assessment of them in the near future.

Prison Searches

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the number of body searches, cell searches and cell changes and strip searches carried out on each of the category A prisoners being held at Her Majesty's Prison, Durham monthly, since July, if any prison contraband, smuggled item or illegal correspondence was discovered in any search, indicating which items; in how many cases prisoners refused to be searched and had to be restrained while the search was being conducted; and what were the reasons for the search.

Mr. Mellor: Records are not kept of the occasions when rub down searching or "frisking" is carried out in prisons and it is not the practice to disclose detailed information about security arrangements such as that requested about the frequency of cell searches and cell changes.

Establishments are not required to record all strip searches and comprehensive records are available only in respect of category A women prisoners, of whom there were four in Durham prison between 1 July and 30 November. The number of occasions on which each was strip searched in each month during this period is shown in the following table:

	Prisoner
	A	B	C	D
July	—	—	2	—
August	1	1	—	1
September	1	3	1	4
October	—	4	4	3
November	2	2	2	2

No unauthorised article was found. On no occasion did the prisoners refuse to be strip-searched.

Strip-searching is a routine security measure to which all inmates—male and female—are subject, both for its deterrent effect and as a means of discovering unauthorised articles.

Falmouth Police Station

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has yet made a decision on Falmouth's new police station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: I will write to my hon. Friend about a new police station at Falmouth, when decisions on the major building programme for 1992-93 have been made early next year.

Chilean Residents

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Chilean nationals resident in the United Kingdom have (a) permanent residence, (b) student visas (c) occupational leave and (d) refugee status.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information is not directly available in the form requested. Annual figures of the number of Chileans accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom, and of the number admitted to the United Kingdom as students, are published each year in "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom" (most recently in tables 22 and 1, respectively, of the 1988 volume, Cm. 726). Annual figures of the number of Chileans granted refugee status in the United Kingdom, or exceptional leave, are published in the Home Office statistical bulletin "Refugee Statistics, United Kingdom" (most recently in tables 7 and 8 of the 1988 volume, Issue 25/89). Copies of both these publications are in the Library.

Jamaican Nationals

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Jamaican nationals have (a) been interviewed and (b) refused entry to the United Kingdom for each month since January 1989; and what are the annual figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information is given in the table. All Jamaican citizens are interviewed on admission. Figures for those subjected to further examination are not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Jamaican citizens admitted to, and refused leave to enter and removed from, the United Kingdom

Pub Bombings

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many officers of the west midlands serious crime squad have been suspended; how many of these were involved in the preparation of evidence that led to the prosecution of the Birmingham Six; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the chief constable of the West Midlands that five officers who have previously been members of the serious crime squad are currently suspended from duty, and that none of these was involved in interviewing those convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times, and under what powers, officers of the Metropolitan police have interviewed either Paul Hill or Gerard Conlon since their acquittal on charges arising from the Guildford and Woolwich public house bombings.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that Metropolitan police officers have stopped Paul Hill once since his acquittal. The examination was part of routine checks at Heathrow airport under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989.

Civil Defence

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to reduce the level of support currently available to civil defence community volunteers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Government maintain their commitment to community volunteers and support such activity through civil defence grant aid, but expenditure incurred by local authorities on volunteer arrangements must be balanced against that on other statutory civil defence functions. It is the aim of a current review of community volunteer schemes to ensure that effective and realistic arrangements are in place.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will name the county councils and district councils in England and Wales which do not conform to regulations in respect of emergency control centres in accordance with the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983.

Mr. John Patten: Statistics in connection with the provision of local authority emergency centres were given in "A report on implementation of the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983 in England and Wales at October 1988" which was published in January 1989 and a copy of which is in the Library. Advances on the position shown in that report are now being considered in the light of more recent information provided by local authorities.

Broadcasting

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the need to ensure that deaf people have access to parliamentary programmes.

Mr. Mellor: We have received representations from right hon. and hon. Members and others on behalf of viewers who are deaf or hard of hearing, requesting subtitling or use of sign language in news, current affairs and parliamentary programmes. The Broadcasting Bill contains provisions to encourage more subtitling in programmes generally.

Police Videos

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the reasons behind the decision to have police video cameras present at Thames magistrates court on 12 September; and as to what use will be made of the video produced.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner that there was considered to have been a significant possibility that a demonstration outside the court on that day would result in disorder. It was decided to video the demonstration to provide contemporaneous evidence to support any prosecutions which might have ensued. In the event the demonstration passed off quietly and it was not necessary to retain the video tape for evidental or any other purposes.

Mr. Leroy Russell

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the action being taken by the Metropolitan police at Forest Gate, London E7, to return the £960 belonging to Mr. Leroy Russell of 90 Gwendoline avenue, London E13.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner that this money was seized from Mr. Russell's home by officers of the Metropolitan police following his arrest there on 25 July 1988. The police will retain the money for as long as the matter remains sub-judice.

Police

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will produce a table showing the average age of police constables by police authority area.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 7 December 1989]: The information requested is set out in the table.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Mining Engineering

111. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assistance his Department gives to Britain's mining engineering industry in its efforts to improve its export performance.

Mr. Redwood: The DTI and FCO provide a wide range of information, advice and services to firms involved in exporting from the United Kingdom and these are available to the mining engineering industry where appropriate. The DTI's projects and export policy division provides particular support for British companies bidding for major overseas projects.

Nationalised Industries

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total net cost or contribution of the nationalised industries within his responsibility in the period of 1974 to 1979; and what was the net contribution of these industries in the period 1979 to the latest available year, taking account of both corporation tax and receipts from privatisation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The way in which the expenditure plans and financing requirements of the nationalised industries was recorded changed in 1976-77 when the concept of an external financing requirement was introduced. Before that published figures concentrated on the capital requirements of the industries, whether or not they could be financed from internal resources or required Government or market funding. Figures for the two periods 1974-75 to 1978-79 and 1979-80 to 1987-88 are therefore not available on a comparable basis.

The following figures show, for the nationalised industries for which the Secretary of State had responsibility in these periods, outturn capital expenditure for 1974-75 and for later years the net effect on the public expenditure totals, taking account of net privatisation receipts. Corporation tax payments do not affect the public expenditure total. Information on tax paid is available in the published report and accounts of the relevant nationalised industries and has not been included in the following totals.

For 1974-75 and 1975-76 outturn capital expenditure was £2,925 million.

For 1976-77 to 1978-79 the net effect was an addition of £2,616 million to the public expenditure total.

For 1979-80 to 1987-88, the last year for which outturn figures are available, the net effect was an addition of £591 million.

The industries covered by this answer are British Aerospace, British Shipbuilders, British Steel Corporation, Post Office (including Telecommunications and National Girobank until separation), British Telecom and Girobank, the receipts from the sale of shares in British Aerospace and British Telecom are included in the figures, but the sale of shares in British Steel took place after 1987-88.

Sources: White Papers for the Government's public expenditure plans for the period 1975 to 1988, Command numbers 6721-II, 7439, 7841, 8175, 8494, I and II, 8789 II, 9143 II, 9428 II, 9702 II, Cm. 56 II, Cm. 288 I, Cm. 605, Cm. 621.

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the net cost or comtribution of the nationalised industries within his responsibility in 1978-79.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The outturn financing requirements of all nationalised industries in 1978-79 were published in the "Government's Expenditure Plans 1980-81 to 1983-84", Cm. 7841, in March 1980. The net effect on the public expenditure totals of the requirements for British Shipbuilders, British Aerospace, British Steel Corporation, and the Post Office (including figures for Telecommunications and Girobank) was an addition of £845 million.

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the net cost or contribution of those industries within his responsibility which are still nationalised or companies which were state owned in 1988, or the last available year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The latest available outturn figures for contributions to the public expenditure total for nationalised industries and wholly Government-owned companies within the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry were published in January 1989 in chapters 5 and 21 of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1989-90 to 1991-92" Cm. 605 and 621. The net effect in 1987-88 of British Shipbuilders, British Steel Corporation, Post Office and Girobank taken together was a reduction of £271 million.

European Patent Office

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what efforts he is making to ensure that patent protection obtainable from the European patent office by smaller firms and academic institutions in England and Wales is as comprehensive and effective as that available to other applicants in other parts of the world and particularly the United States of America.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We believe that all applicants, including small firms and academic institutions, can obtain patent protection from the European patent office which is already as comprehensive and effective as that available in other parts of the world including the United States of America. Differences do however exist between the national patent laws of different countries and we are actively involved in international negotations to minimise them.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what contracts, including those relating to privatisations, the Government have awarded since June 1979 to accountancy firms held to be lacking the necessary professional conduct, efficiency and competence by the disciplinary committees of the accountancy profession.

Mr. Redwood: Information on Government contracts with accountancy firms is not collected centrally.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the firms criticised by the joint disciplinary scheme run by the accountancy bodies; and whether any firms or their successors criticised by the joint disciplinary scheme have subsequently supplied personnel for the joint disciplinary scheme committees hearing allegations of unprofessional conduct by other firms.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the annual reports of the joint disciplinary scheme, copies of which are in the Library. Membership of the scheme's committees is a matter for its executive committee.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many seats on the auditing practices committee have been held by individuals from accountancy firms sued by the Government for negligence, criticised by his Department's inspectors in their reports and criticised by the joint disciplinary scheme;

(2) whether any accountancy firms reprimanded by the joint disciplinary scheme have subsequently been allowed to have representatives on the accounting standards committee, the auditing practices committee or any of the working parties.

Mr. Redwood: As I explained in the replies I gave on 27 November at column 92-93 and 13 December at column 702 to questions by the hon. Member, membership of the auditing practices committee and the accounting standards committee is a matter for the consultative committee of Accountancy Bodies. Members of working parties are appointed by the relevant committees.

ECGD

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is yet in a position to make a statement on the future of the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Ridley: Based on the findings of the Kemp review of future status options for ECGD businesses, that the Cardiff-based insurance services (covering exports on short-term credit) and the London-based project group (handling exports of projects for capital goods on medium-term credit) should be split and run as separate organisations, the Government's intention is that insurance services be converted into a company and that private capital should be introduced quickly thereafter. These changes are being made to enable ECGD to take advantage of the opportunities offered by 1992 and to meet the increased competition which will arise. They will also ensure that its intra-Community business is maintained. Equalising the legal and economic framework for credit insurance in Europe, with private sector capital, is a necessary condition for fostering United Kingdom trade within the Community.

The company will follow the normal practice of credit insurance companies operating in the commercial market in the use of reinsurance. The Government's aim is that this should be obtained from the private market. However, I recognise that in relation to certain of the political risks currently covered by insurance services there is at present insufficient private market capacity.

Thus, in order to maintain facilities for exporters, the Government are prepared to see a transitional period of up to three years from the date of the introduction of private capital during which a reinsurance arrangement will be in place between Her Majesty's Government and the company. During this period the company will work to complete adequate reinsurance arrangements with the private market with the aim of phasing out residual Government reinsurance.

When the new company is formed the intention is that staff who transfer to the company should do so on broadly comparable terms to those which they presently enjoy as Crown servants. ECGD staff will be asked whether they wish to remain within the Civil Service, or to transfer to the new company. ECGD will use its best endeavours to meet their wishes where these are consistent with the business needs of ECGD and the company.

These changes will require legisation at the earliest opportunity. It is the intention that the new company be established on 1 April 1991. Advisors will be appointed shortly to assist ECGD in carrying out necessary preparatory work.

Over the last three years, ECGD's insurance services have introduced major improvements to the range and quality of its services. It has developed a unique underwriting system and rapid credit limit service designed to meet the needs of its customers in the 1990s, particularly in the single European market. The changes I have outlined for the insurance services group are vital to enable it to meet the challenges which will be thrown up by the single European market and so ensure that we develop further what is a significant national asset for our exporters. I am confident that the changes I am proposing are the best way to secure jobs for the future.

In relation to ECGD's project group, the Government have decided that export credit and financing support should continue to be provided.

The ECGD's project support activities will remain within the Government, but the precise form of ECGD's organisation—whether it should remain a Department or acquire agency status—will be decided as soon as possible.

The Government are anxious to reduce the costs which have been associated with ECGD support for project exports in recent years. It will, therefore, continue to press hard internationally, for multilateral agreement aimed at eliminating subsidies which distort export credit and aid. In addition, to reduce the risk of losses in the future, radical new methods for managing ECGD's political risk portfolio will be introduced. Substantial premium increases for project business will be necessary, especially for business in the higher risk markets to ensure that ECGD premiums are better matched to risk. I believe that exporters will accept the need for this and will regard it as preferable to the withdrawal of facilities.

The changes I have outlined are essential if ECGD is to be able to maintain and improve the quality of support it currently provides to United Kingdom exporters. The overwhelming majority of the representations which have been made by interested outside parties have fully supported these changes. I commend them to the House.

National Engineering Laboratory

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are his current projections on the expected job losses at the National Engineering Laboratory and the date by which those reductions in staffing will be achieved.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The business plan for NEL and the resources it will need, is being prepared. Current projections are that the laboratory will require about 400 staff in total and the necessary staff reductions will take place during 1990.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he has received and appraised the projected business plan for the National Engineering Laboratory, East Kilbride; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he proposes to announce his intentions arising from the projected business plan on the future of the National Engineering Laboratory.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have not yet seen the business plan for the National Engineering Laboratory, but I will see it in due course. The contents of the plan will be commercially confidential and I do not intend to make an announcement about it.

Alcohol Duty

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much (a) excise duty and (b) import duty is levied on a one litre bottle of whisky containing 40 per cent. alcohol imported into the United Kingdom from Japan.

Mr. Redwood: The excise duty levied on a one litre bottle of whisky containing 40 per cent. alcohol imported into the United Kingdom from Japan is £6·31. The import duty is 14p.

Women's Employment Schemes

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what submissions he has made to the European Commission, whether via normal interdepartmental channels or directly to the European Commission, to seek continuation of the present level of funding plus allowance for inflation for women's employment and workshop schemes; and what response has been received.

Mr. Redwood: I have nothing to add to the reply given to the same question by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Service Dispersal

109. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further plans he has for decentralising the Civil Service establishment from London to the regions of England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ryder: As announced by right hon. Friend, the then Paymaster General, on 31 March 1988 (column 610-11), the Government's policy for relocating Civil Service work does not involve targets set by the centre. Departments review the location of their work in accordance with central guidelines, and their Ministers announce their decisions. Since the beginning of 1988, plans to locate or relocate over 14,000 posts away from London and the south-east have been announced, and further announcements are expected in due course.

Civil Service (Privatisation)

110. Mr. Harry Barnes To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will ensure that in any future privatisation of parts of the Civil Service, staff will be given the option of transferring and remaining within the Civil Service.

Mr. Ryder: No. Cases differ, and need to be judged on their particular merits.

Incomes

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report an estimate of the increase in real disposable incomes as a result of the separate taxation of husbands and wives at current rates of income, taxation and inflation; and what proportion of the total is expected to accrue to those in the upper and lower quarters and tenths.

Mr. Lilley: The decrease in income tax liabilities in 1990-91 due to the introduction of independent taxation is provisionally estimated to be about £950 million. That would lead to an increase in real disposable income of less than half a per cent. Estimates of its distribution are not available in the form requested, but about a third of the benefit would be to individuals with incomes of less than £5,000 a year.

Those estimates make no allowance for possible behavioural effects. The effect of independent taxation on the composite rate of tax on bank and building society interest will be taken into account in the rate set for the year 1991-92.

Department of Transport (Expenditure)

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out general Government expenditure by the Department of Transport for the years 1974-75 to 1983-84, in cash and real terms, consistent with the figures for 1984-85 to 1992-93 that are set out in tables 3 and 4 of the 1989 Autumn Statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Tables 3 and 4 of the 1989 Autumn Statement public expenditure press notice set out figures for central Government's own expenditure, by Department. Figures for central Government's own expenditure by the Department of Transport in the years 1978-79 to 1983-84 consistent with those given in the 1989 Autumn Statement are as follows:

	1978-79	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84
Cash figures	0·5	0·6	0·7	0·9	1·1	1·0
Real terms figures (1988-89 prices)	1·0	1·1	1·2	1·3	1·4	1·3

Corresponding figures for earlier years are not readily available.

Workplace Nurseries

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy on the taxation of benefits to employees accruing from the provision of workplace nurseries and creches.

Mr. Major: Employees pay income tax on their earnings whether received in cash or in kind. A subsidised place in a workplace nursery or creche is a benefit in kind and any subsidy is a proper subject for tax. The costs to the employer of subsidising workplace nurseries—or otherwise financing childcare for employees—is allowable against corporation tax.

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will now review the policies of taxation in relation to benefits to employees from the provision of workplace nurseries and other child care facilities by employers.

Mr. Major: I refer my right hon. Friend to the reply that my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary gave to the hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) on 3 November at column 361.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the components of the trade weighted index for pound sterling's exchange value; and what precentage of the weighting is accounted for by currencies linked to the exchange rate mechanism.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Member to the "Economic Progress Report" for December 1988, published by her Majesty's Treasury, copies of which have been placed in the Library. Of those countries represented in the index, Germany, France, Belgium, the Netherlands, the Republic of Ireland, Spain and Denmark participate in the exchange rate mechanism.

Civil Service

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many civil servants are in post at the current time; what the figure was 10 years ago; what was the average pay of a civil servant in 1979 and what it is at the present time; what are the figures in real terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: There were 567,073 civil servants in post on 1 July 1989 compared with 732,275 on 1 April 1979. The average pay of a civil servant, taken as the pay of an administrative officer—the grade with by far the largest number of staff in post—at the top of the scale was £3,627 in April 1979 and £8,305 in October 1989; that represents an increase of 129 per cent. or, after adjusting for inflation, a real increase of 14 per cent.

Capital Account

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much of the financing of the capital account is made up of (a) the sale of United Kingdom businesses to organisations based abroad and (b) other categories, for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The value of acquisitions by overseas companies in 1988 financed from overseas shown in "British Business" (19 September 1989, page 20, table 5), is a substantial part of the figures of direct investment by overseas residents within the total capital transactions account shown in table 8.1 of the "UK Balance of Payments", 1989 edition (the CSO Pink Book). Copies of those publications are in the Library.

Medical Insurance

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to hasten the implementation of the provision of the Finance Act to introduce a tax allowance to help elderly subscribers to medical insurance; and what representations he has received from insurance companies expressing concern about their ability to meet customers' demands for tax relief to take effect from 6 April 1990.

Mr. Lilley: The Inland Revenue has been consulting the private medical insurers on draft regulations to ensure a smooth introduction of the relief. I understand that all the major insurers are planning to offer contracts by 6 April 1990 that will meet the requirements for the relief.

Departmental Funding

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to limit (a) the total sum or (b) the proportion of the sums originally voted which may be carried forward by a Deaprtment from one financial year to another as a result of (i) capital or (ii) running costs underspends; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The end-year flexibility scheme for central Government capital expenditure enables Departments to carry forward underspends of up to 5 per cent. of their eligible provision plus any carryover entitlement from the previous year not taken up in a Supplementary Estimate, or £2 million—whichever is the greater. The end-year flexibility scheme for running costs enables qualifying Departments to carry forward underspends of up to 0·5 per cent. of their eligible running costs provision or £50,000—whichever is the greater.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps Her Majesty's Customs and Excise are taking to acquire additional information technology skills from the private sector.

Mr. Ryder: Following a procurement exercise involving 12 potential suppliers and a very thorough evaluation of proposals, HM Customs and Excise has, with the assistance of the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency, selected Logica Communications and Electronic Systems Limited, to provide staff to assist with the maintenance and enhancement of existing IT systems and the development of new projects, and BIS Applied Systems Limited, to assist in the area of project management and control.

The first project to benefit from those arrangements will be VAT II, which has been set up to develop a replacement for the existing VAT system initially implemented in 1973.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what effect the non-publication of forecasts of overseas sector capital flows has on the process of making projections, in the Autumn Statement or elsewhere, of the future exchange rate.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 12 December 1989]: Although forecasts of overseas capital flows are not published, the Treasury does look carefully at the capital account as part of the detailed figuring underlying the published forecast.

Endangered Species

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the implications for the enforcement of regulations concerning the wildlife trade and the implementation of CITES of the effect on specialist skills, including intelligence gathering and criminal identification, resulting from the proposed move of the Customs and Excise endangered species branch from London to Southend.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 13 December 1989]: There is no reason to suppose that the proposed relocation from London to Southend of the small group of Customs and Excise headquarters staff dealing with import and export controls on endangered species will have any significant effect on the level of enforcement.

British Aerospace

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the exchange of letters with British Aerospace was made available by the Inland Revenue to Touche Ross when it acted for the National Audit Office.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 14 December 1989]: The National Audit Office did not ask the Inland Revenue to make available any papers.

Ivory

35. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to destroy publicly all ivory stocks seized by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 14 December 1989]: No. I do not think that it would be sensible to commit Customs to a policy of invariably destroying, whether in public or not, all ivory seized by it as illegally imported. I shall, however, ensure that it continues to dispose of all such goods in a manner acceptable to me and to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, who has overall responsibility for endangered species policy in the United Kingdom. Certainly, none will be disposed of in a way that offends current conservation principles.

Nationalised Industries

Mr. Hood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will name each of the chairmen of the nationalised industries; and if he will give details of salaries and other remunerations applicable to each.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply 7 December 1989, columns 311-12]: I regret that there were errors in the table of my earlier reply. The correct information requested is set out in the following table.

Chairman	Nationalised Industry	Salary[1] £
Sir Robert Haslam	British Coal	160,000
Sir Robert Reid	British Railways Board	90,950
Mr. C. Campbell	British Shipbuilders	21,675
Mr. D. Ingman	British Waterways Board	33,700
Mr. C. Tugendhat	Civil Aviation Authority	60,000
Sir Philip Jones	Electricity Council	94,380
Lord Marshall	Central Electricity Generating Board	111,000

[1] Actual salaries. Some Chairmen are part-time.

[2] The 10 Water Authorities were vested as Companies Act companies owned by Government on 1 September, and privatised on 12 December.

Chairmen are also eligible for performance bonus schemes with a maximum limit of 25 per cent. of salary.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Microwave Ovens

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to encourage retailers to provide an inquiry and advisory service to purchasers of microwave ovens in the light of his Department's recent report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We have encouraged the Retail Consortium to ensure that its members stock the updated instructions for the safe use of domestic microwave ovens issued by oven manufacturers.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has recorded any incidence of bovine spongiform encephalopathy in cattle born since animal proteins were withdrawn from cattle rations.

Mr. Maclean: No.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cattle his Ministry is currently monitoring to assess the possible vertical transmission of bovine spongiform encephalopathy; what the parameters are of this research; and if he will make a statement on progress of the research to date.

Mr. Maclean: Three hundred and thirty progeny of BSE-affected dams and the same number of control animals are being monitored on three of the Ministry's experimental husbandry farms. The study is designed to determine whether maternal transmission occurs either in utero and/or in the immediate period after birth and, if so, at what incidence. The animals will be maintained on experimental husbandry farms until seven years of age unless death or the need to cull intervenes. The brains of all animals will be examined histopathologically and all carcases will be destroyed. Because of the long incubation period for this disease, results will not be forthcoming for some time.

Casualty Animals

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to encourage the development of on-farm slaughter facilities for casualty animals.

Mr. Maclean: The legislation already permits on-farm slaughter of casualty animals. It is an offence to transport casualties if by reason of their unfitness it will cause them unnecessary suffering.

Dairy Herd

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to reduce the incidence of campylobacter and leptospira infection in the national dairy herd.

Mr. Maclean: There are no statutory or voluntary measures relating to campylobacter in cattle. However, the veterinary investigation service will, on request, provide assistance in diagnosis.

A chargeable voluntary component in the cattle health scheme provides herds infected with leptospira hardjo with a programme to control or eliminate infection.

Antibiotics

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the use of quinolone antibiotics as prophylactics.

Mr. Maclean: Products containing quinolone are not licensed in the United Kingdom for prophylactic purposes.

Animals and Birds (Imports)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what checks on the import of live animals and birds will be available after 1992.

Mr. Maclean: It is intended that those from non-EC countries will be imported only via approved frontier inspection posts, for both animal health and welfare purposes. The European Commission has yet to make any proposals to the Council for animal health controls on intra-Community trade in live animals and birds after 1992. The Commission has submitted proposals on the protection of animals during transport but negotiations on these has yet to begin.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what figures are easily available regarding the importation of both pet birds and captive birds for 1988; and how many birds in each category (a) were dead on arrival and (b) died in quarantine.

Mr. Maclean: Figures have been compiled for the numbers of commercially imported birds arriving at approved quarantine premises during 1988. These will be available very shortly and will include mortalities both on arrival and during the statutory quarantine period.

Voluntary Organisations

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which voluntary organisations received grants from his Department for each year since 1986; and for what purposes these were given.

Mr. Gummer: Since 1986 the following voluntary organisations have received grants from my Department for the purposes shown:

(i) National Proficiency Tests Council—to enable the Council to devise, promote and maintain standards of proficiency tests in agriculture and horticulture in England and Wales.

(ii) The National Federation of Young Farmers' Clubs—to help towards the cost of the Federation's activities in agricultural education.

(iii) Farming and Wildlife Trust—to make provision for the conservation and enhancement of the natural beauty of the countryside.

(iv) Society for the Responsible Use of Resources in Agriculture and on the Land (RURAL)—to promote exchanges of views through the organisation of conferences in all aspects of rural land use and the use of resources in agriculture.

(v) The Countryside Commission for "Operation Silvanus"—to promote the better management of existing woodlands on farms.

(vi) British Trout Association—to promote exports of United Kingdom farmed trout products to targeted third countries.

Lead-contaminated Feed

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he proposes to assist livestock producers whose cattle have been cleared following tests for lead-contaminated feed but are unable to obtain slaughtering facilities for their fat cattle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: In all our discussions with the industry on this incident, we have repeatedly assured all concerned that meat derived from animals cleared for slaughter conforms to the rigorous standards laid down by the Department of Health and is perfectly fit for human consumption.

We are urgently carrying out scientific work to see whether the restrictions currently attaching to the slaughter of such animals can be eased without risk to public health. I shall ease the restrictions just as soon as it is shown to be safe to do so.

Sellafield

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will amend the statutory environmental monitoring programme of the Sellafield reprocessing plant as a condition of its authorisation, to require British Nuclear Fuels Limited to take and analyse samples and carry out external exposure rate measurements on the four-mile intertidal stretch of the River Esk in Cumbria and publish the results; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: BNFL's statutory environmental monitoring programme already includes gamma dose rate measurements at Hall Waberthwaite in the intertidal stretch of the Esk. It also includes ground level river bank monitoring in the area. The results are submitted to the Ministry and to the Department of the Environment and BNFL publishes an annual report. The Ministry is not aware of any factors which would justify amendment of the programme in this area. However, the programe is continually under review.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he has assessed the public radiation exposure of people who live close to the four-mile intertidal stretch of the River Esk in Cumbria; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will undertake a detailed radiological assessment of public exposure to radioactivity in the four-mile intertidal stretch of the River Esk in Cumbria, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The River Esk has been monitored closely for more than 20 years. The Ministry carefully studies the time spent by people close to the Esk and we have found that the length of time people spend regularly there is very small. We have recently completed a new survey and the report on that work is being prepared for publication.

Our routine monitoring includes a number of locations where regular measurements of external dose rates are carried out. These are locations which are representative of the highest levels of external exposure which are likely to result from public occupancy of intertidal areas. Our report for 1988 records measurements at 11 locations in the Ravenglass estuary (which includes the Esk) and most locations were monitored monthly. For the Esk six locations were monitored. Detailed statistics of this monitoring including estimates of public radiation exposures at these locations are published annually.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the dates when his Ministry has reassessed habit surveys of members of the public around the Sellafield reprocessing plant in the past 10 years.

Mr. Curry: Habit surveys in respect of discharges from Sellafield have been carried out in each of the last 10 years except for 1980.

Agricultural Training

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the review of agricultural training announced by his predecessor on 20 March is now complete; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: When my predecessor and his fellow Agriculture Ministers appointed Mr. John E. Smith as chairman of the agricultural training board in March this year and at the same time asked him to undertake a review of agricultural training, the scale and complexity of his task was widely realised. That Mr. Smith has completed this review within the very tight time scale allowed is a real reflection of the commitment with which he has approached the job.

On behalf of my fellow Agriculture Ministers, I should like to pay tribute to Mr. Smith for the expeditious and thorough way in which he has conducted his review, for the breadth of the consultations that he has undertaken in such a short space of time and, above all, for the clarity and incisiveness of his report and of his recommendations. I am arranging for the report to be published straight away and for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

In his terms of reference Mr. Smith was called on to report to Agriculture Ministers and, on their behalf, I have informed Mr. Smith that he can go ahead with the relocation of the board's headquarters from West Wickham in Kent to the national agricultural centre at Stoneleigh in Warwickshire and put in hand the new countrywide structures based on 14 local agricultural training boards in England and Scottish and Welsh training boards. Through this restructuring the Government will be looking for a greater contribution from the industry to the board's costs and I therefore welcome Mr. Smith's own recognition of the industry's responsibilities in this respect.

As other recommendations in the report touch on interests of other colleagues and have longer-term implications, the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland and I will, in conjunction with the Secretaries of State for Education and Science, for Employment and for the Environment, and the Chief Secretary to the Treasury, be giving detailed consideration to those proposals.

Plant Breeding Institute

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether, in the past 10 years, he or his predecessors, either by direction or informally, secured changes in the accounting conventions followed by the Plant Breeding Institute; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

The Plant Breeding Institute was a registered charity and a grant-aided institute of the Agricultural and Food Research Council (AFRC). In 1987 its plant breeding assets were sold, and the remainder of the institute then became part of the AFRC Institute of Plant Science Research (IPSR), also a registered charity. The council's accounting convention follows Treasury rules for Government accounting, revised from time to time, which are in the public domain. The IPSR charity now finances its activities from the proceeds of the 1987 sale of assets. Although it no longer receives grant-in-aid from the AFRC, its activities are managed in line with AFRC's financial plans by virture of a memorandum of understanding established between the AFRC and the IPSR.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Repairs

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the amount of money that is needed to fully repair all the schools in England and Wales.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Judgments about what constitutes "full repair" vary. The 1987 report of the DES survey of school buildings estimated that the cost of implementing the main structural requirements related to the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981 and the other physical requirements in primary and secondary schools in England was about £1·1 billion (although this estimate is subject to sampling error). Since then substantial sums, both capital and current, have been, and continue to be, devoted to improving school premises. The repair of schools in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Vocational Degrees

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made towards increasing vocational degree places at universities and polytechnics.

Mr. Jackson: There is no standard definition of the term "vocational" as applied to degree courses. Many courses have at least some vocational element. Between 1979 and 1987 (the latest year for which figures are available) the number of degrees awarded annually by universities and the Council for National Academic Awards increased by about a quarter, from 101,600 to 127,100. I expect the proportion with a vocational element to have followed broadly the same trend.

Student Unions

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the Government grant allocations to student unions for universities and polytechnics by polytechnic and university; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: It is for universities and polytechnics to determine the level of their grants to their student unions. The Government do not make specific allocations for this purpose.

Hyperkinesis

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information and guidelines his Department provides to local education authorities to ensure that head teachers are fully aware of the hyperkinesis condition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: No guidance has been issued to local education authorities about hyperkinesis.

Further Education (Salaries)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give figures for the average salaries of further education college lecturers for each of the last 10 years, expressing each annual increase in percentage terms (a) in relation to the rise in the retail price index and (b) in relation to the rise in average non-manual earnings; and how many further education college lecturers have resigned in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Jackson: The average salaries of further education college lecturers on 31 March of each of the last 10 years are given in the table, together with the annual increases in each year relative to the retail prices index and average non-manual earnings.

Average salaries of full-time lecturers[1] in colleges of further education (excluding PCFC institutions), England and Wales

	Average Salary	Annual Percentage Increase
		Relative to the RPI	Relative to average non-manual earnings
Year ending 31 March	£	Per cent.	Per cent.
1979	6,207	—	—
1980	7,461	9·2	7·6
1981	9,366	3·1	0·2
1982	10,111	−3·6	−6·6
1983	10,681	−3·4	−3·2
1984	11,229	1·1	−3·7
1985	1,856	0·4	−2·4
1986	12,744	0·5	0·3
1987	13,572	3·3	−2·1

[1] Includes all academic staff on grades up to and including Principal.

Actual average salaries for 31 March 1988 and 1989 are not yet available. Lecturers' pay was increased on a staged basis over the period April 1987 to April 1989. The percentage increases in each of the two years relative to the RPI and average non-manual earnings are as follows:

Year ending 31 March	Actual	Relative to the RPI	Relative to average non-manual earnings
	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.
1987-88	10·3	6·1	1·9
1988-89	6·0	0·0	−4·3

The level of salary increase to be awarded to lecturers in 1989-90 has not yet been settled.

The Department does not collect information specifically on resignations. The table sets out the numbers, in percentage terms, of lecturers leaving full-time service in each of the last ten years.

Annual percentage of lecturers in colleges of further education (excluding PCFC institutions) leaving full-time service in the maintained further or higher education sector in England and Wales

Year ending 31 March	Further education colleges excluding PCFC institutions
	Per cent.
1979	6·0
1980	5·8
1981	5·6
1982	5·4
1984	6·0
1985	6·8
1986	6·5

Note: The figures for 1979-85 include lecturers at non polytechnic institutions in the PCFC sector.

These figures include retirements and movement from full-time to part-time service. In a survey by the employers' organisation, LACSAB, of turnover and wastage in further education in the academic year 1987-88, losses to employment outside the sector amounted to 2·4 per cent. of employment.

Grants

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide estimates of the costs and savings, as per annex E of the White Paper, in respect of (a) net change in grant, (b) net change in benefits, (c) gross loan outlay, (d) loan repayments and (e) public sector borrowing requirement effect for each of the years from 1990 to 2027, as in annex E of Cmd. 520, on the basis that a 30 per cent. age participation rate is attained by 2015, showing the effects of (i) 80 per cent. take-up, (ii) 90 per cent. take-up and (iii) 100 per cent. take-up.

Mr. Jackson: The Department does not currently project student numbers in higher education beyond the turn of the century.

The following tables show annex E revised to take account of the increase in student numbers since Cm. 520 was published. The tables show the effect of take-up rates of 80 and 100 per cent., and of inflation at 3, 5 and 8 per cent.

Student Maintenance Award

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what level of net student maintenance award was paid to mature students aged 50 years and over in each year since 1979-80; and what is to be the estimated level for each year up to 2007-08, at 1988-89 prices.

Mr. Jackson: Mandatory award-holders aged 50 years or over qualify for the main rates of grant appropriate to the location in which they study and may also be eligible for supplementary allowances paid to older students and students with dependants. Data on average net awards paid to this category of student are not collected separately. Nor are the projections for grant levels following the introduction of the top-up loan scheme disaggregated for this category.

Higher Education (Student Numbers)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what would be the numbers of students in higher education for each year from 1990 to 2017 if steady progress to the attainment of 30 per cent. age participation were maintained between 1990 and 2015.

Mr. Jackson: Our latest projection indicates full-time equivalent student numbers rising from about 760,000 in 1988 to about 820,000 in 1992. Numbers are then expected to level off until 1995 as a result of the substantial decline in the relevant age group before rising again to about 890,000 by the end of the century. These totals projected are formed in part by age participation indices for young home initial entrants to higher education of 15, 19 and 23 per cent. for 1988, 1992 and 2000 respectively. Student numbers in higher education have not been projected beyond the turn of the century.

Student Loans

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements for repayment of loans under the proposed student loan scheme are to apply in the case of graduates no longer resident in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jackson: Graduates living overseas will enjoy the same terms as those resident in the United Kingdom. Arrangements will be made for the recovery of outstanding payments from such students. It will be in the interests of all borrowers to repay their loans.

Disabled Students

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will consult disability organisations on the review of discretionary payments to disabled students.

Mr. Jackson: Yes. In addition to my meetings with the all-party disablement group on 28 November and with a group of Members of this House on 9 November, meetings have been arranged between officials of the Department of Education and Science and representative groups.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department monitors the administration of the disabled students allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The administration of the disabled students allowance, within the terms of the mandatory awards regulations, is a matter for local education authorities in pursuance of their duty to make awards. In monitoring authorities' spending on mandatory awards, the Department collects annually figures for the total assessments for the allowance made by each authority and the number of students for whom these are made. In its monitoring of the operation of the proposed student loan system the Government will pay particular attention to the position of disabled students.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether students with disabilities and terminal illnesses will be guaranteed a loan under his proposals for top-up loans for students.

Mr. Jackson: Yes. All students on a relevant course who meet the ordinary residence requirements will have access to the additional resources without regard to other personal circumstances.

Harrow Clinical Research Centre

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he intends to take regarding the proposed closure of the Harrow clinical research centre; what discussions his Department has had with the Medical Research Council concerning the proposed closure; what representations he has had concerning the proposed closure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: In September my right hon. Friend received advice from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils on the Medical Research Council's clinical research initiative. The board recommended that the resources now invested in the clinical research centre should be redeployed with phased developments at a number of other centres. This proposal requires more detailed study and my right hon. Friend is expecting to receive further advice from the advisory board in the spring. The Department and the Health Department are to be kept informed of the progress of this work, particularly as regards capital costs, the redeployment of resources and the implications for NHS provision.

School Buildings

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many temporary classrooms there are in schools in (a) Somerset, (b) Devon, (c) Dorset and (d) Wiltshire;

(2) what proportion of all primary and secondary schools were built before 1903 in (a) Somerset, (b) Devon, (c) Dorset and (d) Wiltshire; and what is the average in England.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The information requested is not collected by the Department.

Governing Bodies

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has agreed revised instruments of government for further education and higher education colleges under local education authority control, where the proposed size of the governing body in each college meets the maximum permitted by section 152 (1) of the Education Reform Act 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: To date, my right hon. Friend has approved 228 instruments of government proposed by local education authorities under section 151 of the Education Reform Act. The governing bodies provided for by these instruments range in size up to 23 members.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list those further education and higher education colleges, together with their local education authorities, which originally and initially submitted revised instruments of government in accord with the Education Reform Act 1988 and where the proposed size of the governing body of each college was in excess of 20; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: This information can be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Brighton City Technology College

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will detail the annual revenue allocations to the Brighton city technology college between 1989-90 and 1995-96 and itemise the headings under which expenditure can and will be made;

(2) if he will give the details of the annual allocation for books and equipment for Brighton city technology college.

Mrs. Rumbold: Recurrent grant will be paid from the date of opening of the Brighton city technology college and will be comparable to spending on maintained schools in similar areas. Recurrent grant will cover all the school's normal running costs, including books and equipment.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give details of the teacher-pupil ratio established for Brighton city technology college.

Mrs. Rumbold: The teacher-pupil ratio in city technology colleges will be comparable to the ratio in maintained schools in similar areas. As yet, no firm teacher-pupil ratio has been determined for the Brighton city technology college.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide a detailed breakdown of the proposed uses of the £2·5 million capital sum allocated to Brighton city technology college for 1989-90 and 1990-91; and if he will itemise future capital allocation to the school until 1995-96.

Mrs. Rumbold: To date the only capital payments for the establishment of the Brighton city technology college have been incurred on the purchase of the Woodingdean site. A detailed feasibility study is currently being undertaken which will give a clearer idea as to the capital requirements of the college.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide details of the anticipated regime of inspections, auditor assessment and value for money scrutinies to verify the proper expenditure of public funds on Brighton's city technology college.

Mrs. Rumbold: The accounts of the Brighton City Technology College Trust will be fully audited as a condition of the funding agreement which my right hon. Friend intends to sign with the sponsors of the college. The agreement will define the terms under which grant will be made.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide details of the likely annual expenditure by Brighton city technology college on new buildings, building repairs and building maintenance between 1989 and 1995-96.

Mrs. Rumbold: A detailed feasibility study is currently being carried out on the establishment of the Brighton city technology college. The study will give a clearer idea on expenditure needs and cashflow requirements.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science on what criteria expenditure of public funds on Brighton city technology college was assessed as a higher priority than an increase to East Sussex county council education allocation for capital spending on new buildings, classroom replacement, repairs and maintenance and new equipment.

Mrs. Rumbold: The CTC programme dos not compete for funds with LEA capital allocations. It is funded from resources that would not otherwise be available to education. It is an investment we are prepared to make because the best practice developed at CTCs will permeate the whole education service. The programme has also generated an unprecedented response from industry; already over £43 million has been given.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps have been taken by his Department to ensure that (a) Greenleaf Planters Ltd., (b) South Weald Properties Ltd. and (c) other private sector investors in the Brighton city technology college will be able to meet the percentage of the private sector investment that the Government currently expect them to find.

Mrs. Rumbold: As a prelude to the funding agreement I intend to sign with all principal sponsors of city technology colleges, there has been an exchange of letters with the sponsors of the Brighton CTC setting out their commitments and the conditions under which their sponsorship has been accepted.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what were the dates and locations of meetings between his departmental officials, representatives of the Michael Faraday Trust, Brighton Steiner school and East Sussex county council officials.

Mrs. Rumbold: There has been no single meeting including all the parties listed by the hon. Member. However, the chairman of the CTC Trust and representatives of the sponsors for the Brighton CTC met elected members and officials of East Sussex county council in July in London. In addition officials of my Department have had a number of routine meetings with representatives of the sponsors and the Michael Faraday Trust, in London and Brighton.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when officials from his Department first made contact with the Michael Faraday Trust and representatives of the Brighton Steiner school to discuss locating a city technology college in Woodingdean, Brighton.

Mrs. Rumbold: The first meeting of officials and sponsors wishing to establish a city technology college in Brighton was held on 19 May. Since then, the sponsors have set up the Michael Faraday Trust.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when sanction was first given and by whom for the authorisation of public expenditure commitments for the setting up of the Brighton city technology college.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Education and Science authorised negotiations to begin on the setting up of the Brighton CTC in May this year.

Craft and Design

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if it is his intention to bring craft and design education into the curriculum for Scottish schools; and whether he will draw up plans to ensure that design and technical subjects are part of the curriculum by 1992.

Mr. Lang: I have been asked to reply.

Craft and design technical subjects already feature in the curriculum of Scottish schools. Courses are available leading to awards at the ordinary, standard and higher grades of the Scottish Certificate of Education. A review of the primary and early secondary curriculum is currently under way to identify and give guidance on good practice. Craft and design and technical subjects will be covered in this review.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Vietnam

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about non-Government organisations which are providing development assistance to Vietnam, and the amounts of assistance in each case.

Mrs. Chalker: A number of British NGOs are active in Vietnam. They are independent agencies and receive no Government funding for their programmes there. Consequently, the Government do not maintain records of their activities in Vietnam. The agencies would no doubt be willing to make this information available to the hon. Member.

Ethiopia

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further plans he has to facilitate transportation of food supplies to famine-striken areas of Ethiopia.

Mrs. Chalker: The £2 million tranche of emergency aid for Ethiopia, which I announced on 27 November is being channelled through British voluntary agencies largely for the purchase of trucks for food transport.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether he has considered the use of Royal Air Force helicopters to drop food supplies to famine-stricken areas of Ethiopia; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will consider repeating the successful Operation Bushell undertaken in 1984, using Royal Air Force Hercules aircraft, to air drop supplies to famine-stricken areas of Ethiopia.

Mrs. Chalker: Within Government-held areas supplies are at present being delivered by road. As for areas in northern Ethiopia not held by the Government, there are at present no agreed arrangements for delivery, either by road or by air, of food supplies from the Government side. If such access were agreed road transport would be by far the most effective means of moving supplies in the volumes required. The UN operated an extremely effective airlift into Tigray in 1984-85 and again in 1987-88. If airlift operations proved necessary, the UN has funds to hand, some of which we contributed, for this purpose.

India

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Westland helicopters have been supplied to India in the British Government's aid package; and if he will make a statement as to the effectiveness of this package.

Mrs. Chalker: The British aid programme grant funded the supply of 21 Westland WH30 helicopters, together with spares, at a cost of £65 million. The helicopters were delivered on schedule at the agreed cost. They are operating mainly in the Indian oil and natural gas industry.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Anglo-Australian Understanding

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will support the proposed exhibition in the Upper Waiting Hall in the week commencing 15 January on the theme of Anglo-Australian understanding.

Mr. Sainsbury: We understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for this exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall for a week from 15 January 1990.

Falkland Islands

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration has been given to the development of windpower farms, oil exploration and the possibility of radioactive waste disposal on the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Sainsbury: There have been no proposals to use the islands for the disposal of radioactive waste.

Wind power generation was examined in Lord Shackleton's reports of 1976 and 1982 but considered to be inadequate for the islands' needs. Experiments on the islands have not yet shown that wind power generation will be an economical proposition. However, the Falkland Islands development corporation is recommending soon that a proper study of the wind regime in the islands be undertaken.

No decisions have yet been taken on a possible regime to control exploration and development of mineral resources.

Tamil Community

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings have been held by Her Majesty's high commission in Sri Lanka with representatives of the Tamil community.

Mr. Sainsbury: The high commission is regularly in contact with members of all communities in Sri Lanka.

Antarctica

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings have been held with environmental organisations since the Paris convention in October concerning the future of Antarctica; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: FCO officials frequently meet representatives of wildlife link to discuss Antarctica matters. The last meeting was in September. No request for a further meeting has been received since then.

Diego Garcia

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings have been held with representatives of the people of Diego Garcia; if there are plans to allow full resettlement of the island; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The commissioner for the British Indian ocean territory, who was in Mauritius for other purposes, saw a delegation of former plantation workers from the Chagos Islands at their request on 20 September. Those concerned are increasingly integrated into the Mauritian community. There are no plans for resettlement of the islands.

Television Films

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what sums his Department has paid to the Fox network and the Discovery channel in the United States for (a) the production and (b) the screening of a series of television films on Britain.

Mr. Sainsbury: "Focus on Britain" is a series of programmes for American television produced by the British consulate general in Los Angeles in association with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The series is designed to help promote British interests—principally exports and services—in the United States. Seventy-five per cent. of production and other costs are met by sponsorship from British companies and organisations. Twenty-five per cent. is paid for by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

No money has been paid to either Fox Television or the Discovery Channel for production costs. Fox Television was paid a total of $252,525 for airtime in 1988 and $121,175 in 1987. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office's 25 per cent. share of these amounts was $92,425.

The Discovery Channel (a cable network seen in over 40 million United States homes) paid to show "Focus" programmes in 1989 and payment has also been received for in-flight showings from Virgin Atlantic Airlines.

Indian Immigrants

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how long people are waiting on average for (a) interviews and (b) second interviews in queues 1, 2, 3 and 4 at each British post on the Indian sub-continent; what were the comparable figures for 1988, 1987 and 1986; and what are the projected waiting times in 1990.

Mr. Sainsbury: Waiting times to first interview for settlement applications in the month of October in the four years 1986 to 1989, which are given in the table, show a reduction in waiting times.

Few applicants in the queues require a further interview. The waiting times between first and second interviews vary considerably depending upon how quickly the applicant returns with the additional documentation requested.

I cannot, at this stage, anticipate what waiting times will be in 1990.

Settlement queues are organised as follows:
Q1 Persons with a claim to the right of abode, dependent relatives over 70 years, special compassionate cases.
Q2 All spouses, and all children under 18 years.
Q3 Fiancé(e)s and other applying for the first time for settlement.
Q4 Re-applicants.

The estimated waiting time is the time given to an applicant as an indication of the time he or she must wait before their interview. Actual waiting time is the time an applicant will have waited since lodging his or her application.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to improve the arrangements at the British High Commission in Dhaka for interviewing those applying for settlement in the United Kingdom; and if he will arrange for security glass to be removed from interviewing booths.

Mr. Sainsbury: The arrangement for interviewing settlement applicants in Bangladesh are satisfactory and we have no plans to change them. Glass screens are provided for the security of interviewers and interpreters. They are no different from those in many public and commercial offices in this country and will not be removed.

DNA Testing

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements he is making for blood samples, needed for DNA testing purposes to be collected in Sylhet.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have no plans to make arrangements for blood samples to be taken in Sylhet.

Contras Demobilisation

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what co-operation Her Majesty's Government will give to the United Nations in order to make the agreed process of demobilisation of the Contras effective.

Mr. Sainsbury: The United Nations has not sought our assistance in this matter.

SCOTLAND

Fisheries

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to eliminate the illegal use of monofilament gill nets in Scottish waters.

Mr. Lang: Orders prohibiting (a) the use of all gill nets for fishing for salmon and sea trout within half a mile of the shore and (b) the carriage of monofilament gill nets in British fishing boats within six miles of the Scottish coast came into force in 1986.

This and earlier legislation is enforced by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland by means of boardings and inspection of vessels and surveillance both at sea and from the air. In addition any such nets found unattended are confiscated.

Poultry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of premises requiring inspection under the provisions of the Testing of Poultry Flocks Orders in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is estimated that as at June 1989 there were 4,623 flocks in Scotland falling within the various categories described in the poultry flock orders.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many outside accountancy firms are employed by his Department; whether such employment is subject to any guidelines; and whether he takes steps before employing an accountancy firm to discover whether that firm has been censured by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors in their inquiries under the Companies Act.

Mr. Rifkind: In 1989, my Department has employed five firms for the provision of accountancy-related services. In commissioning such work, steps are taken in accordance with departmental guidelines and account is taken of the best evidence available about the competence of firms, both at the time of invitation to tender and of appointment.

Health Service

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the estimated increases in (a) personnel and (b) finance to implement the proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients," for the years 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: An additional £3·95 million has been allocated to the NHS in Scotland for 1989-90 to assist in the early stages of implementing the White Paper proposals. For 1990-91, my right hon. and learned Friend announced on 6 December that the provision for spending on health in Scotland is planned to increase by £220 million over the current year. This will bring the provision to over £3 billion (£3,041 million) for the first time. By 1992-93, total health expenditure will be fully £500 million higher than in the current year. In accordance with normal practice, allocations to health boards for 1990-91—including recognition of White Paper initiatives—will be determined and notified to boards in the early part of next year. It will be for boards to decide on their personnel requirements in the light of local circumstances. We fully expect that the initial extra costs will be outweighed in the longer term by improvements in the operation of services and the better management of resources.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the key aspects of health authorities' environmental policy and practices which he monitors.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In Scotland the lead responsibility for environmental matters rests with the departments of environmental health of district and islands councils.

Health boards are responsible for monitoring their own environmental health policies and practices and for issuing medical advice as necessary. There are regular meetings between representatives of local authorities, health boards and the Scottish Office to discuss environmental health issues.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many students will be enrolled at colleges under his budgetary control in the years 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93;

(2) what are the projected student numbers for all the Scottish central institutions in the years 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Lang: The projected student numbers at the colleges in receipt of grant-in-aid will be set out in the Scottish commentary on public expenditure to 1992-93, which will be published in the new year.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the existing and projected academic staff numbers for all the Scottish central institutions in the years 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Lang: The results of the 1989 census of academic staff in colleges of further and higher education in Scotland are not yet available. Projections of academic staff numbers are not made centrally.

New Towns

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to allow new town district councils to purchase vacant houses from their respective development corporation at any point in the period prior to the dissolution of the development corporation.

Mr. Lang: The potential role which district councils play in the ultimate disposal of development corporation housing stock will be considered by the Government during the consultations with the development corporations, district councils and representative tenant groups in the course of winding up each corporation, as set out in paragraph 5.10 of the White Paper "The Scottish New Towns: The Way Ahead" (Cmnd. 711).

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the current market value of the housing stock owned by each of the Scottish new towns and the number of houses owned by each of the new towns.

Mr. Lang: It is not possible to calculate an absolute market value for the housing stock of the new town development corporations, and the Government have no plans to put it on the market. The number of houses owned by each of the Scottish new town development corporations, as at 30 November 1989, was:

	houses
East Kilbride	11,415
Livingston	8,475
Cumbernauld	7,159
Glenrothes	6,388
Irvine	4,003

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance he gives to development corporations as to whether to consult sitting tenants prior to any changes in the management of the new town housing stock.

Mr. Lang: None.

Civil Defence

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will name the county councils and district councils in Scotland which do not conform to regulations in respect of emergency control centres in accordance with the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. The progressive establishment of local authority emergency control centres features in regular discussions between the Scottish Home and Health Department and local authorities. Almost all Scottish authorities have designated emergency control premises, some of which are fully operational. Others require further work to meet the minimum standards set in departmental guidance.

Fire Service

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the time of firemen is reckoned to be devoted to emergency call-outs.

Mr. Rifkind: This information is not available.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number currently employed by (a) central Government and (b) local government, who have been directly related to the collection of (i) domestic rates and (ii) the poll tax in 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The collection of domestic rates was the responsibility of regional and islands councils as is the collection of the community charge. Figures for the numbers of local government staff involved in these functions are not held centrally. Central Government staff are not involved in the collection of the community charge any more than they were involved in the collection of domestic rates. The numbers of such staff primarily involved in policy issues affecting these matters has fluctuated within the period, generally within the range of eight to 10.

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of poll tax payers by region, in Scotland at the latest date; what is the number who are (a) one instalment behind, (b) two instalments behind, (c) three instalments behind, and (d) the account is statutorily in arrears.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of people included on the community charges registers as liable to pay the community charge as at September 1989 was as follows:

Regional/Islands Council	Number liable (to nearest 100)
Borders	78,000
Central	206,400
Dumfries and Galloway	111,400
Fife	269,000
Grampian	378,000
Highland	147,800
Lothian	604,700
Strathclyde	1,762,200
Tayside	295,600
Orkney	14,300
Shetland	16,000
Western Isles	22,300

The other information requested is not held centrally.

Sand Eels

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he has taken to limit sand eel fishing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The sand eel fishery off Shetland has been closed since 1 July 1989. A licensing scheme has been introduced in the Minch to prevent fishing pressure on those sand eel stocks becoming excessive.

Officials will be discussing the latest scientific evidence on the state of sand eel stocks with the fishing industry next month. Decisions on the 1990 fishing season will then be taken.

Postgraduate Students

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the courses which applied for acceptance under the postgraduate students allowances scheme in 1989-90, indicating which were successful.

Mr. Lang: The details the hon. Member requires will take some time to assemble and I shall write to him as soon as possible.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of students on post-graduate courses at Scottish universities and central institutions have been (a) Scottish, (b) from the the rest of the United Kingdom and (c) from overseas, in every year since 1979.

Mr. Lang: The percentages are given in the table.

Session	Place of domicile
	Scotland	Rest of United Kingdom	Overseas
1979-80	47	18	35
1980-81	52	17	31
1981-82	53	16	30
1982-83	51	18	31
1983-84	51	18	31
1984-85	50	19	32
1985-86	48	19	33
1986-87	45	19	36
1987-88	46	18	36
1988-89	44	19	36

Notes:
1. The figures relate to full-time courses.
2. In 1979-80 only university courses are covered.
3. The percentages may not add to 100 because of rounding.

Natural Heritage

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) of 28 November, Official Report, column 188-89, if he will indicate how he has responded to requests for assurances concerning the independence, duties, funding, staffing and location of the proposed Natural Heritage Agency for Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has stated publicly that the proposed Scottish natural heritage agency will have the same independent status as the present Nature Conservancy Council and Countryside Commission for Scotland, will have resources commensurate with the needs of conservation in Scotland, and will have similar duties to NCC and CCS. Staff in NCC and CCS have been assured by Government of an offer of employment on terms and conditions not less favourable taken as a whole than they have at present. It is too early to decide on the location of the proposed new body.

More detailed proposals on these and other issues will be included in the further consultation.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action his Department is taking to (a) prevent further damage to water, wildlife and trees in particular caused by pollutants such as acid rain, (b) sponsor further research on this matter and (c) help in restoring water, wildlife and trees to their original healthy state.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman.

Agriculture (Research and Development)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has decided a future strategy for agricultural research and development in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland has today published a paper entitled "Strategy for Agricultural Research and Development". It reports on the successful implementation of the proposals in the strategy paper published by the Department in December 1985, reviews the developments which underlie the formulation of a revised strategy for the future, sets out the objectives of the Department in funding agricultural and related research and development, and explains how these objectives will be met in the years ahead.

Copies of the paper have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Microwave Ovens

Mr. Michael: To ask the Lord President of the Council what steps he has taken to ensure that strict health and safety standards are observed in respect of all microwave ovens located in the Palace of Westminster.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: All microwave ovens provided in the House for approved purposes are supplied with full operating instructions and are checked annually. Those under the control of the Refreshment Department are operated by staff who are aware of the correct procedures. In the light of current concern I shall, however, refer this matter to the relevant House authorities for further consideration.

THE ARTS

Arts (Leicester)

85. Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he next proposes to visit the city of Leicester to inspect arts facilities.

Mr. Luce: I have no plans at present to visit Leicester, which I last visited in September 1988.

Museums and Galleries

88. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Minister for the Arts what proportion of the Office of Arts and Libraries' budget has been allocated to museums and galleries for 1990-91.

Mr. Luce: One hundred and eighty two million pounds or 37 per cent. of my Office's budget for 1990-91 has been allocated to museums and galleries.

89. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Minister for the Arts what steps he is taking to deal with the repair and refurbishment of museums and galleries.

Mr. Luce: I announced on 16 November that the provision for the building and maintenance programmes at the national museums and galleries which I sponsor will increase by 34 per cent. to some £64 million in 1992-93. This will bring the total provision for building and maintenance over the next three years to over £180 million.

New Libraries

90. Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many new libraries have been established in the last three years.

Mr. Luce: This information is not kept centrally, but I understand that recent research suggests that between January 1987 and December 1989, over 75 new library buildings or substantial extensions to buildings were completed. Capital expenditure on libraries by local authorities in England, which includes spending on new buildings, has increased from £23 million to over £41 million in the three years to 1988-89.

Disabled People

91. Mr. Squire: To ask the Minister for the Arts what steps he is taking to improve access to arts venues by the disabled.

Mr. Luce: As I announced last December, I have given £150,000 to the Carnegie Trust ADAPT fund to improve the accessibility of arts venues to the disabled. I am pleased to report that the question of accessibility is receiving much attention from arts orgsnisations. Additionally, I am aware that the Arts Council and the Museums and Galleries Commission both have disability officers to ensure that the needs of the disabled are fully considered.

Arts Funding

92. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations on arts funding he has received following the Autumn Statement.

Mr. Luce: I am pleased to say that I have received a number of letters of appreciation from chairmen and directors of institutions which have benefited from the revised allocations I was able to announce on 16 November.

Arts Funding

93. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is the breakdown between the public and private sector of funding of the arts in the last financial year of which records are available and 1978-79.

Mr. Luce: Central Government expenditure on the arts has increased from £129 million in 1978-79 to £439 million in 1989-90 (a growth of 240 per cent.). There are no comprehensive figures for private funding of Arts activities but I welcome the evidence that it has been expanding, particularly in the areas of sponsorship and of sales.

Arts Council

94. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he will next meet the chairman of the Arts Council; and what matters he proposes to discuss.

Mr. Luce: I meet the chairman frequently to discuss matters of mutual interest.

Museum Staff

95. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will estimate the number of staff in post at museums now; and what was the figure 10 years ago; what has been the average real increase in rates of pay since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The most recent available figures for museum employment in the United Kingdom are for 1984 when the census of employment showed some 28,000 people employed in museums and galleries. Numbers of staff in post at the national museums and galleries which I sponsor are currently 5,413, compared with some 4,200 in 1979, at which time the national museums and galleries on Merseyside were not include in the figures.

Estimates of average real pay increases for museum staff are not available. However, for all non-industrial grades in the Civil Service, with which staff in the national museums and galleries are analogous for pay and grading purposes, real salaries have increased by around 20 per cent. since 1979.

Live Music

96. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is his policy on the encouragement of live music.

Mr. Luce: Through the funding of the Arts Council, it remains the Government's policy to ensure that as many people as possible have access to performances of live music, of a high standard of quality.

Creative Activity

97. Mr. Michael: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on levels of support for schemes to involve children and young people in creative activity.

Mr. Luce: The Secretary of State for Education and Science and I are jointly funding a booklet about ways in which the arts can stimulate a child's imagination and widen the boundaries of classroom learning. It will be circulated free to all supported schools in England, Scotland and Wales in the new year. In addition, within my area of my responsibility, the Arts Council, the regional arts associations and the national museums and galleries fund a range of schemes aimed at introducing children and young people to the arts.

Kent Opera Company

98. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received regarding the withdrawal of grant funding to the Kent Opera Company.

Mr. Luce: I have received a number of representations about the future of Kent Opera. This is, however, a matter for the Arts Council.

Young Musicians

99. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Minister for the Arts what support he is giving to schemes, events and opportunities for young musicians.

Mr. Luce: Both the Arts Council and the regional arts associations fund a range of schemes designed to encourage and promote young musicians.

Wilding Proposals

100. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many jobs he estimates will be affected in the east midlands if the Wilding proposals are implemented.

Mr. Luce: I have not yet taken any decisions about Mr. Wilding's recommendations.

Arts Council

101. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister for the Arts what has been the effect of inflation upon the grant to the Arts Council over the last three years.

Mr. Luce: Over the three years 1987-88 to 1989-90, the Arts Council's grant will have increased by 14·5 per cent. During the same period, inflation, as measured by the GDP deflator, will have increased by an estimated 20·8 per cent. I have taken these figures into account in deciding the Arts Council's grant for the next three years when it will increase by a further 22 per cent.

Fund Raising (Tax Incentives)

102. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister for the Arts what consideration he has given to the survey conducted by Touche Ross management consultants on the impact of tax incentives on arts and museum fund raising; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: A variety of suggestions have been put to me on taxation incentives for the arts and the Touche Ross report has been an informative contribution. The introduction of new taxation incentives is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Women's Arts and Crafts

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to women's arts and crafts to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Luce: Yes. I am glad to sponsor the "Great American Embroidery Exhibition" in the Upper Waiting Hall and I have written to the hon. Lady confirming my intention.

WALES

Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many contracts over £92,500 have been let by his Department in the 1988-89 financial year and in the present financial year to date; and how many of these were (a) automatically reviewed and (b) open to competition by advertisement throughout the European Community.

Mr. Peter Walker: None.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many outside accountancy firms are employed by his Department; whether such employment is subject to any guidelines; and whether he takes steps before employing an accountancy firm to discover whether that firm has been censured by the Department of Trade and Industry in their inquiries under the Companies Acts.

Mr. Peter Walker: At the present time six accountancy firms are employed either solely or jointly by my Department. Firms are invited to tender for the provision of advisory services on the basis of their suitability to provide the relevant advice. In making appointments, consultations and enquiries are undertaken as necessary and where appropriate in the light of advice given by Treasury on consultancy appointments. The figures do not include accountancy firms that I have appointed to act as auditors to non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department.

Quangos (Appointments)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy, on making appointments to the chairmanship of quangos in Wales, to ensure that such appointments are not used as stepping stones for potential parliamentary candidates.

Mr. Peter Walker: I appoint chairmen of non-departmental public bodies on the basis of their personal qualities and experience.

Poultry Testing

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Caerphilly on 11 December, what is his estimate of the additional cost falling on county councils in Wales in respect of their enforcement of the new Testing of Poultry Flocks Order.

Mr. Peter Walker: Information is not available on the resources that county councils in Wales are allocating to work in connection with the two new orders requiring registration and testing of poultry flocks.

Cancer Treatment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussion he has had with north Wales health authorities concerning the payment to Mersey regional health authority of money for cancer treatment for north Wales patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: None. The funding of English health authorities, including Mersey region, to provide treatment to patients from Wales under the arrangements introduced in the White Paper "Working for Patients" is presently the subject of discussions between officials of the Welsh Office and the Department of Health.

Hypothermia

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of deaths where hypothermia was mentioned as a cause; and what is his estimate of the total number of deaths where hypothermia was the underlying cause of death in Wales in each year from 1978 to 1988.

Mr. Peter Walker: The numbers of registered deaths of residents of Wales caused by hypothermia or where hypothermia was mentioned on the death certificate are shown in the table:

Year	Deaths where hypothermia was: mentioned on the death certificate	recorded as the underlying cause of death
1979	73	31
1980	41	16
1981	57	n/a
1982	53	25
1983	29	12
1984	37	17
1985	60	33
1986	49	24
1988	36	12

Note:
For 1979 onward based on 9th Revision ICD Codes 991.6 and 778.3.

Baby Cots

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) pursuant to his answer of 29 November, Official Report, column 259, whether he will provide comparable figures on intensive care baby cots for 1983-84 and 1979-80;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 7 December, Official Report, column 358, whether he will provide comparable figures on intensive care baby cots for 1979-80 and for the latest available year.

Mr. Peter Walker: The answer of 29 November, Official Report column 259, was based on information derived from a one-off enquiry undertaken to inform the advisory group on perinatal intensive care services in Wales. As a consequence comparable figures for earlier years are not available. The more general quarterly bed-use inquiry provides comparable statistics relating to special care baby cots for the years requested, and these are shown in the table:

Full-time Education

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the staying-on rate in full-time education in each of the counties of Wales in 1987-88 and 1983-84 of those aged (a) 16 years, (b) 17 years, (c) 18 years and (d) all ages.

Mr. Peter Walker: The percentage of 16, 17 and 18-year-olds and all ages staying on in full-time education at schools, tertiary and further education colleges, and universities for the academic years 1987-88 and 1983-84 are shown in the table:

Radiation

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) whether he has assessed the public radiation exposure of people who live close to the area immediately around the Trawsfynydd nuclear power station; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will conduct an aerial radioactivity survey of the whole of north Wales; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether he will undertake a detailed radiological assessment of public exposure to radioactivity in the area immediately around Trawsfynydd nuclear power station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Earlier this year, as part of a research project for the Welsh Office, whole body monitoring of volunteers from north Wales (including some from the vicinity of Trawsfynydd) took place at Ysbyty Gwynedd. This was a follow up to an exercise which took place in October 1987.

The preliminary results of this monitoring have shown the levels of radioactivity present in the body to be low and in fact, to have fallen significantly in comparison with the earlier measurements. As such they present no cause for concern. The individuals who took part in this survey have been made aware of the results of the tests.

Additionally, the aquatic environment monitoring report No. 21 prepared by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, a copy of which is in the Library of the House, showed that in 1988 the most highly exposed group around the Trawsfynydd nuclear power station received only 7 per cent. of the internationally recommended dose limit of 1 millisievert per year.

Consideration has been given to a detailed aerial survey of the areas of north Wales where restrictions on the movement of sheep remain in force. It is felt unlikely that such a survey would add significantly to the data already held on levels of radioactivity in sheep, soil and vegetation in those areas.

Bed and Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many children he estimates spent the Christmas holiday in bed and breakfast accommodation in Wales other than as tourists during each of the years 1983 to 1988;

(2) how many families he estimates spent the Christmas holiday in bed and breakfast accommodation in Wales in each of the years 1983 to 1988 inclusive, other than as tourists;

(3) how many families in Wales he estimates will spend the 1989 Christmas holiday period in bed and breakfast accommodation other than as tourists;

(4) how many individuals he estimates will be in bed and breakfast accommodation in Wales other than as tourists during the Christmas 1989 holiday period;

(5) how many people he estimates spent the Christmas holiday in bed and breakfast accommodation in Wales for each of the years 1983 to 1988 inclusive, other than as tourists.

Mr. Peter Walker: Information on the number of household accommodation temporarily under part III of the Housing Act 1983 in bed and breakfast accommodation is collected only with respect to the last day of each quarter. Information is not available on type of household or of the number of children within household. Available information for the 31 December of each year is shown in the table. Estimates for the 31 December 1989 will not be available until April 1990.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what factors he has identified within the process of food production as making a significant contribution to the increased number of food poisoning cases reported in each of the last four years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 6 December.

South Glamorgan Women's Workshop

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what submissions he has made, to the European Commission, whether via normal interdepartmental channels or directly to the European Commission, to seek continuation of the present level of funding plus allowances for inflation for the South Glamorgan women's workshop; and what response has been received.

Mr. Peter Walker: European social fund support for the South Glamorgan women's workshop in 1989 is a matter for the Department of Employment. However my Department has submitted an indicative funding proposal to the European Commission in respect of European social fund support for the workshop in the years 1990, 1991 and 1992 in the context of the proposed integrated development operation for industrial south Wales. This integrated development operation programme has still to be approved by the Commission.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he asked the Welsh Language Board to draw up a strategy for the Welsh language; on what date he received such a strategy; whether he has accepted the strategy so prepared by the Welsh Language Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I established the Welsh Language Board in June 1988 with a remit to consider all matters relating to the Welsh language. The board sent its strategy document to me on 23 May 1989. The board has subsequently published further, more detailed proposals, the practical implications of which are currently being considered.

Cleddau Bridge

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of central Government assistance in each year since 1970 to the former Pembrokeshire county council and Dyfed county council towards the cost of the construction and maintenance of the Cleddau bridge, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Peter Walker: No central Government assistance has been specifically directed towards Cleddau bridge. Dyfed and Pembrokeshire county councils have received unhypothecated capital and revenue resources from central Government in support of their expenditure including that associated with Cleddau bridge.

Hospice Movement

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he has any plans to alter the funding of the hospice movement in Wales on lines similar to those recently announced for the funding for Scotland;

(2) whether, in any new funding plans for the hospice movement in Wales, he will make it his policy to include help for both units that provide a bedded service and those that provide day care only.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am considering plans to offer financial assistance for terminal care in Wales and will be making a statement in due course.

Redundant Mineworkers Payments Scheme

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the numbers and percentages of the unemployed totals removed from all Welsh unemployed registers as a result of changes that took effect in August in the redundant mineworkers payments scheme.

Mr. Peter Walker: Latest estimates suggest that in Wales about 500 miners have decided to take advantage of the change in the redundant mineworkers payment scheme. It is of course entirely optional for the redundant mineworkers to decide whether or not to register as unemployed.

Travel-to-work Areas

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many of the travel-to-work areas in Wales which had (a) over 10 per cent. unemployment and (b) between 5 and 10 per cent. unemployment in October 1989, are (i) development areas and (ii) intermediate areas.

Mr. Peter Walker: Two development areas had over 10 per cent. unemployment and nine had rates between 5 and 10 per cent. in October 1989. All 11 intermediate areas were in the latter category.

Baglan-Lonlas Motorway

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when it is now proposed that a start will be made on the Baglan-Lonlas motorway section; and if he will give further consideration to the need to divide the work into two parts and build a bridge to relieve the existing conditions.

Mr. Peter Walker: Tenders for the Earlswood-Lonlas section were received on 15 December and provided they are of satisfactory construction should start before the end of this financial year. Combining the remaining contracts would not achieve an earlier completion of the motorway. An improvement scheme at Baglan roundabout is currently under way, and others at Briton Ferry and Earlswood roundabouts are expected to start early in 1990. All are designed to improve traffic flows on the A48 trunk road.

Neath and Port Talbot Hospital

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when it is now proposed that a start will be made on the new Neath and Port Talbot district hospital.

Mr. Peter Walker: It is for the West Glamorgan health authority to decide when it wishes to start work on this proposed hospital, subject to the necessary departmental approvals. The authority is currently considering the Department's response to its draft submission for approval in principle.

Urban Programme

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish information on the achievements of the urban programme and urban development grant for 1987-88.

Mr. Grist: I am pleased to announce the publication of the urban programme and urban development grant annual report for 1987-88. The report details the contribution both grant mechanisms are making towards easing the problems of economic and social deprivation in Wales. Copies of the report have been placed in the Vote Office and House Library.

EMPLOYMENT

British American Tobacco (Liverpool)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps his Department is taking to respond to the effects of the recent BAT factory closure in Liverpool.

Mr. Nicholls: The services of the local jobcentre will be available to those who lose their jobs at the BAT factory in Liverpool. My Department, through its employment service and Training Agency, operates a wide range of employment, enterprise and training measures to help those made redundant find new jobs, retrain or set up businesses of their own.

I understand that this closure has not yet taken place.

Unemployed Claimants

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) whether unemployed claimants are assessed as showing good cause for rejecting the offer of an otherwise suitable vacancy from the employment service if they can show that their mortgage repayments were such that they would represent an unreasonably high proportion of the wages they would derive from the employment; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether unemployed claimants are assessed as showing good cause for rejecting the offer of an otherwise suitable vacancy from the employment service if they can show that the necessary child care costs they would incur were such that they would represent an unreasonably high proportion of the wages they would derive from the employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Is is for the adjudicating authorities to decide whether a person can show good cause for refusing to apply for or accept a particular vacancy. The Social Security (Unemployment, Sickness and Invalidity Benefit) Amendment No. 2 Regulations 1989 require them to take into account the expenses that would necessarily and exclusively be incurred by the claimant for the purposes of the employment, if they would represent an unreasonably high proportion of the expected remuneration from the employment. However, mortgage repayments and child care costs are general financial commitments and not expenses for the purposes of the employment.

A claimant does not have good cause for refusing any employment if the reasons relate to their income or outgoings, or those of any other member of their household.

Enterprise Allowance and TVEI

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide estimates showing for each financial year from 1987-88 to 1990-91 the amount of actual or planned expenditure on (a) the enterprise allowance scheme, (b) the technical and vocational education initiative and (c) work-related further education.

Mr. Eggar: Records are kept on the basis of the standard financial year for accounting for Government expenditure which runs from 1 April to 31 March.

The figures provided for 1987-88 and 1988-89 are based on actual amounts spent by the Department of Employment Training Agency (Ex MSC, Ex Training Commission) and are taken from published accounts.

The figures for 1989-90 are based on the cash limit in the estimate.

The figures for 1990-91 are based on PES 88.

£ million at cash prices

Enterprise allowance scheme[1]		Technical and Vocational education initiative	Work-related further education
1987-88	195·8	57·8	112·0
1988-89	196·7	92·1	111·4
1989-90	187·0	117·3	101·5
1990-91	185·9	139·1	103·4

[1] Note for EAS
(a) The scheme transferred to the Employment Service 26 October 1987. The figure shown for 1987-88, however, is for the full year.
(b) The scheme was transferred back to the Training Agency in April 1989.

Earnings

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the highest and what is the lowest rates of pay for jobs currently advertised at Burnley job centre; and what are the national average figures.

Mr. Eggar: On 14 December 1989, the highest rate of pay for jobs advertised at Burnley jobcentre was up to £240 per week and the lowest rate £66·40 per week.

National average figures for vacancies advertised at jobcentres are not kept and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inspectors there were in the Health and Safety Executive on 1 December 1979, 1 January 1980 and 1 December 1989, in the agriculture, general factory, specialist factory, explosives, industrial air pollution, mines and quarries, and nuclear inspectorates; and what was the total number of Health and Safety Executive inspectors on each of these dates.

Mr. Nicholls: The total number of inspectors in (a) the Health and Safety Executive's inspectorates; and (b) the total number of inspectors in HSE on 1 December 1979, 1 January 1980 and 1 December 1989 were as follows:

	1 December 1979	1 January 1980	1 December 1989
(a) Total inspectors in Inspectorates
Agricultural	188	188	162
Factory	709·5	703·5	582
Specialist[1]	211	210	184·5
Explosives[1]	13	13	11
Industrial Air Pollution[2]	48	48	—
Mines and Quarries[3]	115	114	—
Mines	—	—	13
Quarries	—	—	47
Nuclear Installations	93	92	150
(b) Total inspectors in HSE[4]	1,449·5	1,442·5	1,221·5

[1] Specialist inspectors (including Explosives inspectors) are currently in HSE's Technology Division. Prior to 1 July 1985 specialists formed part of HSE's Factory Inspectorate.
[2] Industrial Air Pollution Inspectorate transferred to the Department of the Environment on 1 April 1987.
[3] On 1 October 1989 the Mines and Quarries Inspectorates were separated.
[4] Include those working outside their Inspectorates on eg line management duties, contributing to policy or technical standards work.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much money was received by the Health and Safety Executive for each financial year since 1979; and how much was asked for by the Health and Safety Executive in each of those years.

Mr. Nicholls: Gross financial provision to the Health and Safety Commission for each financial year since 1979, expressed at 1989-90 price levels, is as follows:

1979-80	108,363
1980-81	121,934
1981-82	122,363
1982-83	118,265
1983-84	122,426
1984-85	119,576
1985-86	119,000
1986-87	116,315
1987-88	117,718
1988-89	117,086
1989-90	118,290

Figures have been adjusted for purposes of comparison, to remove provision during 1981-82 to 1984-85 for HSE's dispersal to Bootle and provision for the industrial air pollutant inspectorate until it was transferred to the Department of the Environment in 1987.

Discussions regarding funding for the Health and Safety Commission are confidential and take place in the context of the annual public expenditure survey.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of staff employed by the Health and Safety Executive on 1 December 1979, 1 January 1980 and 1 December 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: The total number of staff, including casuals, employed by the Health and Safety Executive on 1 December 1979, 1 January 1980 and 1 December 1989 was as follows:

1 December 1979	1 January 1980	1 December 1989
4,226	4,206·5	3,682

Women's Employment

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what submissions he has made to the European Commission, whether via normal interdepartmental channels or directly to the European Commission, to seek continuation of the present level of funding plus allowance for inflation for women's employment and workshop schemes; and what response has been received.

Mr. Eggar: The level of funding for these programmes will depend on the Commission's European social fund allocation to the United Kingdom and the priorities of its Community support framework for objectives 3 and 4 of the funds. The Commission has announced annual allocations for the United Kingdom for 1990-1992 some 19 per cent. lower than in 1989, and has yet to agree its Community support framework. When it does my Department will seek equitable allocations for all United Kingdom programmes according to the needs of our labour market.

Technical and Vocational Education Initiative

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the responsibility of the training and enterprise councils for the continued development of the technical and vocational education initiative.

Mr. Eggar: All training and enterprise councils will be working closely with their local education authorities to help develop and implement the technical and vocational education initiative. The LEA is contracted to deliver TVEI by the Training Agency.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the relationship between the local careers service and the local training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Eggar: In drawing up its business plan every TEC will want to consult the careers service to ensure that the training needs of young people in the local area will be met.

Tourism

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish a table showing the sums of money paid out in section 4 grants to the tourist industry in each of the last five years.

Mr. Nicholls: The total section 4 assistance paid out by the English Tourist Board to tourism projects in England was:

Financial year	£ million
1985-86	7·81
1986-87	9·50
1987-88	11·86
1988-89	13·19

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Breath Testing

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Attorney-General if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham), on 5 December, Official Report, column 131, he will set out the grounds on which a police officer may stop a motor vehicle.

The Attorney-General: For the purposes of my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East on 5 December, I had in mind the power contained in section 163 of the Road Traffic Act 1988. The divisional court has ruled that the police, in the exercise of powers under section 163 of the Road Traffic Act 1988, are not prohibited from the random stopping of cars provided that the officer does not behave oppressively or capriciously.

Trials (Delays)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Attorney-General what is the longest period in recent years between offence and trial; and if he will give details of the case.

The Attorney-General: Statistics relating to the period of the time between the date of an offence and the date of a trial are not collected. Accordingly, the information which is sought is not readily available and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Nursing Homes

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he takes to ensure that private and voluntary residential and nursing homes charge fees at a reasonable level.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The levels of fees charged are a matter between proprietors and residents or their relatives.

Residential Care

Mr. Ronnie Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown of board and lodging expenditure for residential care accommodation in Northumberland in the last financial year.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information in the form requested is not available.

Transitional Payments

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many transitional payments have been lost as a result of a new claim being made; and what is the saving in benefit payments.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that information is not collected in the form requested.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many outside accountancy firms are employed by his Department; whether such employment is subject to any guidelines; and whether he takes steps before employing an accountancy firm to discover whether that firm has been censured by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors in their inquiries under the Companies Act.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Six outside accountancy firms have been employed by the Department since April 1989 on work which is normally undertaken by their management consultancy divisions. Employment is subject to central guidance and guidelines prepared by the Department. The integrity and status of firms is taken fully into account during the competitive selection process.

Residential Homes

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to determine the number of elderly persons who are (a) residents of independent sector residential nursing homes and (b) in receipt of benefit and unable to meet the full costs of that accommodation and are being subsidised by relatives to the extent of (i) up to £10 weekly, (ii) £10 to £20 weekly and (iii) above £20 weekly.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The fees residents contract to pay for the services they receive in independent homes are a matter between the resident (or his or her relatives) and the home. In those cases where the agreed fees exceed the level of help available through income support, payments can be made from other sources towards the shortfall and these are ignored in calculating benefit entitlement.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many 16 and 17-year-olds are currently denied benefit for not taking up YTS places at the Durham office.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information is not collected because refusal to take up the offer of a place on a youth training scheme need not, of itself, deny benefit to 16 and 17-year-olds.

Social Fund

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the percentage rate of refusals for (a) community care grants, (b) budgeting loans, (c) crisis loans and (d) total, for each month of the operation of the social fund since April 1988; and what he estimates the future percentage rate of refusals to be between now and April 1990.

Mr. Scott: Details of the refusal rates for the three types of payment are in the Library. The total refusal rate for the three types of payment can be derived from the numbers of applications decided and awards made which are also available in the Library. Estimates of future refusal rates are not available.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give for each year since 1978 the grants for simple insulation measures made available under single payments and the social fund.

Mr. Scott: The information that is available is shown in the table.

Single payments for draughtproofing

	Total amount paid £	Number of payments
December 1981	14,526	584
December 1982	55,940	2,586
December 1983	181,337	8,921
December 1984	608,317	23,544
February 1986	1,827,932	63,503
May 1987	4,488,535	128,255

Source: Annual Statistical Inquiry.

1. Single payments commenced in November 1980 and the first data were collected in December 1981.
2. The data relate to all payments made during the 12 months prior to the inquiry. However, they exclude payments made to claimants who ceased to receive supplementary benefit prior to the date of the inquiry, therefore the figures quoted may be an undercount of the actual payments made.
3. Breakdown of single payments for 1987-88 is not available.
4. Since April 1988, provision for draughtproofing has been made mainly through Community Insulation Projects funded by the Training Commission, now the Training Agency. Payments for simple measures may also be available from the social fund.

Halliburton Limited

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether, pursuant to the undertaking in the Under-Secretary of State's reply to the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton on 25 July, Official Report, column 641, and her letter dated 6 September, reference POS (3)2487/51, he will now instruct his overseas branch to approach the liaison officer in Italy in order to establish (a) whether Halliburton Manufacturing and Services Limited or any of its related companies paid the correct tax and social security contributions in Italy in respect of Mr. A., and (b) whether any prosecution against the company in question has been undertaken by the Italian authorities.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The overseas branch of the Department has no jurisdiction over any action that may be taken by the Italian authorities. However, inquiries have been made with the authorities in that country and they have advised that they are pursuing the question of payment of contributions with the company. They are not, as yet, in a position to give any more information.

Income Support

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many income support claimants will be removed from transitional protection in April 1990 but will not benefit fully from the uprating announced on 25 October because their weekly income will not increase by the full amount of the uprating.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Based on the May 1988 annual statistical it is estimated that there will be 280,000 such claimants.

Community Charge Benefit

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate what proportion of individuals have taken up their entitlement to community charge benefit in Scotland and in each region in Scotland.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Up-to-date figures for those receiving community charge rebates will be available shortly and I will write to the hon. Member. Estimates of those entitled to community charge rebates can be obtained only when data from the relevant family expenditure survey become available.

Pensions

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of pensioner households have been dependent on state pensions and benefits for at least 75 per cent. of their income in each of the last 10 years.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 7 December 1989]: The latest information available in the form requested is taken from the 1986 family expenditure survey. Information up to that date is as follows:

Year	Per cent
1979	62
1980	61
1981	61

Year	Per cent
1982	61
1983	59

1986	58

Note: A pensioner tax unit is a single pensioner or a married couple where the man is over pension age.

DEFENCE

Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many contracts over £92,500 have been let by his Department in the 1988-89 financial year and in the current financial year to date; and how many of these were (a) automatically renewed and (b) open to competition by advertisement throughout the European Community.

Mr. Neubert: The number of contracts awarded by the Ministry of Defence and covered by the provisions of the EC Supplies Directive, for which the current threshold is £142,000 (or £92,000 if the requirement is also covered by the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade), was 503 in calendar year 1988. Of these, 396 were awarded following advertisement in the EC Official Journal and 107 were considered to be exempt from advertising and may have been awarded to the previous suppliers. The figures for calendar year 1989 will not be available until early 1990. Figures could only be provided on a financial year basis at disproportionate cost; The EC statistics for which MOD figures are kept being collected on a calendar year basis.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many outside accountancy firms are employed by his Department; whether such employment is subject to any guidelines; and whether he takes steps before employing an accountancy firm to discover whether that firm has been censured by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors in their inquiries under the Companies Act;

(2) how many outside accountancy firms are employed by his Department; whether such employment is subject to any guidelines; and whether he takes steps before employing an accountancy firm to discover whether that firm has been censured by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors in their inquiries under the Companies Act.

Mr. Neubert: Two outside acountancy firms are currently employed by the Ministry of Defence on accountancy type tasks. Their employment accords fully with current guidelines. The firms themselves were subject to a full and rigorous scrutiny before being contracted by the Department to carry out the tasks in question.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he can give of the number of nuclear tests carried out by the United Kingdom, the United States of America, the Soviet Union, France, China and other countries in each year since 1985 inclusive.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on Friday 15 December at column 883.

Tucano

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Tucano aircraft have been delivered to the Royal Air Force; and what is the percentage performance status of the contract.

Mr. Alan Clark: Thirty-one aircraft had been delivered to the RAF by 30 November 1989. The percentage performance status of the contract is 39 per cent.

Mentor Interactive Training

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contracts have been placed with Mentor Interactive Training.

Mr. Alan Clark: Mentor Interactive Training has a number of contracts to provide computer based and interactive video training facilities to several MOD training establishments.

BL755 Cluster Bomb

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he intends to place contracts for a replacement of the BL755 cluster bomb.

Mr. Alan Clark: Proposals for the replacement of the BL755 are currently under consideration.

First World War (Executions)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he is giving to the possible exoneration of some 300 British soldiers, executed by firing squad for alleged military indiscipline in world war I; if he will procure a copy of the book "Shot at Dawn" by Julian Putkowski and Julian Sykes for his Department's library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The events covered in the book "Shot at Dawn" by Julian Putkowski and Julian Sykes must be seen in their historical context. The use of the death penalty in world war I was governed by a penal code which reflected the attitudes of the time. Those attitudes have changed but it would be wrong to judge the historical events of 75 years ago against current attitudes and perceptions. There are no plans to re-open the cases of those men executed. Two copies of the book are held in the Ministry of Defence library.

Operations (Western Europe)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the total numbers of British forces, planes and tanks deployed, by country, in western Europe, and the equivalent figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The numbers of United Kingdom regular forces deployed, by country, in western Europe as at 1 April 1989 are as follows:

Deployment of United Kingdom regular forces, by country, in Western Europe, as at 1 April 1989

Country	Total
German Federal Republic (excluding West Berlin)	64,294

The equivalent figures for each year since 1979 until 1988 are not held in the same detail and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. I am able, however, to offer figures of United Kingdom forces deployed, broken down between the Federal Republic of Germany and elsewhere in western Europe. They are as follows:

Deployment of United Kingdom regular forces in the Federal Republic of Germany and elsewhere in Western Europe 1979-88

Year	Federal Republic of Germany	Elsewhere in Western Europe	Total
1979[1]	64,618	5,580	70,298
1980	64,713	5,847	70,560
1981	69,109	6,051	75,160
1982	70,493	6,237	76,730
1983	67,424	6,031	73,455
1984	65,605	6,550	72,155
1985	66,586	6,343	72,929
1986	66,918	5,982	72,900
1987	66,836	6,328	73,164
1988	66,750	6,450	73,200

[1] 1 July.

The figures cover all United Kingdom regular forces, male and female. Army personnel from BAOR on emergency tours in Northern Ireland are added back to the Federal Republic of Germany numbers but personnel recorded as on short tours elsewhere are not included.

All United Kingdom regular army armoured and armoured reconnaissance regiments within western Europe are based in BAOR. The figures for numbers of regiments deployments in BAOR since 1979 are shown in the next table. It is not our policy to give more detailed information on numbers of tanks deployed in particular locations.

Numbers of United Kingdom regular army armoured and armoured reconnaissance regiments deployed in BAOR 1979 to 1989

1979	8	5	13
1980	8	5	13
1981	9	4	13
1982	9	4	13
1983	9	4	13
1984	10	3	13
1985	11	2	13
1986	11	2	13
1987	11	2	13
1989	12	2	14

RAF front line units within western Europe are based in the Federal Republic of Germany. There were 12 squadrons of aircraft deployed in RAF Germany between 1979 and 1982, 13 from 1983 to 1985, 14 in 1986 and 15 from 1987 to the present day. It is not our policy to give more detailed information on numbers of aircraft deployed in particular locations.

Military Advisers

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the total numbers, by country, of British service personnel stationed in non-North Atlantic Treaty Organisation countries as advisers; what is the period for which they are stationed; and what are the equivalent figures for each of the past five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Some 550 service personnel are on loan or seconded to the Governments of 33 countries outside the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation. Details about specific countries are generally in confidence between Her Majesty's Government and the Governments of the countries concerned.

Greenham Common

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to return the land at Greenham common to public use; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Newbury (Sir M. McNair-Wilson) on 13 April 1989 at column 653.

Earnings

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out (a) the percentage in real-term increases and (b) the actual percentage increase in the pay of the following in each year since 1964 (i) Army private, (ii) Army sergeant, (iii) Army WOII, (iv) second lieutenant, (v) captain and (vii) lieutenant-colonel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I regret that the available records do not enable the question to be answered for years prior to 1970.

Since the introduction of the military salary in April 1970, the average increases in armed forces' pay for all ranks compared with the retail price index have been:

1971	[1]—	9·4
1972	10·0	7·1
1973	6·5	9·1
1974	13·0	16·0
1975	29·5	24·2
1976	9·6	16·5
1977	5·0	15·9

Pay revew in	Equivalent percentage increase for full year	Retail price index
1978	13·0	8·2
1979	32·5	13·5
1980	16·8	18·0
1981	10·3	11·9
1982	6·1	8·6
1983	7·2	4·8
1984	[2]4·9	5·0
1985	7·1	6·1
1986	[3]5·6	3·4
1987	4·9	4·1
1988	6·4	4·9
1989	6·8	n/a

[1] There was no formal review in 1971 but an interim award of 7 per cent. was made in August 1971.
[2] A staged increase, the full amount awarded was 7·6 per cent.
[3] A 7·5 per cent. increase deterred until 1 July 1986.
n/a Not yet available.

It would not be possible to break the figures down to show percentage increases in pay for each of the ranks requested without disproportionate cost.

Belize

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total cost in the latest year for which figures are available of the British garrison in Belize, including assistance in the Belize defence force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The estimated cost of maintaining a garrison in Belize in 1989-90 is £29 million. It is not our practice to disclose the total cost in military assistance to individual countries.

Air Miss (Tranent)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to send a copy of the report of the joint air miss working group on the incident involving a military aircraft and a civil passenger flight over Tranent on the evening of 2 August to the hon. Member for East Lothian as soon as that report becomes available.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will send a copy of the report as soon as it is available.

Colonel Richard Lea

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on which occasions Colonel Richard Lea has been suspended from duty since June 1984; and what were the reasons for suspension.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not the practice to comment on cases which involve disciplinary action taken against individuals who are no longer serving.

Tornado

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current cost of training a Tornado pilot.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The current cost of training a Tornado pilot to the point where he joins an operational squadron is approximately £4·4 million.

Royal Ordnance

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether in the last 10 years he or his predecessors, either by direction or informally, secured changes in the accounting conventions followed by Royal Ordnance or Royal Naval dockyards, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: After 13 years of operation as a trading fund the Royal Ordnance was privatised from 1 April 1987. The Royal Naval dockyards were vote funded until April 1987 when they were transferred to commercial management. During these periods the broad accounting conventions followed were those required by legislation and consequential regulations appropriate to their status.

WE177

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 30 November, Official Report, column 357, what amounts of money have been paid to (a) British Aerospace and (b) Hunting Engineering in connection with the study of possible procurement options for the replacement of the WE177 free-fall nuclear bomb.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information requested is commercially confidential.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 30 November, Official Report, column 357, what is the nature of the arrangements that have been concluded with the United States Government enabling an exchange of information on the subject of the study of possible replacement options for the WE177 nuclear bomb.

Mr. Alan Clark: The arrangements are in the form of a memorandum of understanding concerning co-operation on a tactical air-to-surface missile feasibility study.

Thailand

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 30 November, Official Report, column 358, what was the annual number of visits made by British service personnel to Thailand for each year over the last four years; and what was the purpose of each of these visits.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to the hon. Member.

Cambodia

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 30 November, Official Report, column 357, whether any assessment has been made of the ability of the Khmer People's National Liberation Front and the National Sihanoukist Army to control in an appropriate manner classified information that they receive.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) on 7 November at column 543.

Staff (Length of Service)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average length of service of (a) industrial and (b) non-industrial staff employed by his Department.

Mr. Neubert: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Civilian Staff (Overtime)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total amount of overtime that has been paid out to all his Departments' civilian staff for each year for the last 10 years.

Mr. Neubert: I will write to the hon. Member.

Chieftain Tank

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what importance he attaches to cost-effectiveness in the choice of a replacement for the Chieftain tank.

Mr. Alan Clark: Cost-effectiveness is one of the principal factors under consideration in the choice of the next generation main battle tank.

HEALTH

Ambulance Service

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost of running each ambulance service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested, derived from the 1988-89 annual accounts of the regional health authorities (RHAs) and district health authorities in England which manage and account for these services, is shown in the table.

Total—England	306,282,714

Notes:

1. The figures are provisional (as yet subject to audit).
2. The South West Thames Regional Health Authority accounts for all the expenditure relevant to the London Ambulance Service. Generally the other Regional Health Authorities shown manage and account for the service provided to particular conurbations within their respective regions.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department's evaluation of the Cornwall air ambulance service includes the possible consequences for the service of the granting of self-governing status to hospitals from the jurisdiction of the Cornwall and Isles of Scilly health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There is no reason to suppose tht the possible NHS trust status of the hospitals served by the Cornwall air ambulance will affect either its need or effectiveness.

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the criteria for assessing the skills of emergency ambulance staff required to use paramedical skills gained from extended training to National Health Service training authority standard; what comparison has been made with payments made to other National Health Service staff using paramedical skills; and in offering an additional £500 to emergency ambulance staff, what accounrt has been taken of the amount of overtime they are obliged to work.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Selected, qualified ambulance staff who volunteer for extended training, are trained and certified as fit to practice in the skills of extended ambulance aid by NHS consultants. They must requalify annually. The objective of this training is to save life and reduce morbidity, and mortality. A clinical audit carried out in 1988 indicated that of 28,000 patients who received some form of ambulance aid, some 95 per cent. were still alive on arrival at hospital. There are no comparable payments made to other NHS staff. The additional £500 to be paid to fully qualified staff will be part of the annual salary and will count in full when calculating overtime and other benefits.

Prescriptions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table, using the PACT database, showing the expenditure on prescriptions for each family practitioner committee area, together with the totals for each National Health Service region for the 1988-89 financial year; and if he will express that expenditure as a figure per head of population for each area and region.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested cannot be derived from PACT but is available to the Department as set out in the table.

The figures include prescriptions dispensed by retail chemists, applicance contractors and dispensing doctors.

Total cost includes the basic price of the drug less discount plus dispensing costs and fees.

Figures are based on OPCS estimates of resident populations for mid year 1988.

Health Spending

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is (a) the average and (b) the range of expenditure per patient between general practitioner practices in each family practitioner committee area of the Northern health region in the year 1988-89, using the PACT database.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information about the average and range of prescribing costs can only be made available without disproportionate expense for the last quarter. This is set out in the table. This information cannot be directly derived from PACT which is not a database.

Notes:

1. The figures are based on patient list sizes of 500 or more of prescribing doctors within the FPC. Lists of less than 500 and of dispensing doctors are not included.
2. The figures are net ingredient cost (basic price) of prescriptions dispensed in response to prescriptions written by practices within the FPC. They take no account of discount, dispensing costs or fees and therefore do not represent actual expenditure.
3. The FPCs are divided into three streams for reporting purposes. Each stream has a different quarterly cycle. Aggregated annual data is not available.

Hypothermia

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many old age pensioners have died as a result of hypothermia in each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: The information is as follows:

Number of deaths with mention of hypothermia on the death certificate for males aged 65 and over, and females aged 60 and over, in England and Wales from 1979 to 1988.

Year	Number of Deaths

Pharmaceutical Products

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to bring an end to the differential pricing of pharmaceutical products within the member countries of the European Community with a view to ending the current practice of parallel importing of such products from Europe.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Differential pricing of pharmaceutical products between EC member states results from a variety of factors. The issue is being addressed by the Community through the implementation of directive 89/105/EEC, which is concerned with transparency of pharmaceutical pricing arrangements. Parallel importing, which reflects different price levels in different countries, results from the establishment of a single European market with free movement of goods between member states, which the Government fully support. Parallel imports of medicines which satisfy United Kingdom standards as to their safety, quality and efficacy can be expected to continue so long as there are significant pricing disparities.

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will seek to introduce legislation to extend the patent life of pharmaceutical products by a period which would further encourage innovation and better enable research based pharmaceutical companies to recoup their research and development costs on new inventions before they are exploited by non-innovative companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply.

I fully appreciate that the pharmaceutical industry invests substantially in research and development in this country and that effective patent protection is important to enable that investment to be recouped and to encourage further innovation. I am also aware of preliminary proposals for legislation under consideration within the EC Commission which would have the effect of extending the term of patents for pharmaceutical products. We are carefully considering these proposals in terms of their likely impact not only on the pharmaceutical industry, research-based and generic, but also on the price and availability of pharmaceuticals in this country.

Environmental Policies

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the key aspects of health authorities' environmental policies and practices which he monitors.

Mr. Freeman: Health authorities are responsible for monitoring their environmental policies and practices. The Department monitors as the need arises for all or individual authorities.

Radiation

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 12 December (1) what numbers of claims for excessive dosage of radiation have been settled; what ranges of payments have been made; and how many cases remain to be settled;

(2) in respect of patients damaged by excessive radiation treatment at the Royal Devon and Exeter hospital, if he will list how many settlements have been made, how many settlements remain to be made and what is the highest and the lowest settlement made to date;

(3) if he will list the number of payments and the total of payments made to staff who were removed from their posts following these overdoses.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: These are all matters for the Exeter health authority and, as far as they affect patients, for their representatives. Two physicists, who were dismissed following the incidents, received severance payments, the details of which are confidential to the two parties involved.

Schoolchildren (Diet)

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health why he has decided not to accompany the publication of his report on "The Diets of British Schoolchildren" by a press conference; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: It is not the usual practice of the Department to hold press conferences or press briefings on every occasion that a report is published. Publication of reports is accompanied by a press release relayed to all national newspapers and other media together with an extensive mailing to a range of magazines. Such a press release accompanied publication of this report in June 1989.

Sugars

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) why it was decided that the publication of his Department's report on sugars and health would not be accompanied by a press conference; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether the publication of the COMA report on sugar and health was accompanied by a press conference.

Mr. Freeman: A press briefing, open to all journalists, was held on Tuesday 12 December on publication of the report of the panel on dietary sugars.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what weight he gave to Professor Don Naismith's participation in a sugar industry deputation against the British Medical Association's view on sugar consumption when considering his appointment to the COMA panel on sugars and health; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what weight he gave to Professor Harry Keen's speeches on sugar industry platforms and his research funding from the sugar industry when considering his appointment to the COMA panel on sugars and health; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what weight he gave to Professor John Durnin's speeches on sugar industry platforms and his participation in a sugar industry deputation against the British Medical Association's view on sugar consumption, when considering his appointment to the COMA panel on sugars and health; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Government's chief medical officer takes great care when choosing members for the committee on medical aspects of food policy (COMA) and its panels to ensure that advice is comprehensive, balanced and objective. The panel on dietary sugars, consisting of 12 members, was chosen to take account of the whole spectrum of scientific opinion regarding sugars and health. The report produced by the panel was agreed by all panel members.

I understand that Professor Naismith was not a member of the deputation to which the hon. Member refers.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, by London health authority, the current number of beds taken out of use for budgetary purposes and the equivalent numbers for each year since 1983.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not available centrally.

NHS Reform

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money has been spent on publicising and implementing the Government's plans for the National Health Service prior to the Second Reading of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The estimated cost of informing the public about the Government's plans to improve the Health Service is £450,000. A further £2,110,000 is estimated to have been spent on informing people working for the NHS. £85 million has been allocated to assist the implementation of the proposals in the financial year 1989-90. It is not possible to distinguish expenditure made before the Second Reading of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill.

Bed and Breakfast

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many (a) families and (b) individuals he estimates will spend the 1989 Christmas holiday period in bed and breakfast accommodation in England and Wales other than as tourists;

(2) how many (a) families and (b) people he estimates spent the Christmas holiday in bed and breakfast accommodation in England and Wales in each of the years 1983 to 1988 inclusive, other than as tourists;

(3) how many children he estimates spent the Christmas holiday period in bed and breakfast accommodation in England other than as tourists during each of the years 1983 to 1988.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: These are questions for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors he has identified within the process of food production as making a significant contribution to the increased number of food poisoning cases reported in each of the last four years: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Food poisoning organisms can enter the food production chain at any point during processing, distribution, sale and consumption. The food industry has a legal responsibility to ensure that food produced and sold is fit for human consumption.

The increase in the number of reported cases may reflect in part both heightened public awareness of food poisoning and recent changes in the system for recording and collating data operated by the public health laboratory service.

We have sought advice from the committee on the microbiological safety of food on the increasing incidence of foodborne illness.

Influenza Vaccine

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make it his policy to ensure that in case of influenza vaccine shortage, groups seen to be medically at risk receive priority;

(2) what priorities for vaccination he has accorded to hospital nurses and doctors and hospital patients.

Mr. Freeman: The Department's memorandum "Immunisation Against Infectious Disease" carries advice on those individuals where protection by influenza immunisation should be considered because of special risk. These include health service staff, those suffering from certain illnesses, and the elderly and children over four years of age living in residential homes and long-stay hospitals, where use of the vaccine is not contraindicated. This advice was confirmed in the chief medical officer's letter issued on 19 September. Both documents were sent to all doctors.

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he took to ensure sufficient influenza vaccine prior to the present outbreak.

Mr. Freeman: The joint committee on vaccination and immunisation met on 23 March 1989 to discuss the requirements for influenza vaccine for the 1989-90 season. Manufacturers were contacted during April 1989 to obtain details of the estimated number of doses of vaccine which would be made available for the United Kingdom market, and to ensure that a buffer stock would be available to the Department of Health for allocation to users if necessary. Negotiations with the manufacturers were completed by the middle of June 1989. Advice to general practitioners giving details on the use of the vaccine, and categories considered to be "at risk" was issued on 19 September 1989, prior to the commencement of the normal vaccination programme in October 1989. When during the last few days the recorded incidence of influenza cases showed a considerable increase over the corresponding figures recorded during 1988, manufacturers were contacted immediately to negotiate further supplies of the vaccine.

Hospital Funding

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what special funding is provided by his Department to assist hospitals in the proximity of airports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: None. It is for health authorities to determine how the resources available should be distributed to their hospitals in line with national policy guidelines and their assessment of local needs and priorities.

Cornwall Air Ambulance Service

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what resources his Department are providing to evaluate the Cornwall air ambulance service; and when he expects the evaluation to be finalised.

Mr. Freeman: The Department will be evaluating the Cornwall service as part of a larger evaluation of helicopter ambulances. The evaluation, which will be undertaken by one of the Department's funded units will be adequately resourced and will begin in spring 1990 and run on to early 1994.

Ophthalmology Consultants

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of consultants in ophthalmology in each district health authority in England.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Cataracts

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of people currently awaiting cataract operations in each district health authority in England.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

Doctors and Dentists (Pay)

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he has any plans to revise the evidence relating to deprivation payments given to the Doctors and Dentists Pay Review Body by his Department; whether he intends submitting new evidence; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he intends to remove deprivation payments from the remit of the Doctors and Dentists Pay Review Body.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There is a long standing agreement between the parties concerned that the contents of the evidence to the Doctors and Dentists Pay Review Body are not made public before the Government have announced their decisions on the recommendations made by the review body.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he is expecting the Doctors and Dentists Pay Review Body to report; and when he will be announcing his decisions on their recommendations.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Doctors and Dentists Pay Review Body has been asked to report to my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister, in time for decisions to be announced before the start of the next financial year.

GP Contract (Kent)

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will reconsider the general practitioner contract negotiated locally in Kent.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The GPs' new contract is a national contract applying to all GPs in Great Britain.

ENVIRONMENT

Recycled Paper

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will take steps to ensure that all public inquiries established by Her Majesty's Government publish as high a proportion as possible of their documents on recycled paper; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Government Departments already use recycled paper for a range of document production, including some publications such as public inquiry reports.

There are a number of technical constraints which currently prevent a wider application of recycled paper. To overcome these constraints, working groups representing Government Departments and individual suppliers have been established to draw up specification standards for recycled papers, particularly in high volume areas.

Monofilament Nets

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will raise the question of nylon monofilament nets and their effects on the populations of dolphins, porpoises and other cetaceans with other European Environment ministers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Measures to enable better protection of cetacean populations are among the topics being discussed in preparation for the third north sea conference in March 1990. Better information on interaction between fishing activity and cetaceans is one of the research needs identified, but I understand that there is no evidence at present to suggest that the use of monofilament fishing nets is posing a significant problem for cetacean populations in United Kingdom waters. The European Community is already pursuing a co-ordinated approach to the subject of pelagic drift netting on the high seas which has given rise to great concern.

Groundwork Foundation (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to establish a groundwork foundation and trust in Nottingham; how it will be financed; what is its purpose; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Groundwork Foundation is currently discussing with the local authorities in Nottingham the possibility of establishing a groundwork trust in the city. The proposal is still in its early stages and the area to be covered by the trust has not yet been decided. The core costs of groundwork trusts are funded by my Department, local authorities and the private sector. The Groundwork Foundation has allocated £40,000 in 190-91 to the proposed Nottingham groundwork trust from funds provided by the Department. I understand that the level of financial support from the local authorities and the private sector is still to be determined. The role of the trust will be to bring together the public, private and voluntary sectors in Nottingham to tackle the area's environmental problems for the long term benefit of the local community.

Air Pollution

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make information available about levels of air pollution in urban areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Following the incident of elevated ozone levels in the summer, the Government decided to make available the data collected on the Warren Spring laboratory ozone measurement network on a daily basis during incidents. We have now decided following recent adverse winter conditions that levels of nitrogen dioxide (NO_2), carbon monoxide (CO) and sulphur dioxide (SO_2) collected in the same way will similarly be made available. A daily summary will be issued when any one of the WHO guidelines is exceeded. These are:

SO_2 : 122 parts per billion (ppb)
CO : 25 parts per million (ppm)
NO_2 : 210 ppb.

This is a further example of our determination to improve public access to environmental information. Levels of these pollutants reached in the United Kingdom fortunately do not pose significant threats to human health and we do not, of course, want to alarm people unnecessarily. Nevertheless we believe that people should have the facts and judge for themselves.

We already have major action in hand to reduce these pollutants. Action on car exhaust emissions agreed in the European Council last June will drastically reduce emissions of CO and oxide of nitrogen from all new cars after the end of 1992 and will ensure a downward trend in the levels of these pollutants in towns and cities. The new standards will cost the motorist some £1·5 billion per year compared with current ones. We are pressing the Commission to bring forward new standards to reduce nitrogen oxide emissions from heavy diesel vehicles. We also have major commitments to reduce emissions of SO_2 and oxides of nitrogen from power stations and are encouraging a few remaining local authorities who have not yet introduced smoke control programmes in affected areas to do so to ensure compliance, by April 1993 at the latest, with European directive limits on smoke and sulphur dioxide.

Air quality standards and criteria for monitoring them are set by European Community directives for smoke and SO_2, for NO_2, and for lead in air. Only one breach (outside derogation areas) has occurred this year. It is of the NO_2 directive, for which the criterion is that a level half that of the WHO guideline must not be exceeded for more than 175 hours in a year. This breach occurred because an indoor source of NO_2 interfered with the monitor in question. No other breach is anticipated.

Council of Environment Ministers

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy at the next Council of European Environment Ministers to propose that the European Commission produce an annual report on the state of the environment in the European Community, to be published in January each year, to be widely publicised and circulated.

Mr. Trippier: Under the proposal to establish a European environment agency, it is stipulated that a report on the state of the environment in the European Community should be published by an agency every three years. Unanimous agreement on the three-year cycle for publishing such a report was reached at the last Council of European Environment Ministers in November.

Recycling

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to introduce legislation requiring planning consents for retail stores to include practicable provision for the collection of re-usable materials.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We do not at present propose to introduce such legislation but planning authorities should bear in mind the benefits to the local community in arranging for such facilities to be considered where practicable at an early stage in the planning of retail facilities.

Pollution

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to give effect to the undertaking given by the hon. Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley) concerning the laying of regulations under the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Act 1989.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We are committed to the implementation of the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Act 1989 and as soon as practicable we will undertake consultation on the regulations necessary to bring the Act into force.

Christmas Novelty Sprays

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he has any plans to ban the use of chlorofluorocarbons as propellants in Christmas novelty sprays; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has on the use of chlorofluorocarbons in novelty Christmas sprays; and if he will advise consumers not to purchase such products.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government are actively seeking international agreement to the phase out of all CFCs by the year 2000. I understand that the aerosol industry intends 90 per cent. of all its products to be CFC free by the end of the year. In the case of these Christmas novelties, I also understand that the alternative propellants available this Christmas are flammable. Because of the way these products are often used, safety factors prohibit the use of flammable material. It is proposed that one of the new generation propellants will be used in these products next year. British consumers have already shown that they can decide for themselves whether they wish to buy products which damage the ozone layer.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to require local planning authorities to consider design energy consumption of buildings when reaching planning decisions.

Mr. Howard: No. Such steps would be unnecessary. The energy consumption aspect of building design is covered by part L of the Building Regulations 1985.

Home Improvement Grants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make home improvement grants claimable by private sector tenants without a repairing lease.

Mr. Howard: No. Where a tenant is not required by the terms of his lease to undertake works of repair or improvement the responsibility will rest with the landlord. It is therefore appropriate for the landlord to apply for grant and for any payment to be based on an assessment of his resources.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply of 11 December, Official Report, column 493, to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, concerning a complaint by Mr. R. Gorman of 14 Welby street, Manchester in which he states that a reply to a letter to him dated 31 July was sent on 14 October, he will investigate why this reply has never reached the right hon. Member; and if he will now ensure that a reply does reach the right hon. Member.

Mr. Chris Patten: Investigations within my Department have shown that the letter was dispatched on 14 October. I apologise for any inconvenience and I am now sending the right hon. Member a copy of my letter.

Toxic Waste (Wath upon Dearne)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will immediately notify the Environmental Protection Agency of the United States of America of the necessity for the toxic waste sent to the United Kingdom by or the behalf of the FMC Company of the United States of America to be returned from Wath upon Dearne, Rotherham, to that company; and whether this action would be in accordance with the current and binding international agreement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Environmental Protection Agency is already aware of our view that the waste at Wath upon Dearne should be returned to the United States of America and are currently considering the scope for action under American legislation. There is no binding international agreement. Although the Basel convention could cover the particular circumstances of this case, it is not yet in force.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether at any time his Department or any public agency has considered the possibility of the disposal in the United Kingdom of the toxic waste bulk at Wath upon Dearne, Rotherham.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: As part of its contingency planning Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has considered possible treatment facilities for the material at Wath upon Dearne. It however remains our policy that this material should be returned to the United States of America.

Animals and Birds (Imports)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many licences for the purposes of importing birds under the CITES regulations were granted in 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Details of all United Kingdom trade in CITES species, including but not separately identifying birds, are submitted annually to the European Commission and are included in the Commission's annual report on trade in endangered species. I have arranged for copies of the 1986 and 1987 reports to be placed in the Library of the House. The United Kingdom figures for 1988 have been submitted to the Commission, but have not yet been published by it.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria are applied by him in granting import licences under CITES; and whether he takes into account the character of the applicant, as demonstrated by relevant criminal convictions concerning importation without a licence or the breaking of previous licences.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Applications for import licences are considered on their merits, in the light of advice from our scientific advisers and in accordance with the EC regulations which implement CITES within the European Community. Failure on the part of an applicant to comply with the conditions of a previous licence, or a conviction for offences under import or other relevant legislation, would be regarded as a relevant factor to be considered if further applications for import licences were submitted.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conveniently available figures he has as to how often identification experts were called out in 1988 to pass judgment on mammals, birds, reptiles and fish in relation to the implementation of the Endangered Species Act.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: At the request of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, my Department arrange for identification experts to be called out on four occasions in 1988 to inspect animals covered by the Endangered Species (Import and Export) Act 1976. However, in implementing the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979, HM Customs and Excise may also seek assistance in identifying species direct from private consultants. Details of the number of such cases are not readily available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Nature Conservancy

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new measures he intends to introduce, following the proposal to break up the Nature Conservancy Council, to enable the United Kingdom Government to meet their obligations under the Berne convention on the conservation of european wildlife and natural habitats.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None. The Government fully meets their obligations under the Berne convention and intend to continue to do so.

Accounting Conventions

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether in the last 10 years he or his predecessors, either by direction or informally, secured changes in the accounting conventions followed by water authorities, the Property Services Agency and the Crown Suppliers, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: Since 1982-83 water authorities' historical cost accounts have been supplemented by Accounts prepared under the current cost convention. There have been no changes in the last 10 years in the accounting conventions followed by the Property Services Agency or the Crown Suppliers.

Somerset House Vaults

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement concerning the sale of the Somerset house vaults to the Quill Group;

(2) on what basis the Property Services Agency offered to rent vaults under Somerset house for £200 per annum or to buy them for £50,000;

(3) what guidance the London residuary body received from his Department concerning its future requirements for storage within the vaults below Somerset house;

(4) when he intends to reply to letters concerning the sale of the Somerset house vaults from the hon. Member for Dagenham, the Quill Group and Mr. Ian Walmsley;

(5) whether the London residuary body made any efforts to sell the vaults below Somerset house before offering them at auction;

(6) which officials of the Property Services Agency represented the Agency at the two auctions involving vaults beneath Somerset house;

(7) why his Department withdrew access to vaults below Somerset house from representatives of the Quill Group;

(8) why officials of the Inland Revenue's accommodation department reversed an earlier assurance that they had no objections to the Quill Group obtaining access to vaults below Somerset House.

Mr. Chris Patten [holding answer 7 December 1989]: I understand that the Quill Group were the successful bidders at an auction in September, but failed to complete the contract with the London residuary body. No guidance was issued by my Department in connection with this sale.

In accordance with their normal practice for the disposal of surplus property the London residuary body entered into discussions with the occupying tenant. The Government have held a lease of these vaults for over 80 years. The Property Services Agency acts on my behalf as tenants. The lease is governed by the Landlord and Tenant Acts and the rent, fixed in 1907, is £185 a year.

In earlier negotiations with the London residuary body a PSA offer of £50,000 for the freehold interest was unsuccessful and both parties agreed that it would be in the best interests of both taxpayers and the London ratepayers, if the vaults were exposed for sale at public auction.

Following their successful purchase at auction in September the Quill Group instructed agents to open negotiations with the PSA for a new lease, the 1907 lease now having expired, seeking a rent of £90,000 per annum.

On being advised by the auctioneers that the vaults were to be auctioned again on 4 December, the PSA's professional decision as prudent managers of the Government Estate was to take this further opportunity to purchase and, on this occasion, it was successful.

Both auctions were attended by the professional head of the estates services branch of the PSA's London region estates division, accompanied by a principal grade estate surveyor.

I am writing to the hon. Member explaining these complex matters more fully and I shall also send him a copy of the letter which the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Chope) sent to Mr. Harris of the Quill Group on 30 November.

Home Insulation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses and flats have been subjected to insulation measures under the home insulation scheme for each year since the home insulation scheme started and for each region and the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 12 December 1989]: The number of grants paid under the homes insulation scheme for 1986, 1987, 1988 and the first two quarters of 1989 appear in table 2.21(d) of "Housing and Construction Statistics Part 2", No. 38; figures for earlier years are in table 7.9 of "Housing and Construction Statistics 1978-1988". Copies of these publications are in the Library.

Pollution Inspectorate

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many inspectors have left Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution (a) since its formation, (b) since 1 January 1988 and (c) since 1 January 1989.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 13 December 1989]: Seven inspectors have left Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in total since its formation including six since 1 January 1989.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many inspectors were employed by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution (a) at its formation, (b) on 1 January 1988, (c) on 1 January 1989 and (d) at the latest available date; and what should be its establishment.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 13 December 1989]: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution employed 75 professional staff at its formation; 90 on 1 January 1988; 100 on 1 January 1989 and 105 at present. The inspectorate's complement is 135 professional posts.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of the inspectors at Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution have been employed by the inspectorate since its formation.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 13 December 1989]: A total of 35 inspectors have been recruited into Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution since its formation.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of the inspectors now employed by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution are based in London; and at what centres the other inspectors are based.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 13 December 1989]: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution employs 104 professional staff; 46 professional staff are currently based in London but over half of these will be posted to the new regional offices when they become operational next year. Other staff are based in Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Chelmsford, Chester, Darlington, East Grinstead, Lancaster, Leeds, Lincoln, Luton, Newcastle-under-Lyme, Preston and Sheffield.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many prosecutions have been instigated by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in 1987, 1988 and 1989 for (a) air pollution and (b) toxic waste disposal.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 13 December 1989]: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution undertook three successful prosecutions for air pollution in 1987-88 and two in 1988-89 (records are kept for financial years). HMIP has no regulatory powers under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 in relation to toxic waste disposal. Enforcement responsibility lies with waste disposal authorities.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the report drafted by the late director of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, Mr. Brian Ponsford.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 13 December 1989]: The report on Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution prepared for the Department's management information system (MINIS 10) was placed in the Library on 15 November.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about staff morale within Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 13 December 1989]: Staff in Her Majesty's Inspectorate are responding in positive and constructive ways to the demands placed on them at a time of fundamental organisational change. This was evident at the inspectors' conference held in late November, and is exemplified by a letter written by inspectors to a national newspaper on 11 December. I appreciate such efforts by staff to dissociate themselves from remarks attributed to unnamed inspectors in recent press reports. The committed professionalism of the staff in the inspectorate plays a vital role in maintaining and improving environmental standards.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's annual report 1988-89 to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 13 December 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on Wednesday 13 December to the hon. Member for Dewsbury (Mr. Taylor) at column 734.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to increase the establishment of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 13 December 1989]: The staff complement of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution was increased from 219 to 240 with effect from 2 October 1989. An additional 10 posts have already been approved for 1990-91 and the objectives of HMIP and the resources it needs to fulfil them effectively are being kept under close review.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effects of the recent reorganisation within Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution on his plans to introduce integrated pollution control.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 14 December 1989]: The reorganisation of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution was intended to facilitate the integration of the four regulatory functions which were combined when it was formed. It provides the organisational structure appropriate for the effective implementation of integrated pollution control. I am pleased that such good progress has been made to date.

Community Charge Video

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress being made in the production of a video on the poll tax in British sign language for deaf people.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 14 December 1989]: The Department has corresponded with four bodies—the Royal National Institute for the Deaf, the British Deaf Association, the British Association of the Hard of Hearing and the Royal Association in Aid of Deaf People—on the potential demand for a video in BSL on the community charge and the most effective way of making it. We await one substantive response.

Community Charge Leaflet

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure that deaf-blind people have access to the information in the poll tax leaflet.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 14 December 1989]: Proposals for making information on the community charge available to the blind through braille and moon, which are currently being pursued with the Royal National Institute for the Blind, should assist some of the deaf-blind. We are considering other means of informing deaf-blind people, such as the production of a video specifically for the deaf.

In addition, carers—including those who care for deaf-blind individuals—are one of the groups we intend to address before the new system comes into effect with information on the community charge benefit scheme and transitional relief.

Environmental Audit

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to conduct an annual environmental audit within his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten [holding answer 14 December 1989]: It is already my policy to take environmental concerns into account in the activities of my Department. I am considering whether procedures to achieve this should be strengthened.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received recent representations from trade unions opposing privatisation of the Property Services Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 15 December 1989]: My right hon. Friend met the PSA trade unions on 26 September. No other direct representations from trade unions have been received.

Sewage Sludge

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the figures for sewage sludge dumped in British coastal waters for each of the last three years.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply.

Disposals to sea of sewage sludge from the United Kingdom under licences issued under part II of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 were as follows:

	'000 tonnes (wet weight)
1986	9,735
1987	9,016
1988	9,856

About 95 per cent. of the content is water.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessments his Department has made as to the environmental impact of dumping sewage sludge in British coastal waters.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply.

The Ministry of Agriculture is responsible for monitoring disposals to sea from England and Wales. An extensive field assessment programme is conducted at each of the designated disposal sites; each site is visited at least biennially although some sites are studied more frequently. In addition, licensees are required to carry out an approved programme of dumpsite monitoring as a condition of their licences. Detailed monitoring reports have been published for a number of sites and copies of these are in the Library. The results of these investigations have shown that the disposal of sewage sludge has caused no detrimental environmental impact at any of the designated sites.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what controls his Department imposes on the heavy metal content of sewage sludge dumped at sea.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply.

Licences to deposit sewage sludge at sea provide for annual limits on the quantity of individual metals in the waste. A requirement is placed on licensees to monitor the composition of sludge as dumped and to report levels to the licensing authority. The composition of sludge is checked directly by sampling by the licensing authority.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce legislation to provide a financial incentive to commercial and industrial firms for the recycling and re-use of materials; and if he has investigated the feasibility of, and problems associated with, the kerbside collection of materials from domestic and commercial refuse for recycling.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We do not intend to introduce such legislation; although proposed legislation on pollution control and waste disposal will provide a market incentive for recycling. We are however contributing, with the Department of Trade and Industry and the Industry Council for Packaging and the Environment, to the evaluation of the UK2000 recycling city project in Sheffield which includes a kerbside collection scheme for recyclable domestic refuse.

ENERGY

Coal Mining (Productivity)

15. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the increase in labour productivity in the coal mining industry since 1983-84.

Mr. Michael Spicer: British Coal's productivity has increased by over 75 per cent. from pre-strike levels.

Greenhouse Effect

18. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a further statement on the report of the Energy Select Committee on the greenhouse effect.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Government's response to the select Committee's report was submitted on 8 November and has since been published by the Committee. We continue to monitor carefully this matter and take decisions accordingly.

35. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment has been made by his Department of the implications for energy policy of global warming caused by the greenhouse effect.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department has produced a report entitled "An Evaluation of Energy Related Greenhouse Gas Emissions and Measures to Ameliorate Them', as a contribution to the work of the intergovernmental panel on climate change. A copy of the report is available in the Library of the House.

Offshore Oil and Gas

19. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the trade unions involved in the offshore oil and gas industry; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State an I met members of the AEU parliamentary group and the AEU executive on 28 November for a discussion on offshore safety.

Electricity Privatisation

20. Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on progress towards his announced timetable for the privatisation of the electricity industry.

42. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the progress of plans for the electricity privatisation share issue and related matters.

Mr. Wakeham: The Government remain on target to complete the privatisation of the industry within this Parliament.

75. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what provisions he has made to ensure a level playing field between fossil fuel industries, including coal, and nuclear fuel supplies to electricity generation subsequent to vesting day.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Coal will continue to be the major fuel for electricity generation for many years to come. The non-fossil fuel obligation will ensure that nuclear power continues to play a strategic role in ensuring security of supply and that renewable sources of energy will be able to fulfil their potential as soon as practicable.

68. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of the total cumulative cost to his departmental public expenditure so far of consultancy, advertising and advice relating to privatisation of the electricity supply industry

Mr. Michael Spicer: The total cumulative cost to my Department (as at 30 November this year) is £12·4 million.

46. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what provisions he has made to ensure a proper valuation of the electricity supply industry's land and property assets before vesting day.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Valuers have been appointed to value the land and property of each of the electricity supply industry bodies.

31. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a further statement on the likely cost implications for major industrial users of the privatisation of electricity.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Major industrial users will be able to negotiate with the supplier or generator of their choice. The introduction of competition should enable such customers to obtain competitive contracts. There will thus be a downward pressure on costs and prices.

Coal Imports

21. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the latest figures for coal imports (a) by countries and (b) by quantity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: During the period January to October 1989, 9·5 million tonnes of coal have been imported into this country. The table gives a breakdown by country of origin.

January to October 1989

Country of origin	Quantity (thousand tonnes)
United States of America	3,879
Australia	1,822
Poland	830
Colombia	682
Canada	622
China	405
South Africa	323
Federal Republic of Germany	225
Netherlands	169
USSR	163
Panama	106
Venezuela	86
Belgium	62
Others	175
Total	9,549

Source: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

59. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the volume of coal imports into the United Kingdom for the current year; and if he will meet the chairman of British Coal to discuss levels of coal imports.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government do not produce estimates of coal imports for the current year. In the period January to October 1989 coal imports were 9·5 million tonnes.

My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of British Coal regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

30. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of the coal burned in the United Kingdom in 1988 was imported.

Mr. Michael Spicer: A total of 11 per cent. of coal burned in the United Kingdom in 1988 was imported.

Electricity Council

22. Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next proposes to meet the chairman of the Electricity Council; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend meets the chairman of the Electricity Council regularly to discuss various matters of mutual interest.

62. Mr. Michael Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of the Electricity Council; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Wakeham: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Leigh (Mr. Cunliffe) today.

Coal Industry (Pollution)

23. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps are being taken to assist the coal industry in reducing environmental pollution and using energy more efficiently.

43. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps are being taken to assist the coal industry in reducing environmental pollution and using energy more efficiently.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government will provide up to £8 million towards the cost of British Coal's work on the topping cycle at Grimethorpe. This offers a 20 per cent. reduction in carbon dioxide emissions compared with coal fired stations which should make a significant contribution to combating the "greenhouse effect".

Sizewell B

25. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of the cost of completion of Sizewell B and the average operating cost per kilowatt hour.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the CEGB. I will ask the chairman to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how frequently he intends to review the ongoing construction costs of Sizewell B.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The CEGB is providing my Department with six-monthly progress reports on Sizewell B, including construction costs. Nuclear Electric will continue this arrangement and has made clear that it is committed to completing the station to time and present cost estimates.

British Coal

26. Mr. Steve Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much the Government have invested in British Coal since 1979.

40. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much the Government have invested in British Coal since 1979.

Mr. Wakeham: Since 1979 the Government have financed over £6·5 billion of new investment in the coal industry and continue to invest at a rate of over £2 million every working day.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy on how many occasions in the past 10 years the auditors of British Coal or the National Coal Board have drawn his attention to inadequacies in their accounts.

Mr. Wakeham: In each of the years 1979-80 to 1988-89 there has been a qualification of the accounts of British Coal by their auditors.

British Coal's accounts have been qualified by its Auditors from 1983-84 to 1988-89 owing to the uncertainty over the recoverability out of future earnings of the total net book amount of the corporation's tangible fixed assets. British Coal's accounts were also qualified from 1983-84 to 1986-87 owing to the uncertainty over the amount of liability arising from future claims for surface damage; and from 1979-80 to 1983-84 over provision for liabilities under the mineworkers' pension scheme and the voluntary early retirement scheme.

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of British Coal; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Wakeham: I meet the chairman of the British Coal Corporation regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

57. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his most up-to-date estimate of the manpower employed by British Coal over the next three years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It is not possible to predict manpower requirements over future years since this will depend on the performance of individual collieries and the success British Coal has in meeting the requirements of its customers. Manpower requirements are however, a matter for British Coal and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

36. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next proposes to meet the chairman of British Coal; and what matters will be discussed.

65. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of British Coal; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Wakeham: I meet the chairman of British Coal regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

Alternative Energy Projects (Cornwall)

27. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the funding of alternative energy projects in Cornwall.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department is funding an extensive renewable energy R and D programme on projects in Cornwall and elsewhere. The major projects in Cornwall include:

The Cornwall Energy Project by Cornwall County Council; The Geothermal Hot Dry Rock Project by the Camborne School of Mines;

The Proposed Wind Farm at Cold Northcott by the Central Electricity Generating Board.

Energy Efficiency

28. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what improvements have been made in energy efficiency in the last 10 years.

32. Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what improvements have been made in energy efficiency in the last 10 years.

73. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what improvements have been made in energy efficiency in the last 10 years.

Mr. Wakeham: The nation has substantially improved its energy efficiency over the last 10 years. Our energy ratio —the amount of primary energy used to produce each £1,000 of gross domestic product—has improved from 1·24 tonnes of coal equivalent in 1979 to 1·01 tonnes of coal equivalent in 1988; and average reduction in energy intensity of 2 per cent. per year.

45. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress is being made with the promotion of energy efficiency in Government Departments.

70. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress is being made with the promotion of energy efficiency in Government Departments.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave to my hon. Friends for Fylde (Mr. Jack) and for Maidstone (Miss Widdecombe) on 13 November 1989 at column 95. The next meeting will take place on 31 January 1990.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give for each year since 1978 the collective estimated expenditure on energy efficiency measures in the domestic sector consistent with the figure of £73 million given for 1987-88 in paragraph 3.7 of the National Audit Office's "National Energy Efficiency", breaking the figure for each year down into assistance for (a) owner-occupiers, (b) private sector tenants and (c) council tenants.

Mr. Wakeham: The main components of £73 million for 1987-88 quoted by the National Audit Office consisted of direct expenditure on domestic energy efficiency measures through the homes insulation scheme and the community insulation programme (the latter also supports training objectives and so cannot be attributed entirely to energy efficiency measures). Expenditure under these schemes is given below for each financial year from 1981-82. A breakdown of the figures in the form requested is not available.

	Homes insulation scheme (£ million)	Community insulation programme (£ million)
1981-82	24·3	n/a
1982-83	30·0	n/a
1983-84	25·5	5·5
1984-85	25·3	8·6
1985-86	28·0	19·4
1986-87	26·5	36·6
1987-88	24·8	45·2
1988-89	9·9	n/a

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the progress since June 1987 of the building research energy conservation support unit in (a) concentrating on the elderly and disadvantaged and (b) private sector housing research and development activities.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Since June 1987 the building research energy conservation unit, working for the Energy Efficiency Office:

1. Has completed 12 demonstration projects to promote more efficient energy use in sheltered accommodation and the refurbishment of older housing.

2. Is currently preparing a number of good practice guides and case studies for low income housing under the best practice programme.

3. Has developed a strategy under the best practice programme designed to achieve large scale improvements in energy efficiency in private sector housing. The results of the first of these initiatives is Wimpey's new "Superspec" home which my right hon. Friend opened earlier this month and which is built to standards considerably beyond those required to meet the 1990 building regulations for energy efficiency.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the relationship between the provision of information on energy efficiency by the privatised electricity distribution boards and the role of the Energy Efficiency Office.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Officials of the Energy Efficiency Office (EEO) have already had discussions with officials of the Office Of Electricity Regulation (OFFER) whose role is to supervise the obligations of licensees to promote energy efficiency under the terms of the Electricity Act 1989.

I have no doubt that the present constructive co-operation between regional energy efficiency offices and electricity boards will continue. For instance REEOs are members of judging panels of competitions on energy efficiency organised by electricity distribution boards. Electricity boards and the EEO frequently co-operate in the sponsorship of seminars and exhibitions on energy efficiency.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) whether the new scheme of grants towards basic insulation measures announced on 22 November will extend to (a) cavity wall insulation and (b) double glazing;

(2) whether the new system of grants for house insulation announced on 22 November will involve contributions to the cost by the recipients of grants.

Mr. Wakeham: Details of the new scheme of grants will be announced in due course.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what conclusions the Energy Efficiency Office has reached about questions of productivity of neighbourhood energy action projects under employment training; and if he will place a copy of its conclusions in the Library.

Mr. Wakeham: The most recently available information on productivity was included in the Neighbourhood Energy Action publication "Energy Efficiency and Employment Training—One Year On". I have asked Neighbourhood Energy Action, from whom the report is publicly available, to send a copy to the hon. Member.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps the Energy Efficiency Office has taken to persuade the cavity wall trade associations to develop and provide to consumers a common protection package backed by insurance guarantees; and if he will introduce legislation to achieve this objective.

Mr. Wakeham: With the encouragement of the Energy Efficiency Office, the Office of Fair Trading and the National Cavity Insulation Association are discussing the production of a revised code of professional practice; it is expected that this will give a wide range of consumer safeguards additional to current arrangements. I am hopeful that agreement can be reached on a satisfactory code without legislation.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish in the Official Report the latest international energy efficiency league table.

Mr. Wakeham: The following table lists IEA member countries in order of energy ratio in 1987, the latest year for which figures are available, measured in tonnes of oil equivalent per $1,000 GDP at 1985 prices.

	Energy ratio
Japan	0·26
Switzerland	0·28
Italy	0·33
Denmark	0·34
West Germany	0·42
United Kingdom	0·43
Spain	0·43
Austria	0·44
United States of America	0·44
Norway	0·46
Australia	0·48
Ireland	0·50
Netherlands	0·51
Sweden	0·54
Belgium	0·55
Greece	0·57
Portugal	0·62
New Zealand	0·63
Canada	0·64
Turkey	0·80
Luxembourg	0·85

Sources: Energy Balances of OECD Countries; OECD Main Economic Indicators.

These energy ratios are determined by many factors, including climate and industrial structure.

16. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any further proposals to promote the more efficient use of energy.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Energy Efficiency Office will continue to promote regularly the adoption of energy efficiency measures through all its programmes.

Neighbourhood Energy Action

33. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next proposes to meet the director of Neighbourhood Energy Action; and what matters will be discussed.

76. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the director of Neighbourhood Energy Action; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend met the director of Neighbourhood Energy Action on 14 November to hear first hand about NEA's work and again on 22 November when he saw first hand, one of the community insulation projects which they help to co-ordinate. He expects to meet the director again shortly, but a date has yet to be arranged.

Electricity Supply

34. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to review the 15 and 25 per cent. limits on the generators' direct sales to electricity supply customers.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I have no plans to do so.

Nuclear Energy

37. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals he has for future research and development of nuclear energy.

Mr. Wakeham: The Government, in conjunction with the nuclear industry, will need to assess future nuclear R and D requirements in the light of the prospects for nuclear power, both nationally and internationally from the mid-1990s.

High-voltage Cables

38. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the health implications of high-voltage cables.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Research into the problem of possible effects on human health of electric and magnetic fields from electricity power lines has failed to demonstrate a clinical effect upon human health from fields at electricity power frequencies.

A considerable worldwide research effort is continuing on the subject. The CEGB has been funding a programme of work over many years, much of it at independent laboratories, and research will continue when the electricity supply industry is privatised.

Officials at the Department of Energy, the Department of Health, and the National Radiological Protection Board are keeping a watch on the research which is under way. We are by no means complacent, but at present we do not see evidence for serious concern.

South of Scotland Electricity Board

39. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of the South of Scotland electricity board; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Wakeham: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Clydesdale (Mr. Hood) on 13 November 1989 at column 14.

53. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next proposes to meet the chairman of the South of Scotland electricity board; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Wakeham: I have no plans at present to meet Mr. Miller.

National Power

41. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chief executive designate of National Power: and what matters were discussed.

64. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next proposes to meet the chief executive designate of National Power; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Wakeham: I regularly meet the chief executive of National Power to discuss matters of common interest.

CEGB

44. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board; and what matters were discussed.

69. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next proposes to meet the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Wakeham: I regularly meet the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board to discuss matters of common interest.

European Fast Reactor

47. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what contribution the United Kingdom will be making to the European fast reactor over the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: The fast reactor programme carried out by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority contributes to R and D work in support of the European fast reactor conceptual design. The United Kingdom is also contributing towards the cost of this conceptual design work.

British Nuclear Fuels plc

48. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of British Nuclear Fuels plc; and what was discussed.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend last met Mr. Harding on 16 November when they discussed a range of matters concerning British Nuclear Fuels plc.

British Gas (Disconnections)

49. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps have been taken by British Gas to ensure that the number of disconnections for debt are kept to a minimum.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The number of British Gas customers disconnected for debt is now lower than at any time since records were first kept in 1977. This reflects the agreement which British Gas reached earlier this year with the Director General of Gas Supply on new methods of debt collection with a view to reducing the number of disconnections. I am sure that Ofgas and the Gas Consumers Council will continue to work with British Gas to ensure that this excellent result continues.

Nuclear Electric plc

50. Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next proposes to meet the chairman-designate of the new Nuclear Electric plc; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Wakeham: I intend to meet the chairman-designate of Nuclear Electric whenever necessary to discuss matters of concern to Nuclear Electric.

Severn Barrage

51. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has reviewed the projected completion date for the Severn barrage in the light of his recent discussions regarding nuclear energy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Further work on the Severn barrage is continuing. This includes some site specific environmental work and a study of the organisation and financing issues for a barrage. Only when this work is complete will it be possible to review projected completion dates.

Home Insulation

52. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what action is being taken to assist low-income households with home insulation.

29. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what action is being taken to assist low-income households with home insulation.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn) earlier today.

Piper Alpha

54. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he anticipates that the inquiry into the Piper Alpha disaster will be concluded.

Mr. Peter Morrison: This is a matter for Lord Cullen.

Nuclear Power

55. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last discussed nuclear power with his French counterpart.

Mr. Michael Spicer: There have been no meetings since that described in the reply my right hon. Friend the Minister of State gave on 10 April at column 328.

Electricity Boards

56. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next proposes to meet the chairmen of the 12 area boards; and what matters will be discussed.

67. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairmen of the 12 area boards; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Wakeham: I meet the area board chairmen regularly to discuss matters of mutual interest.

Association for the Conservation of Energy

58. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met a representative for the Association for the Conservation of Energy; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend met Mr. Norman Adsetts OBE, chairman of the Association for the Conservation of Energy, on 29 November. They reviewed the work which ACE and energy efficiency office have jointly undertaken to promote energy efficiency, such as the current series of joint seminars for industrialists and buildings professionals, and discussed the need to ensure that this constructive co-operation continues.

PWR Stations

60. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many representations he has had to date from local authorities in areas of proposed pressurised water reactor stations regarding requests for compensation for preparing of their submissions on the issue.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The only such representation which my right hon. Friend has received is in relation to the Central Electricity Generating Board (Combwich) Compulsory Purchase Order 1988, into which a public local inquiry commenced on 13 June 1989. Following the CEGB's decision to withdraw the compulsory purchase order a number of parties involved, including the consortium of opposing local authorities, has applied for my right hon. Friend to make an order requiring the CEGB to meet their costs arising from the public local inquiry.

We are awaiting any recommendation the inspector may make to the Secretary of State on the award of costs before proceeding with consideration of these requests. We have writen to all those requesting costs to advise them of this course of action.

UKOOA

61. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next proposes to meet the representatives of the United Kingdom Offshore Operators Association; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I meet the representatives of the United Kingdom Offshore Operators' Association (UKOOA) regularly to discuss matters of mutual interest.

Director General of Electricity Supply

63. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next proposes to meet the Director General of Electricity Supply; and what matters will be discussed.

66. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the Director General of Electricity Supply; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Wakeham: I meet the Director General of Electricity Supply regularly to discuss various matters of mutual interest.

Eastern Europe (Energy Needs)

71. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what advice and assistance is being offered by his Department to the countries of eastern Europe on how they might control and manage their energy needs more effectively.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 8 December at column 444.

In addition the Government have financed a reconnaissance mission led by the consulting arm of CEGB, through the know-how fund to look at the requirements of the electricity supply industry in Poland. It is expected that further assistance will be made available when the recommendations of the report have been considered. We would expect to help other countries with the modernisation of their power industries in accordance with their needs and when funds become available. A know-how fund for Hungary—£25 million over five years—begins operating in April 1990.

Flue Gas Desulphurisation

72. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on Government support for flue gas desulphurisation equipment.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government are committed to ensuring that the sulphur dioxide reduction requirements of the EC large combustion plants directive are met. The retrofitting of power stations with flue gas desulphurisation equipment will assist in achieving this. The choice of equipment to be used is a matter for the industry itself.

Alternative Energy Sources

74. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what measures he is taking to promote the use of alternative energy sources.

Mr. Peter Morrison: We are supporting a major research and development programme aimed at developing commercially viable and environmentally acceptable renewable technologies to contribute to future energy supply. Over £50 million is earmarked for expenditure over the next three years. Our plans to provide a special place in future for non-fossil fuel energy in the context of a privatised electricity supply industry should give a significant boost to renewable sources of energy. Around 600MW of capacity is being set aside exclusively for renewables during the 1990s as part of the non-fossil fuel obligation. There are clear signs that the obligation has already provided considerable encouragement to the development of renewables.

Technology transfer plans have been developed for each technology classed as economically attractive such as passive solar design of buildings and landfill gas. A wide range of promotional material has been produced to aid commercial deployment and raise awareness about the potential of renewable technologies. This includes our "Review" journal, information bulletins, project profiles and summaries of the results of research programme, technical reports, technical workshops and videos.

Gas Industry

77. Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations have been received about opening up competition in the gas industry.

Mr. Wakeham: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran) earlier today.

Fabrication Sector

78. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the value of business opportunities for the United Kingdom fabrication sector within the single European market post-1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: We expect new orders in goods and services on the UKCS in the early 1990s to be between £2·5 billion to £3 billion per annum, of which fabrication represents around 20 per cent. The UKCS will continue to represent some 70 per cent. of the offshore market in the Community. Given the competitiveness of United Kingdom fabricators, I would expect our industry to continue to win a substantial proportion of the work available in the Community.

Electricity Standing Charges

79. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much was raised in electricity standing charges in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the Electricity Council. I shall ask the chairman of the council to write to the hon. Member.

Hinkley Point C

80. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the progress of Hinkley Point C.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Hinkley Point C public inquiry closed on Friday 1 December. It is now for the inspector to prepare his report and submit it to my right hon. Friend.

Low-sulphur Coal

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the level of reserves of low-sulphur coal in Britain.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Coal reserves in England generally have medium to high levels of sulphur—on average about 1·6 per cent. Reserves in parts of Wales and Scotland have a relatively lower sulphur content. Their recoverability is for the British Coal Corporation to assess.

Marchwood Engineering Laboratories

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will reconsider the future of Marchwood engineering laboratories, following his decision not to privatise nuclear power stations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Marchwood site has been allocated to Power-Gen. The Government do not intend to reopen the existing split of assets between National Power and PowerGen.

Wind and Wave Power

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the future of research into wind and wave power.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Energy paper No. 55 "Renewable Energy in the UK: The Way Forward" was published in 1988 and gives our view on the development strategy for the renewable energy technologies to the year 2000, including wind and wave. It remains our intention to carry out the research programme as outlined in the energy paper.

British Gas

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many directives have been issued to British Gas since privatisation of gas on energy efficiency.

Mr. Wakeham: None. However condition 14 of British Gas's authorisation as a public gas supplier requires it to provide guidance to customers on the efficient use of gas. My Department promotes the efficient use of gas and other fuels through the activities of the Energy Efficiency Office, and my officials have regular discussions with British Gas on energy efficiency matters.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with British Nuclear Fuels Limited about feasibility studies of replacement for the Chapelcross and Calder Hall power stations.

Mr. Wakeham: I meet the Chairman of British Nuclear Fuels plc regularly and discuss a range of matters concerning the company. The feasibility study was one of the matters touched upon at my last meeting on 16 November.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any plans to lift the requirement for his consent to be given before any nuclear power station is built in any county in Britain.

Mr. Wakeham: I shall bring into force in due course section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 under which my consent will be necessary before any power station, nuclear or otherwise, of a capacity greater than 50MW, can be constructed in England and Wales. Smaller stations will be subject to the requirements of the Town and Country Planning Acts.

In addition, a licence to install and operate a nuclear reactor must be obtained from the Health and Safety Executive under the Nuclear Installations Act 1965.

The construction of power stations in Scotland is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will direct British Nuclear Fuels Limited to publish details of the feasibility studies it is conducting into replacements for the Chapelcross and Calder Hall power stations.

Mr. Wakeham: The feasibility study is a commercial document and publication will be a matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Energy Labelling

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will introduce legislation to bring in compulsory energy labelling.

Mr. Wakeham: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) on 13 November 1989 at column 95.

Coal Reserves

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his Department's current estimate of the total coal reserves in Britain.

Mr. Wakeham: The British Coal Corporation is responsible for estimating coal reserves. Its estimate of coal in place in the United Kingdom (that is, in seams over 60 cm thick and less than 1,200 m deep, minus coal which has already been worked) is 190 billion tonnes. Strictly recoverable reserves (that is, coal in known coalfields which could be extracted with existing technology) are estimated by the corporation at 45 billion tonnes. The amount of these reserves that would actually be workable would of course depend on economic circumstances at the time. Recoverable reserves from existing mines and certain new mine projects, including the extractable and saleable coal which is sufficiently proved, of adequate thickness and quality, and in a suitable mining environment, are currently assessed at between 3 billion and 5 billion tonnes.

Accounting Conventions

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether in the last 10 years he or his predecessors, either by direction or informally, secured changes in the accounting conventions followed by British Coal, British Gas, any electricity board, the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, British Nuclear Fuels Ltd., Nirex, Amersham International, British National Oil Corporation, Britoil or Enterprise Oil, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: The accounts of British Coal, British Nuclear Fuels, British National Oil Corporation, Britoil, Enterprise Oil, Nirex and Amersham International have been prepared under the historic cost convention throughout the period in question.

Boards in the electricity industry began producing accounts under the current cost convention from 1980-81, as did the Atomic Energy Authority from 1980-81 and British Gas from 1981-82. Previously accounts for these organisations had been prepared under the historic cost convention. The decision to prepare accounts under the current cost convention was taken by the organisations concerned, in the light of best accounting practice at the time.

Halliburton Ltd.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether, following the correspondence and discussions between the Minister of State and the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton, he will now issue instructions that no tenders will be considered by his Department from any subsidiary company of Halliburton Manufacturing and Services Ltd., until (a) its company secretary replies to the further letter sent to him by the hon. Member on 9 October about his constituent Mr. A and (b) the company offers appropriate compensation to Mr. A for all expenses and financial loss suffered by Mr. A since his road accident in Italy in December 1983.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 19 December 1989

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Disclosure Guidelines

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Attorney-General whether his guidelines as to the disclosure of unused material or potential witnesses apply in summary cases and those indictable offences that are to be tried summarily.

Mr. Attorney-General: No; the guidelines apply only to cases to be tried on indictment.

However, in any case, whether tried on indictment or summarily, if the prosecution have taken a statement from a person whom they know can give material evidence but decide not to call him as a witness, they are under a duty to make that person available to the defence and should supply the defence with the witness's name and address.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

USSR (Human Rights)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics regarding the persecution and abuses of human rights suffered by members of the Ukrainian Christian Democratic Front; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We continue to take every opportunity to underline to the Soviet authorities the need to implement early and effective legislative reform which will guarantee the rights of all Soviet citizens. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs will stress this point when he meets Mr. Shevardnadze in London on 19 December.

BBC World Service

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the British Broadcasting Corporation world service to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Sainsbury: We understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for this exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall for a week from 2 April 1990.

San Salvador

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions were taken by Her Majesty's Embassy in San Salvador to alleviate suffering during the recent heavy fighting.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 18 December 1989]: Our chargé has emphasised to the Salvadorean authorities the importance of proper respect for human rights in all circumstances and the need to facilitate relief work. He is making every effort to ensure that British relief workers can pursue their work in safety. On 20 November we gave £100,000 to the International Committee of the Red Cross for emergency relief work in El Salvador.

ENERGY

Commissioners for Energy and Competition

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the European Commissioners for Energy and Competition; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Wakeham: I and my colleagues have contact with these and other Commissioners from time to time and discuss a range of issues.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether the accountancy firms advising the Government on the sale of British Coal have at any time since June 1979 been (a) criticised by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors or (b) criticised by any disciplinary committee of the accountancy profession for lacking in professional conduct, efficiency or competence.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No accountancy firms have so far been appointed to advise the Government on the sale of British Coal.

Press Releases

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many departmental press releases have been issued in the past year; how many have dealt with (a) nuclear energy, (b) coal, (c) oil, (d) gas and (e) renewable energy technologies; and which academic institutions routinely receive these press releases.

Mr. Wakeham: From 1 December 1988 to 12 December 1989 my Department issued 218 press releases, of which nine dealt with nuclear energy; nine with coal; 79 with oil; 13 with gas; and 12 with renewables.

The following academic institutions routinely receive press releases:

Birmingham Polytechnic
Dundee Polytechnic
Heriot-Watt University
Institute of Energy
Institute of Petroleum
Institute of Purchasing and Supply
Institute for Scientific Information
Journal of the Institute of Water Engineers and Scientists
Sunderland Polytechnic
The Open University
The College of Petroleum Studies
University of Dundee
University of Glasgow
University of Keele
University of London
University of Sussex
Oakham School Science Faculty
National Technical University—Athens

National Energy Foundation

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will arrange a meeting with the new National Energy Foundation, based in Milton Keynes; and if he has made any assessment of the benefits to his energy conservation policy that may arise from the work on energy audits in housing being developed by the National Energy Foundation.

Mr. Wakeham: I shall be meeting trustees and the director of the National Energy Foundation on 20 December. I look forward to discussing at that meeting their progress on developing a scheme for the energy labelling of houses.

Energy Surveys

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress has been made in implementing the European Commission directive on the introduction of energy surveys on the United Kingdom housing stock.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Government do not consider that the draft directive proposed in 1987 is appropriate. The Energy Efficiency Office supports the development of voluntary energy labels for housing and I consider this to be the best way forward.

Energy Conservation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many projects of the building research energy conservation support unit are (a) completed and (b) under way.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The building research energy conservation support unit manages projects for the Energy Efficiency Office under the energy efficiency demonstration and R and D schemes started in 1979, and the best practice programme which replaced them in 1989. On 15 December 1989 the figures were:

	Number
(a) Projects completed	82
(b) Projects under way	60

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether the Central Electricity Generating Board has yet submitted for his approval under section 63 of the Electricity Act a transfer scheme for the allocation of assets to the nuclear companies; whether the term nuclear companies includes for this purpose, the new publicly owned Nuclear company; and whether the Central Electricity Generating Board has discretion as to whether to transfer unused sites to the nuclear company or to another successor company.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The CEGB is required, under section 66 of the Electricity Act 1989, to make a scheme for the division of all its property, rights and liabilities to its successor companies. The new publicly owned nuclear company will be regarded as a successor company. The scheme, presently being prepared by the CEGB, will include unused sites.

Oil and Gas Exports

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give a breakdown between oil and gas exports both (a) in terms and (b) in value at constant prices on the same basis as that provided in his answer of 9 November, Official Report, columns 767-68; and if he will provide equivalent figures for 1989 up to the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Wakeham: The breakdown between oil and gas exports on the basis requested is:—

Exports (f.o.b.)

	Quantity (thousand tonnes)		Value (£ million at 1985 prices[1]
	Oil	Gas (coal equivalent)	Oil	Gas
1988	89·037	82	15·018	8
1989 (10 months to October)	53·809	7	9·304	2

Source: Customs and Excise. Overseas Trade Statistics (including subsequent revisions to oil exports figures).

[1] Figures at 1985 constant prices have been derived by applying the unit value for exports in 1985 to the relevant volumes in 1988 and 1989. The figures for gas are estimated.

The standard international trade classification in use for years up to and including 1987 does not enable the breakdown between exports of petroleum gases and natural gas, and therefore between oil and gas, to be made for those years.

Natural Gas

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list the countries from which Britain imported natural gas in 1988 together with the tonnages for each such country;

(2) what was the tonnage of natural gas brought ashore from the United Kingdom continental shelf in 1988; and how much came from (a) gas fields and (b) oil fields.

Mr. Wakeham: The main countries from which Britain imported natural gas in 1988 were Norway (15·4 million tonnes of coal equivalent) and Algeria (0·1 million tonnes of coal equivalent).

The tonnage of natural gas brought ashore from the United Kingdom continental shelf in 1988 was 45·9 million tonnes of coal equivalent from gas fields and 14·2 million tonnes of coal equivalent from oil fields.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his Department's estimate of the likely exports and imports of natural gas in each year till 1995.

Mr. Wakeham: The United Kingdom imports approximately 20 per cent. of its gas from Norway and small amounts of liquefied gas from Algeria and elsewhere. This proportion is expected to decline over the next three or four years as imports are replaced by indigenous supplies. Gas exports are at present small and their future size will depend on market opportunity.

Fuel Exports and Imports

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will provide equivalent figures about fuel exports and imports to those given in the tables in his answer of 9 November, Official Report, columns 767-68, for 1989 up to the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Wakeham: The equivalent information for fuel exports and imports for the 10 months to October 1989 following my previous answer on 9 November is as follows:

Table 1

Thousand tonnes

1989	Exports (fob) Coal	Exports (fob) Oil	Imports (cif) Coal	Imports (cif) Gas (coal equivalent)	Imports (cif) Oil
January to October	1,672	53,813[1]	9,594	12,410	48,969

1989	Exports (fob) Coal	Exports (fob) Oil	Imports (cif) Coal	Imports (cif) Gas	Imports (cif) Oil
January to October	64	9,306[1]	510	933	7,851

[2] Figures at 1985 constant prices have been derived by applying the unit value for exports in 1985 to the relevant volumes in 1988 and 1989. The figures for gas are estimated.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Child Care

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take steps to amend the Nurseries and Childminders Regulation Act 1948 as amended by section 60 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1960 to incorporate stricter criteria regarding the standards, training and qualifications of registered child carers.

Mr. Needham: The Nurseries and Childminders Regulation Act 1948, as amended by section 60 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968, does not extend to Northern Ireland. However, similar provisions are contained in the Children and Young Persons Act (Northern Ireland) 1968. The Great Britain legislation has recently been modified and updated in the Children Act 1989. Consideration is being given to the relevance for Northern Ireland of various provisions in the Children Act 1989, including those relating to the registration of childminders, and revised provisions will be included in a proposal for a draft Order in Council which will replace the Children and Young Persons Act (Northern Ireland) 1968.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take steps to encourage both private and public sector employers to provide more good quality day care facilities for children under five years old.

Mr. Needham: The ministerial group on women's issues, on which my noble Friend represents Northern Ireland interests, has been looking at child care needs and how best to ensure a growth in the provision of high quality day care facilities so that parents are enabled to balance their family responsibilities with employment opportunities. Consideration is given to the relevance to Northern Ireland of any initiatives endorsed by the group —for example, further encouragement to employers to use the tax reliefs available to provide child care facilities.

The Government encourage the growth of child care provision in Northern Ireland by funding women to set up childminding businesses under the enterprise allowance scheme and, under the job training programme, assist females to retrain for work by providing a weekly allowance of up to £50 to meet child care costs. They would also welcome any proposal to extend certain private sector initiatives such as the child care voucher schemes to Northern Ireland.

In the public sector, day care facilities for staff already exist in some health and social services and educational facilities. The Northern Ireland Civil Service is considering with the trade unions whether day care facilities for under-fives can be provided for its staff.

Consideration is being given to the need to improve the registration and enforcement arrangements for child-minders, playgroups and day nurseries in Northern Ireland legislation, in the light of new provisions introduced for England and Wales in the Children Act 1989.

Fire Brigade Training School, Jordanstown

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the planning procedures which have been followed in respect of the planning application for a fire brigade training school or depot at Jordanstown, Newtownabbey, County Antrim.

Mr. Needham: On receipt of the planning application on 25 May 1988, it was advertised and neighbour notification letters were issued. The usual consultations, including several with Newtownabbey borough council, were carried out before the issue of refusal of planning permission on 6 April 1989. An appeal was lodged against the Department of the Environment's refusal. The appeal hearing was held on 19 October 1989, and a final decision is awaited from the independent planning appeals commission.

Hypothermia

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of deaths where hypothermia was mentioned as a cause; and what is his estimate of the total number of deaths where hypothermia was the underlying cause of death in Northern Ireland in each year from 1978 to 1988.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 18 December 1989]: The information is as follows:

	Any mention	Underlying cause
1978	[1]5	5
1979	[1]13	13
1980	[1]18	18
1981	[1]10	10
1982	[1]17	17
1983	[1]10	10
1984	[1]11	11
1985	28	16
1986	32	14
1987	21	7
1988	18	7

[1] Prior to 1985 hypothermia was not coded as an associated cause of death.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Overseas Development Natural Resources Institute

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans for the Overseas Development Natural Resources Institute to become an executive agency under the Next Steps programme.

Mrs. Chalker: I have decided that it would be right for the Overseas Development Natural Resources Institute to become an executive agency. I believe that the freedoms and disciplines which agency status will bring will further enhance the institute's contribution to the British aid programme and development of the poorer countries, and will reinforce its position as an international centre of scientific excellence. We are planning for ODNRI to become an agency on 1 April 1990. Mr. Anthony Beattie, the present director of the institute, will be appointed as the agency's first chief executive.

PRIME MINISTER

Methodist Conference

Q37. Mr. Archer: To ask the Prime Minister whether she has any plans to meet the president of the Methodist Conference.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

NATO

Q48. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her recent meeting with NATO Heads of Government.

The Prime Minister: The NATO Heads of Government meeting on 4 December, at which President Bush gave an account of his talks with President Gorbachev, was a very successful meeting. We reaffirmed the importance of NATO for our security, for arms control, and for stability in Europe, and welcomed President Bush's statement that United States forces and nuclear weapons will remain in Europe as long as the Allies want or need them. At the same time, there was universal support for the momentous changes taking place in eastern Europe.

Ambulance Dispute

Q83. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a further statement on the ambulance staff dispute.

The Prime Minister: NHS management has made a final offer to the ambulance unions. Nobody will receive a basic pay increase of less than 9 per cent., and some will get over 16 per cent. As a result qualified ambulance men and women are already eligible for back pay ranging from over £600 to £850. Leading ambulance men and women in London trained in paramedical skills are eligible for back pay of up to £1,290. For the first time, staff with extended training and using paramedical skills will receive extra pay of £500 a year. There will also be a review of the 1986 salaries structure which could mean additional payments.

The demands of the trade union side of the Ambulance Council are unreasonable and I am very disappointed that it continues to take action against patients and has rejected the NHS chief executive's very reasonable suggestion of a truce over Christmas and the new year. Over 96 per cent. of NHS staff have settled their pay without recourse to industrial action. The unions should accept the very fair offer on pay and resume normal working.

Economic and Monetary Union

Q92. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a further statement on European economic and monetary union in the light of the Strasbourg summit.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement that I made in this House on 12 December at column 857-59.

Crisis at Christmas

Q120. Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister if she will visit the Crisis at Christmas centre in London during Christmas.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Cereals

Q155. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the recent decision of the Agricultural Council to disregard the stabiliser regime for cereals; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I do not accept that the stabiliser regime for cereals is being disregarded. Recent decisions by the Agriculture Council will in fact tighten up its operation and should therefore secure further savings.

Church Lawford

Q224. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Church Lawford.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Constitution

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North of Wednesday 13 December, which Minister would be responsible for putting proposals on a constitutional separation of powers to Parliament in respect of (a) a democratically elected second Chamber, (b) an Executive elected separately from Parliament, (c) a written constitution and (d) judicial review of the constitution.

The Prime Minister: The Government have no such proposals.

India

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister if she has written to Mr. V. P. Singh, the new Indian leader; and if she will make a statement on relations between the new Indian Government and the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: Yes. In my message to the new Indian Prime Minister I said that our two countries had an excellent relationship.

We look forward to working closely with the new Indian Government to strengthen our close links.

National Health Service

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Prime Minister why she has refused to discuss the Government's National Health Service plans with the medical royal colleges, the British Medical Association, the Royal College of Nursing, the joint consultants committee and the Royal College of Midwives; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health has said on many occasions that he welcomes constructive views on how to implement our proposals for the Health Service. He remains willing to engage in constructive dialogue with the leaders of the health professional bodies. That is why he, his fellow Ministers and senior officials in the Department of Health have met the leaders of the medical profession to talk about the proposed reforms on over 100 occasions since the White Paper was published. We are convinced —as are many people working in the NHS—that change is essential if the service is to prosper. I see little purpose in having a separate meeting.

Doctors and Dentists (Remuneration)

Mr. Soames: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will make a statement on the chairmanship of the review body on doctors' and dentists' remuneration.

The Prime Minister: Sir Graham Wilkins' period as chairman comes to an end at the end of the current review. I have appointed Sir Trevor Holdsworth to succeed him. The Government are very grateful to Sir Graham for his long and valuable work, first as a member of the review body since 1979 and latterly as chairman.

Engagements

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 December.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 December.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 December.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 December.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today, including one with Mr. Shevardnadze, the Soviet Foreign Minister.

ENVIRONMENT

Cleaning Contracts

109. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the implementation of cleaning contracts in schools.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Under the Local Government Act 1988, local education authorities are required to invite competitive tenders for school cleaning when they wish to carry out this work using their own employees. The successful tenderer is required to perform the contract to the specification set by the authority and for the price quoted.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what percentage of total water shares has gone to (a) small investors, (b) United Kingdom institutions, (c) foreign investors and (d) others;

(2) what provision was considered to ensure that small shareholders were allocated more than half the total water shares available.

Mr. Howard: Under the offer arrangements for the water offers, 26·55 per cent. of the available shares were initially allocated to the United Kingdom retail public offers (including shares reserved for employees and bonus shares), 54·95 per cent. of the available shares were allocated to the institutions; and 18·5 per cent. were allocated to overseas offers in Japan, continental Europe, Canada and the USA.

In view of the heavy demand in the retail public offers, various clawback arrangements were triggered to increase the size of the retail public offers. As a result the final allocations were 46·875 per cent. to the retail public offers; 39·25 per cent. to the institutions and 13·875 per cent. to the overseas offers.

The retail public offers were significantly oversubscribed in each of the 10 offers and applications had to be scaled down. In deciding a basis for scaling down, preference was given first to employees, pensioners and customers of each company, with 2·4 per cent. of the retail public offers being allocated to employees and pensioners and 57·5 per cent. to customers. Preference was also given to small applications over large. For example, applicants in the retail offers at the minimum application band all received a 100 per cent. allocation. Applicants applying for 10,000 or more shares, in contrast, received from 6·4 per cent. to 40 per cent. of the shares they applied for and, in the case of one company, no allocation.

Toxic Algal Blooms

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on toxic algal blooms; and what steps he is taking to reduce this problem.

Mr. Howard: Algal blooms are a common occurrence in many waters during the summer although sampling results this year showed that toxic forms of algal blooms were present in a number of reservoirs, lakes and similar waters in England and Wales. The NRA, which is now responsible for monitoring such waters, informed site owners and appropriate environmental health officers. The problems have subsided with the onset of colder weather. The NRA is conducting investigations into the cause of the problems this year, and will be considering the need for measures to reduce the risk of their recurrence.

EC Habitats Directive

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will take to ensure that the proposed European Commission habitats directive will be effectively applied in England, Scotland and Wales following the proposed fragmentation of the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I would refer my hon. Friend to the statement made in this House by the Secretary of State for the Environment on 23 November—Official Report columns 17-18—which set out the arrangements that will apply after the reorganisation of the NCC for a statutory joint committee dealing inter alia with issues that have an international dimension. I am confident that any future European Commission directive on habitats—if agreed by the Council of Ministers—could be applied effectively within this framework.

House of Commons (Lighting)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 7 December, Official Report, column 323, why there has been no lighting on the stairs leading from the Committee Corridor for the last 14 days.

Mr. Chope: From the limited description it is not possible to identify which of the five stairs to the Committee Corridor the hon. Member has in mind. A check on 13 December identified only two bulbs, each on separate stairs, which needed replacing, plus three emergency lights. But I hope the hon. Member understands that it is not necessary to use the formalities of a parliamentary question in order to have a light bulb replaced.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has on the future policy on effective control of hazardous toxic and dangerous wastes and their disposal; what provisions are currently in force; what are the penalties for illegal dumping of such wastes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Environmental Protection Bill contains measures to reform the whole of waste management legislation. The new duty of care on waste producers and the stronger powers for licensing authorities will apply to all wastes but will be especially relevant to those wastes which are dangerous or difficult to dispose of—known as special waste. Current provisions for licensing of disposal facilities will be greatly enhanced. The maximum penalty available on indictment for illegal deposit of special waste is five years imprisonment and an unlimited fine. The Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980 SI 1709, which control the movement of special waste from producer to disposer are under review and a consultation paper will be issued shortly.

Swap Contracts

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities which have entered into swap and swap option contracts; and if he will provide an estimate of the notional value of each local authority's involvement at the end of the financial year 1988-89.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The information requested is not collected by the Department.

Pollution Inspectorate

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to improve staffing and resources of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 18 December by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce).

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for which matters concerning the policy and operations of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution he is responsible to Parliament.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is part of the Department of the Environment and reports jointly to the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many posts remain vacant in Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution; what are the reasons for the shortfall; what steps he is taking to fill the vacancies; and how many and which of the vacancies are in the senior management level of the inspectorate.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution staff complement was increased from 219 to 240 from 2 October 1989. Vacant posts at 1 November 1989 numbered 41, most of which were professional posts. It is difficult to establish precisely the reasons for the shortfall. It reflects, inter alia, the limited pool of necessary specialist skills and experience available, and market rates of pay. To fill the vacant posts Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is undertaking a recruitment campaign offering exceptional salary increases of 28·5 per cent. over those offered in the last recruitment round. There is one vacancy currently at senior management level in the inspectorate.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps have been taken to ensure that Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has sufficient personnel fully to implement its responsibilities for the radiation monitoring network.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: As a result of an open competition the Department hopes to fill the final remaining post on the radiation monitoring network team.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all those local authorities which in 1987-88 were responsible for more than £35 million of expenditure.

Mr. Chope: The information is as follows. Total expenditure is defined as rate fund revenue account expenditure on services plus debt charges and net contributions to other accounts (such as the housing revenue account), less interest receipts and specific and supplementary grants.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the most specific detail available those people who are mentally or physically disabled who will be exempt from the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Any physically disabled person who has his sole or main residence in an NHS hospital or a residential care home, a nursing home, a mental nursing home, a private hospital or a hostel and is receiving treatment there, will be exempt from the personal charge. So far as mental disability is concerned, any person who is in receipt of an invalidity pension, severe disablement allowance, unemployability supplement, an unemployability allowance, an attendance allowance or a constant attendance allowance, and who has a certificate from a registered medical practitioner stating that his or her intelligence and social functioning is severely impaired will be exempt from the personal community charge. It is not possible to be specific about the particular disorders which may lead to such conditions being fulfilled.

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to make regulations on the final form of the community charge bill.

Mr. David Hunt: The Department has sent out today a letter to all charging authorities which encloses draft regulations which would provide for the final form of the bill and the explanatory notes which will accompany the bill. The purpose of sending this material out now is to enable authorities to arrange for the printing of these documents forthwith, if they wish. A copy of the letter and enclosures have been placed in the Library. I expect to lay the regulations in January.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he intends to give to those people, nominated as responsible individuals, who are in receipt of community charge changes of circumstances forms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Changes of circumstances forms are a convenient way of helping people to comply with their statutory duty to inform the community charges registration officer of any change in circumstances which affects their register entry. The responsibility for ensuring that they comply with the appropriate regulations lies with registration officers.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to monitor the issuing of changes of circumstances forms by community charge registration officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Every individual has a duty to inform the community charges registration officer of any change of circumstances which affects his or her register entry. There is, however, no duty to volunteer such information about any other person. A responsible individual has a duty to provide information about people other than him or herself only in response to a specific request from the registration officer.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the percentage of income represented by rate support grant for (a) the City of Durham and (b) Basildon for (i) 1978-79 and (ii) 1988-89.

Mr. Chope: The percentages for each authority are not comparable between years because of changes to the rate support grant system in 1981-82. Nevertheless, the information is as as follows:

Rate support grant as percentage of rate fund revenue account income

	Per cent. 1978-79	Per cent. 1988-89
City of Durham	64	29
Basildon	52	16

Water Pollution

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the division of responsibility for controlling water pollution between Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Howard: Currently the National Rivers Authority has responsibility for controlling water pollution under powers in the Water Act 1989, although additional controls are exercised by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, advised by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, to limit inputs of certain dangerous substances to sewers.

Under our proposals for integrated pollution control wastes released to all environmental media from certain industrial processes would be controlled by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. The National Rivers Authority would, however, have powers to ensure that these controls were exercised so as to protect the aquatic environment. The authority would continue to have primary responsibility for discharges to water from all other sources.

These arrangements were announced by my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley) on 28 February following extensive consultation. They will be introduced through the Environmental Protection Bill which we shall shortly be introducing. They will entail close co-operation between the two regulatory bodies, and a memorandum of understanding will be drawn up to cover the detailed interface of their respective responsibilities.

Waste Disposal

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he has received any representations from the National Association of Waste Disposal Contractors on environmental pollution matters; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he last met the waste disposal organisation NAWDC; and what was discussed.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We have regular contact with NAWDC at all levels on environmental matters concerning waste management. My hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside last met it on 25 September to discuss, in particular, legislative proposals.

World Conservation Monitoring Centre

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contribution his Department has made to the world conservation monitoring centre at Cambridge.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The world conservation monitoring centre is funded jointly by the International Union for the Conservation of Nature (IUCN), the World Wide Fund for Nature, and the United Nations Environment Programme from their respective subscription incomes, including those from the United Kingdom Government and private sources. The centre also earns income from providing services to customers in the United Kingdom and elsewhere. My Department does not at present directly fund any work at the centre.

Stocken Hall, Rutland

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment upon what dates since April 1988 inspectors from the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission visited Stocken hall, Rutland, to inspect the condition of the buildings; what similar visits have been paid by officials of his Department since January; and what action has subsequently been taken.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: An inspector from the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission last visited Stocken hall in April 1988. Officials from my Department carried out a brief external inspection in April 1989. On learning in October that a proposed sale of the hall had fallen through, my Department asked the commission to inquire into its condition.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment upon what date the planning appeal by Endersby Developments Ltd. regarding Stocken hall, Rutland, was withdrawn; and whether his Department has received details of any subsequent planning applications relating to this building.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The appeal was withdrawn on 21 August 1989. There have been no subsequent planning applications and we understand that sale to a new purchaser is imminent.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken since 12 April to bring about the immediate protection of Stocken hall, Rutland; whether he has yet authorised the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission to serve a notice under section 101 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The owners have done some urgent repairs to weatherproof the hall. My Department has therefore not yet authorised the commission to serve a notice under section 101, but has asked it to monitor the situation closely.

Homes Insulation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will give for each year since 1978 the total spending on the homes insulation scheme.

Mr. Chope: Information on the total spending on the homes insulation scheme in 1986, 1987, 1988 and the first half of 1989 appears in table 2.21 of "Housing and Construction Statistics part 2", No. 38. Figures for earlier years appear in table 7.7 of "Housing and Construction Statistics 1978-1988". Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether inclusion of the homes insulation scheme within the home improvement grant scheme will make it more or less difficult to retain the same priority for loft insulation work.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 18 December 1989]: The new system of renovation grants to be introduced under the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 will enable local authorities to assist householders to carry out a wide range of measures to improve the energy efficiency of their properties. It will be a matter for individual authorities to decide on the particular priority for loft insulation work within these measures. Additionally, the Secretary of State for Energy proposes to introduce a scheme of grants for basic insulation measures through community insulation services for low-income householders in the forthcoming Social Security Bill.

Improvement Grants

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the details of the means-testing for the new improvement grants payable from 1 April 1990.

Mr. Chope: Details of the test of resources will be included in regulations which are currently being prepared and will be laid before the House in due course.

Theatre Royal, Chatham

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why he decided not to exercise his powers with regard to the demolition order on the grade II listed building the Theatre Royal, Chatham, for which a privately developed complex of uses is being planned locally.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: An application for listed building consent to demolish the Theatre Royal, Chatham was referred to my right hon. Friend by Rochester upon Medway city council to give him the opportunity of calling in the application for his own decision. Having obtained expert advice from the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission for England (English Heritage) my right hon. Friend decided that, in view of the poor condition of the building and the fact that the site was included in proposed shopping redevelopment for the improvement of Chatham town centre, he would not be justified in taking the matter out of the hands of the local planning authority.

Map Errors

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he still proposes to take legislative action to amend the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to enable the correction of errors on definitive maps.

Mr. Chris Patten: The judgment in the Court of Appeal on 23 November in the case of R v Secretary of State for the Environment ex parte Simms and Burrows, has confirmed that the Act already includes the power to make orders to correct errors or mistakes, as Parliament intended. There is therefore no need for amending legislation; we will be issuing further advice to surveying authorities as soon as possible.

Public Housing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the contribution made by the federal and state governments in Germany to the building of new publicly owned housing in the latest year for which figures are available; and what is the net contribution made by central Government in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 30 November 1989]: A full comparison on an objective basis between the United Kingdom and Germany is not available.

Most dwellings in Germany (Federal Republic) that have been built with public subsidy are owned by non-profit-making bodies or by private companies and individuals. Some are owner-occupied. Total public expenditure for "social" dwellings (the German term) was estimated at 5,130 million DM in 1986. Separate figures for the share in this total of federal and state governments are not immediately available. In the United Kingdom central Government housing subsidies paid to local authorities are not divided into financing new building and other categories of expenditure. Central Government subsidies in 1986-87 to local authorities and public corporations were £811 million. This does not include subsidies to housing associations.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how his Department monitors the operation of rules laid down in respect of the assigning of contracts, the sale of assets, or the partnership arrangements for implementing development plans, by urban development corporations; if he has any plans to improve these arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 12 December 1989]: Urban development corporations are subject to annual audit by external auditors appointed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. Auditors are required, inter alia, to report on whether corporations have complied with normal public sector procedures for letting contracts, disposing of assets and partnership arrangements. The Department liaises closely with UDCs on their progress; this includes appropriate guidance, monitoring, and approval of projects under financial delegation arrangements.

Drinking Water

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to ensure that drinking water meets the standards laid down in the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 14 December 1989]: In addition to the continuing role of local authorities in checking the quality of water supplies in their areas, the new drinking water inspectorate, shortly to be established by my right hon. Friend, will seek to ensure that drinking water standards are met.

Algae

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will issue guidance that the practice of back-washing blue-green algae, filtered from reservoirs, into streams, be discontinued and safer methods of disposal be introduced;

(2) if he will list the reports he has received of poisoning of people, domestic and farm animals that have been linked with the contamination of reservoirs and streams with toxins produced by blue-green algae;

(3) what changes he proposes in farming practices to reduce the growth of blue-green algae in lakes and reservoirs;

(4) what proposals he has to discourage the formation and to reduce the growth of blue-green algae in lakes and reservoirs.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 15 December 1989]: These are primarily matters for the NRA which is responsible for monitoring the quality of inland waters in England and Wales. Sampling of waters this year established that toxic forms of blue green algae were present in a number of reservoirs, lakes and similar waters. With the onset of colder weather, the problems have subsided. The NRA is conducting investigations into the cause of this year's problems with a view to establishing the need for possible preventive measures to be taken in the future.

"Getting out of the Greenhouse"

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will obtain a copy of the Friends of the Earth publication, "Getting Out of the Greenhouse," for his departmental library.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 18 December 1989]: Friends of the Earth have already been kind enough to send a copy of this publication to the Department.

Homelessness

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) families and (b) individuals he estimates will spend the 1989 Christmas holiday period in bed-and-breakfast accommodation in England and Wales other than as tourists.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 18 December 1989]: The latest estimate of households accepted as homeless under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act and living in bed-and-breakfast accommodation in England is 11,880 at end September 1989. No estimate is available either of the number of individuals this represents or the number in bed-and-breakfast accommodation at later dates.

For Welsh figures I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) families and (b) people he estimates spent the Christmas holiday in bed-and-breakfast accommodation in England and Wales in each of the years 1983 to 1988, inclusive, other than as tourists.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 18 December 1989]: Estimates for England of the number of households accepted as homeless under the homelessness provisions of the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 and the 1985 Housing Act and living in bed-and-breakfast accommodation at 31 December in each of the years 1983 to 1988 inclusive are as follows:

Year	Number of households
1984	3,670
1985	5,360
1986	8,990
1987	10,370
1988	10,970

No estimates are made of the number of people this represented.

For Welsh figures I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many children he estimates spent the Christmas holiday period in bed-and-breakfast accommodation in England and Wales other than as tourists during each of the years 1983 to 1988.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 18 December 1989]: The number of children among the homeless households in bed-and-breakfast accommodation in England are not reported by local authorities and my Department has no estimates.

For information about Wales I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give for each year since 1978 (a) the spending by local authorities under the energy conservation programme and (b) the number of dwellings thereby receiving energy efficiency improvements.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 18 December 1989]: Information on activity under the energy conservation programme in 1986, 1987, 1988 and the first quarter of 1989 appears in table 2.21 of "Housing and Construction Statistics", No. 38. Figures for earlier years appear in table 7.7 of "Housing and Construction Statistics 1978-1988". Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

The table relates to activity where the only work carried out to the dwelling is under the energy conservation programme. Local authority dwellings may also be insulated when other general renovation work is carried out, but these cases cannot be separately identified.

DEFENCE

Ferranti

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the chair of Ferranti; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 28 November 1989 at column 237.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress on the European fighter aircraft project development.

Mr. Alan Clark: The main development contracts for the European fighter aircraft were signed in November 1988. Since then work on the first prototype has progressed satisfactorily; and the first full-scale development engine is expected to be run next year. The selection of equipment for EFA is also proceeding; and to date only the choice of radar has presented significant difficulties.

British Aerospace

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence upon what subjects he has recently received representations from British Aerospace.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend and I, and Ministry of Defence officials, maintain contact with the senior management of all major defence contractors, including British Aerospace. The details of our discussions are always confidential.

EH101 Helicopter

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the present status of the EH101 helicopter programme; and who is now personally supervising the contract.

Mr. Alan Clark: The RN anti-submarine warfare variant of the EH101 helicopter is in the sixth year of full development, whilst the RAF utility variant is in the project definition phase. Following normal practice the programmes are managed by a project director with the Ministry's Procurement Executive.

TOGS System

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when he expects to take delivery of the TOGS system; and what is the present delay time of the contract with United Scientific;

(2) whether he intends to involve any penalty clauses on the TOGS system contract with United Scientific.

Mr. Alan Clark: Deliveries of these equipments are continuing behind schedule and we are seeking redress under the terms of the contract with Avimo.

Battle Tank

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he intends to proceed with the purchase of a new main battle tank in the time scale originally envisaged and in the same number.

Mr. Alan Clarke: As I told the hon. Member for Tyne Bridge (Mr. Clelland) on 14 December, Official Report, columns 822-23, it is our intention to reach a decision on a tank to replace Chieftain by the end of 1990. The precise number of tanks to be ordered has yet to be be decided.

Chieftain Tanks

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what criteria the selection of a Chieftain replacement will be made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend, the former Secretary of State, on 20 December 1988, Official Report columns 259-60.

Scottish Landholdings

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the extent of land held in Scotland by his Department in (a) September 1988 and (b) September 1989; and if he will break this down by region and island authorities.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Landholdings statistics relate to 1 April each year. The table shows the position at 1 April 1988 and 1 April 1989, indicating land and foreshore holdings:

Region or Island Authority	1 April 1988 Land/Foreshore Holdings (acres)	1 April 1989 Land/Foreshore Holdings (acres)
Borders	Nil	Nil
Central	197	197
Dumfries and Galloway	10,620	10,400
Fife	3,181	3,269
Grampian	5,387	5,361
Highland	12,854	12,853
Lothian	2,923	2,870
Strathclyde	9,103	9,082
Tayside	3,874	3,599
Orkney	9	8
Shetland	120	111
Western Isles	3,310	3,314
Totals	51,578	51,064

Nuclear Weapons (Transport)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has received representations from Clydesdale district council complaining about the transport of nuclear weapons through the Clydesdale constituency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am aware of one letter from Clydesdale district council which was concerned in part, though not exclusively, with nuclear weapon movements, and was sent to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland in May this year. A copy was passed to the Ministry of Defence and a reply was sent at official level.

Interallied Confederation of Reserve Officers

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's relationship with and contribution to the Interallied Confederation of Reserve Officers.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Interallied Confederation of Reserve Officers (CIOR) is the NATO reserve forces organisation which represents the reserve officers of member states.

The Ministry of Defence provides some financial assistance towards office expenses, administration and subscription fees for United Kingdom participation in CIOR through the Reserve Forces Association, which has filled the role of the official United Kingdom representative since 1972.

Military Service

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent consideration has been given by his Department to the introduction of short-term military service for young people.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no plans to introduce any further short-term forms of military service.

Recruitment

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of his Department's recent report "Manpower and Recruiting in the Lean Years of the Nineties".

Mr. Archie Hamilton: An abridged version of the MARILYN report was placed in the Library on 8 June 1989.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the amounts spent by his Department on recruitment advertising in the years 1985-86 to 1988-89; and what is estimated for 1989-90 for (a) the Regular Army, (b) the Territorial Army Volunteer Reserve and (c) the Home Service Force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Spending on recruitment advertising from 1985-86 to 1988-89 was as follows:

	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90
Regular Army	3·625	4·547	3·984	4·467	[1]10·093
TAVR	1·811	1·879	[2]4·316	[3]4·264	[1]5·500
Total	5·436	6·426	8·300	8·731	15·593

[1] Estimated final outturn.
[2] Includes £ 2 million from National Employers Liaison Committee (NELC).
[3] Includes £2·1 million from NELC.

Separate figures for the Home Service Force are not available, but would be included in the TAVR figures.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Company Ownership

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has of the number of United Kingdom companies which are under the ultimate ownership of Australian companies but which have intermediary ownership via the Cayman Islands or the Netherlands Antilles.

Mr. Redwood: The chief executive of Companies house tells me that the information is not available.

Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many contracts over £92,500 have been let by his Department in the 1988-89 financial year and in the current financial year to date; and how many of these were (a) automatically renewed and (b) open to competition by advertisement throughout the European Community.

Mr. Forth: The number of contracts awarded by the Department of Trade and Industry and covered by the provisions of the EC supplies directive, for which the current threshold is £92,000, was 24 in the 1988-89 financial year and 10 in the current financial year to date. Of these five were awarded following advertisement in the EC Journal and 29 were considered to be exempt from advertising and may have been awarded to the previous supplier.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those accountancy firms which have been criticised by (a) his Department's Inspectors and (b) the Registrar of Friendly Societies since June 1979.

Mr. Redwood: Ten reports of inspectors appointed under the Companies Act published since June 1979 have contained criticisms of accountants. The extent of criticism varies in scale and reference should be made to individual reports.

Name of company	Date of publication of report	Name of accountants
Ashbourne Investments Limited	31 July 1979	Wright Stevens & Lloyd
Data Investments Limited	30 April 1980	Robson Rhodes
Cornhill Consolidated Group Limited	31 December 1980	Singleton, Fabian & Derbyshire
Kina Holdings Limited	24 March 1981	Harold Everett, Wand & Co. Dixon Wilson Tubbs & Gillett Collins & Co.
Scotia Investments Limited	22 January 1981	Lubbock Fine
Gilgate Holdings Limited and others	8 September 1981	Thornton Baker & Co. Gerald Edelman & Co.
Norwest Holst Limited	23 June 1982	Price Waterhouse
Ramor Investments Limited	22 March 1983	Price Waterhouse
Greenbank Trust plc	5 August 1988	Pannell Kerr Forster
Milbury plc	27 October 1988	Arthur Young

I assume that the hon. Member intended to refer to inspectors appointed by the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies under powers comparable to those of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State under the Companies Act.

No such inspector has reported since June 1979.

Oil Products

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in view of the recent increase in the price of domestic heating oil, diesel fuel, agricultural oils and other non-petrol oil products, if he will ask the Office of Fair Trading to make an investigation.

Mr. Redwood: If the hon. Member has any evidence that such price increases are the result of monopoly abuse or anti-competitive or restrictive trade practices he should bring it to the attention of the Director General of Fair Trading who has powers under the competition legislation to investigate such matters if he considers it appropriate.

Forklift Trucks

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current position on the inter-industry arrangement on forklift trucks from Japan, referred to in his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) on 30 March 1988, Official Report, columns 480-81.

Mr. Redwood: The British Industrial Truck Association (BITA) has told us that its bilateral voluntary restraint arrangement with the Japan Industrial Vehicle Association is no longer in operation. My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Trade has, in reaffirming the Government's general policy against restrictive arrangements, informed BITA that any agreements to restric. imports of forklift trucks to the United Kingdom would have to be fully economically justified.

Computer Misuse

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he accepts the recommendations of the Law Commission's report on computer misuse; and what response he intends to make to the report;

(2) what individuals and organisations he has consulted on the detailed proposals contained in the Law Commission's report on computer misuse; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is his estimate of the annual loss of trade and industry in the United Kingdom caused by computer misuse.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 15 December 1989]: In welcoming the Law Commission report, I stated that I was inclined to accept its recommendations subject to the views of interested parties. Representations that I have had since that date have convinced me that it provides a sound basis for legislation and that such legislation should be introduced as soon as a suitable opportunity arises.

My Department has written directly to over 280 interested parties to ask for their views on the Commission's proposals. This represents a wide cross-section from industry and commerce, private individuals, consumer organisations, academia, the legal profession and other Government Departments. We have also contacted officials and law enforcement agencies in countries where legislation has already been introduced. The overall response indicates widespread support for the introduction of legislation along the lines suggested by the Law Commission.

There are no centrally collected statistics on the damage caused by computer misuse on which a reasonably accurate estimate could be based. Private sector sources have estimated figures of between £400 million and £1 billion but I cannot validate them. However, the reported cases have convinced me that misuse is occurring, and that the problem is of sufficient magnitude to cause concern.

Rover Group

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how much of Rover's trading tax losses was eliminated in the final agreement;

(2) what was the maximum quantum of the Rover Group's pre-acquisition trading tax losses potentially available to claw back under the contractual sale arrangements between the Department of Trade and Industry and British Aerospace.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 18 December 1989]: Because the £469 million of the cash injection relating to Rover's historic debt had, through conditions attaching to it, to be passed down to the operating companies in the form of a taxable subvention it eliminated a corresponding amount of trading tax losses. The remainder of the mechanism effectively to limit Rover Group's access to the benefit of past trading tax losses was the pound-for-pound contractual clawback affecting use of more than £500 million of such losses. It is not possible to state the amount of Rover's trading tax losses eliminated in the final agreement or the maximum amount potentially available to be clawed back. These depend on the outcome of the normal application of tax law to the circumstances of the Rover Group, including any claims or disclaimers made by it, and this is governed by the strict rules of tax confidentiality.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much of the capital allowances disclaimed by the Rover Group which, under the March conditional terms, could have been clawed back under the contractual sale arrangements if used outside the Rover Group were disclaimed within the statutory time limit set down in the relevant Finance Acts.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 18 December 1989]: As I said in my reply of 12 December on disclaimers of capital allowances by Rover Group—Official Report, column 638 —this is a matter for Rover Group and the normal rules of confidentiality governing taxpayers' affairs apply.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the plan to defer payment of £150 million for the Rover sale was discussed; and what were the options under consideration in July.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 18 December 1989]: The deferment of the £150 million consideration was first raised at the end of June 1988. Three specific options were set out in a letter of July 1988 from the then Secretary of State to the chairman of British Aerospace, a copy of which has already been placed in the Library of the House. There were further discussions on 12 July following receipt of the letter at which it was decided that the consideration would be paid not later than 30 March 1990.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he received the request from British Aerospace seeking abandonment of the golden share.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 18 December 1989]: I am unaware of any such request. As I explained on 13 December at columns 699-700, the company has consulted us on a number of occasions on the detail of certain provisions in the company's articles of association which require the consent of the special shareholder before any changes can be made.

Telephone Chatlines

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report full details of the code of practice recently agreed between the director general of OFTEL and the telecommunications industry relating to the provision of telephone chatlines and one-to-one services.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 14 December 1989]: I have arranged for copies of the two codes of practice recently approved by Oftel to be placed in the Library of the House.

Bananas

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the annual tonnage of imports of bananas from the dollar area received by each company under the quota arrangements.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 13 December 1989]: No. Details of allocation of shares in all import-administered quotas are regarded as confidential.

Waste Reduction

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what discussions he has had in the last 12 months with Fisons Limited on waste reduction and minimisation; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what discussions he has had in the last 12 months with Orsynthetics Limited on waste reduction and minimisation; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what discussions he has had in the last 12 months with Sterling Organics Limited on waste reduction and minimisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I have had no discussions on waste reduction and minimisation with the particular companies referred to by the hon. Member. However, my Department is encouraging business in general to take further steps to reduce their waste and has recently published a business guide to waste minimisation entitled "Cutting Your Losses". A copy of the booklet has been placed in the Library of the House.

Barlow Clowes

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will announce his response to the Parliamentary Commissioner's investigation into the role of his Department in the Barlow Clowes collapse; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 18 December 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

EMPLOYMENT

Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing (a) the increase in real earnings of manual and non-manual workers in the decade to June 1989 analysed in both cases to show for the worker at 1 per cent. and 5 per cent., from the top and the manual worker 5 per cent. from the bottom, (b) the average of the earnings above the high figures and below the low one and (c) for all groups the corresponding information (i) manufacturing and for the whole economy less the production industries, (ii) full-time adult female manual and non-manual workers in each case and (iii) the numbers covered by each category.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, further to his reply of 11 December to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, Official Report, columns 467-68, with regard to the increases in weekly and hourly earnings of certain workers, what is his estimate of the increase in unit labour costs in each case in the decade ending in April.

Mr. Nicholls: Information on unit labour costs is not available in the form requested.

Business and Professional Women

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the United Kingdom Federation of Business and Professional Women to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Nicholls: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for an exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 22 January to Friday 26 January.

Employment Training

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many trainees are undergoing employment training in (a) Burnley, (b) Pendle, (c) Hyndburn and (d) Rossendale and Darwen constituencies; and how many training scheme vacancies exist.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available on a parliamentary constituency basis and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what special funding arrangements there are to cater for the needs of people with disabilities participating in the employment training programme.

Mr. Nicholls: Additional funding is available to meet the special training needs of people with disabilities, where these arise, as follows:

(a) the necessary cost of providing special equipment, adaptations to premises or equipment, and, for the sensorily impaired, communication services.

(b) variable Supplementary Grants—up to £40 per week per trainee—for places involving higher cost training (including, but not exclusively for, people with disabilities).

(c) the necessary cost of creating an individualised training programme for those for whom, because of the effects of their disability, existing contracted training places would be inappropriate. This facility is known as Special Training Provision (STP).

(d) the necessary cost of providing a residential training place where this is deemed appropriate.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to change the provision for travel costs in the employment training scheme.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 14 December 1989]: There are no plans.

Trade Union Commissioner

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the annual accounts of the Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members.

Mr. Nicholls: No. Copies of the commissioner's statement of accounts will be laid before each House by the Comptroller and Auditor General in due course.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Labour and Social Affairs Council meeting held in Brussels on 30 November.

Mr. Eggar: In the field of health and safety at work, the Council formally adopted three directives. These provide for minimum standards of health and safety for the workplace, for the use of work equipment and the use of personal protective equipment by workers at work. In addition a common position was reached on a directive dealing with protection of workers from risks relating to exposure to carcinogens at work.

A draft resolution on the setting up of a European employment survey was also adopted; as was a proposal allowing the Commission to negotiate on behalf of the Community at the International Labour Organisation on certain issues.

The Council continued its discussion of the proposal for a technology training programme (Eurotecnet) following amendments by the European Parliament with a view to its adoption at an early future meeting of the Council. Also in the field of training, the Commission outlined a proposal for a programme on continuing training throughout working life; and there was a statement by the presidency on the need for training measures to combat female unemployment and promote equality of opportunity in the labour market.

The Council heard an oral presentation by the Commission on the proposed social action programme to implement the social charter. There was also an oral presentation by the Commission on the worker participation proposals in the draft European company statute.

Skills Training Agency

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place a copy of the information memorandum about the sale of the Skills Training Agency in the Library.

Mr. Eggar: Yes. The sale process has now reached a stage where I am able to place a copy of the information memorandum about STA, and a copy of the information packs about individual parts of STA, in the Library. Copies will also be made available to staff in the STA and to the recognised trade unions.

SCOTLAND

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has issued any recent guidelines to the Forestry Commission concerning the release of agricultural land for afforestation; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland on 24 October 1989, Official Report, columns 399-401, to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro).

Rape

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment his Department has made of the implications for reform of the law of the recent High Court trial in Aberdeen in which a man was charged with raping his wife.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: At the sitting of the High Court in Aberdeen commencing on 6 November 1989 a man did appear on indictment charged inter alia with raping his wife on two separate occasions. After trial, he was convicted of attempted rape and was sentenced to three years' imprisonment. It is not considered that this case has any implications for the reform of the criminal law of Scotland.

Land Registration

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the extent of coverage by districts of Scottish land registration as at December.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Land Register is operational in the areas of the counties of Renfrew, Dumbarton and Lanark, and the barony and regality of Glasgow.

Land Holdings

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the extent of land held in Scotland by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland in (a) September 1988 and (b) September 1989; and if he will break this down into region and island authorities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the table.

At 30 September each year

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the extent of land held in Scotland by the Forestry Commission in (a) September 1988 and (b) September 1989; and if he will break this down by region and island authorities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Forestry Commission compiles revised land use figures at 31 March each year by its forest districts. Figures are not available for other times of the year, nor are they held by local authority administrative areas.

At 31 March 1988, the commission managed 727,670 hectares of land in Scotland; the figure at 31 March 1989 was 725,576 hectares. The breakdown into forest districts is given in the commission's annual reports, copies of which can be found in the Library of the House.

Hospital Shops, Glasgow

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether his approval has been sought by Greater Glasgow health board to sell off its hospital shops currently run by the Women's Royal Voluntary Service and replace them with a commercial service; and what is his policy towards the adoption of such a policy by other health boards.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Greater Glasgow health board has not made any approach to my right hon. and learned Friend on this matter. I understand, however, that there have been discussions with the Women's Royal Voluntary Service about a particular site at Gartnavel general hospital.

Health boards have been advised by the Scottish Home and Health Department that they should pay close attention to the views of the Women's Royal Voluntary Service and other voluntary organisations when formulating proposals that would have an effect on the facilities used by these bodies to provide services for patients.

Student Allowances

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the levels of students' allowances and parental contributions for session 1990-91.

Mr. Lang: I propose to increase the main rates of allowances by 5 per cent. in the 1990-91 academic year. In addition, I propose to increase the differential in the rate paid to students studying in London. The new rates for Scottish students will be as follows (rates for 1989-90 are shown in brackets):

Student in the parental home	1,660	(1,575)
Student living away from home outside London	2,200	(2,090)
in London	2,780	(2,585)

Students in receipt of maintenance allowances will be eligible for reimbursement of travelling expenses in excess of the £60 included in the main rates.

The threshold for parental contributions, and the points on the contribution scales at which the rate of contribution changes, will be uprated to reflect the movement of earnings. Parents whose residual income is below £11,500 will not be assessed for a contribution.

The full contribution scales for session 1990-91 are set out in the table.

Notes:

1. The second parental contribution scale was introduced following the announcement on 15 March 1988 that tax relief on new non-charitable deeds of covenant would cease; it applies primarily to students who first entered higher education in session 1988-89 or later. The contributions assessed on scale 2 are 25 per cent. less than those on scale 1.

2. Contributions will rise with residual income, as follows:

Income	Scale 1	Scale 2
From £11,500 to £14,700	By £1 in £7	As in Scale 1, but reduced by 25 per cent.
From £14,701 to £21,600	By £1 in £5
From £21,601	By £1 in £4

3. The contribution payable may be less than the amounts shown in the relevant table, particularly at the top of the scale where the contribution is in respect of one award holder only. It will depend on the level of grant against which the contribution is to be set and whether or not any of the assessed contribution is itself offset by allowances for other dependent children.

Shipping Subsidies

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for shipping subsidies for sea transport services in Scotland in 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Subject to parliamentary approval of the estimates I propose to make available in 1990-91 total subsidy provision of £11·628 million. The deficit subsidy for Caledonian MacBrayne will reduce, in line with recent trends in the company's increased carryings and reduced costs, to £5·438 million. The estimated requirement to continue the fares reduction support for P and O services to Orkney and Shetland is increased to £4·6 million. On the basis of budgets submitted by coastal shippers within the tariff rebate subsidy scheme, the funding requirements next year will be £1·59 million.

These proposed levels of subsidy reflect the Government's continuing commitment to assisting the essential sea transport services to the Western and Northern Isles.

Postgraduate Students

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students have applied for assistance under the postgraduate student allowance scheme in every year since 1979.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 18 December 1989]: This information is not readily available prior to session 1986-87 and figures from that date are as follows:

Session	Number	Percentage awarded
1986-87	3,245	90
1987-88	3,411	89
1988-89	3,004	89
[1]1989-90	3,259	90

[1] To date.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent, on a constant price basis, on the postgraduate student allowance scheme in every year since 1979.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 18 December 1989]: Separate figures of expenditure on the postgraduate students' allowances scheme are not available before 1986-87. Expenditure for that and subsequent years at 1989-90 prices are as follows:

Year	£ million	Per capita £
1986-87	9·1	3,095
1987-88	9·2	3,016
1988-89	8·5	3,180
1989-90	[1]10·8	3,697

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are his spending plans for the postgraduate student allowance scheme for the years until 1992-93.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 18 December 1989]: The detailed expenditure plans within the totals announced by my right hon. and learned Friend on 6 December (Official Report, columns 328-33) will be set out in the Scottish commentary on public expenditure to 1992-93 to be published in the new year.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will change his administrative procedure so that students know which courses are eligible for assistance under the postgraduate student allowance scheme before the student applies for the course.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 18 December 1989]: A review group of officials is currently examining ways in which the administrative procedures of the postgraduate students' allowances scheme could be improved. This will be one of the criteria under consideration.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Moray of 30 November, Official Report, columns 393-94, he will give for each year since and including the year ended 31 March 1974 the number of applications rejected by a single member, where, subsequently, the applicant is granted an award;

(2) if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Moray of 30 November, Official Report, columns 393-94, he will give the number of applications rejected for each year ended 31 March since and including 31 March 1974 for (a) Scotland and (b) England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: The table sets out the available information kept by the board and published in its annual reports. In many cases the decisions made at hearings relate to applications originally rejected in previous years.

[1] Information not collated.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Moray of 30 November, Official Report, columns 393-94, he will breakdown the percentage of cases submitted to a single member from date of registration of claim within a period of over 12 months to show the percentage of cases submitted within (a) 12 to 15 months, (b) 15 to 18 months, (c) 18 to 21 months, (d) 21 to 24 months, (e) 24 to 27 months, (f) 27 to 30 months, (g) 30 to 33 months and (h) 33 to 36 months.

Mr. John Patten: The board does not at present keep a breakdown of such cases for periods over 12 months but has been asked to do so in future years.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Moray of 30 November, Official Report, columns 393-94, he will instruct the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board to record the average time taken to process a claim from registration to (a) issue to the applicant of the award, and in rejected applications (b) the date of final rejection of the claim.

Mr. John Patten: No. Collection of information on average times for awards to be made or claims to be rejected would provide no reliable guide to the board's performance. Average times would be distorted by cases where uncertain prognosis or the need for extensive inquiries precluded an early determination.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Moray of 30 November, Official Report, columns 393-94, he will instruct the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board to record the number of applicants who die before their claims are decided.

Mr. John Patten: The board is not necessarily aware of the reasons why applications lapse.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Moray of 30 November, Official Report, columns 393-94, whether the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board records in respect of each application (a) the date of issue to the applicant of the decision of the single member, (b) the date of issue to the applicant of the decision of the board, where not by a single member and/or (c) the date of issue to the applicant of the award.

Mr. John Patten: This information is held on individual case files but is not collated.

South Devon Clerkship

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many employees will be made redundant in the proposed enlarged south Devon clerkship and in merging the north and west Devon clerkships; and what are their designations;

(2) if he will make it his policy to withhold his approval of the appointment of the Torbay clerk to the enlarged south Devon clerkship of the magistrates courts until he is satisfied that the reorganisation will result in an administration which is substantially more economic and efficient than merging the existing north and west Devon clerkships;

(3) what consultations have taken place with each of the benches in the north and west Devon clerkships with regard to the proposed reorganisation of magistrates courts in south Devon; what weight has been given to their recommendations; if he will set out the steps taken to ensure adequate consultations; and who makes the final decision;

(4) what is the estimated cost of the proposed reorganisation of the south Devon clerkships; what he estimates the savings will be in each of the next three years for the present system and for the enlarged south Devon system; and what estimate he has made of efficiency and cost savings produced by the merging of the present north and west Devon clerkships.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that the Devon magistrates courts committee has been considering the possible amalgamation of petty sessional divisions and the reorganisation of clerkships in the county. However, the committee has not yet submitted a draft amalgamation order under section 23 of the Justices of the Peace Act 1979 for my right hon. and learned Friend's approval. The Act provides for consultation with interested parties before a draft order is submitted and for my right hon. and learned Friend to take relevant objections into account before reaching a decision on a draft order. It would be inappropriate for me to comment on the merits of proposals which have yet to be submitted to us.

Nor has the Committee yet sought my right hon. and learned Friend's approval for the permanent appointment of a justices clerk (as it is required to do under section 25 of the 1979 Act) as part of any planned reorganisation of clerkships. Before approving an appointment we will consider any representations which might be made by magistrates of the division concerned.

Police Officers

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will put a table in the Official Report showing (a) his recent allocation of police officers by police authority, (b) the number of police officers requested by the authorities concerned and (c) the number of police officers as a proportion of the population served that will pertain after the new allocations are made.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is as follows:

[3] The Home Secretary is police authority for the Metropolitan Police.

Mr. Abdul Shamji

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will consider a transfer of Mr. Abdul Shamji, currently at Wandsworth prison, to an open prison;

(2) if he will review the case of Mr. Abdul Shamji, currently serving a sentence at Wandsworth prison.

Mr. Mellor: Mr. Shamji's case for reallocation to open conditions is being considered by the authorities at Wandsworth in the normal way.

Video Surveillance

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any proposals to place the regulation of video surveillance on a statutory footing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We have no plans to introduce legislation covering the use of video cameras in public places for surveillance purposes to combat crime. The Home Office issued guidelines in 1984 for the police on the use of surveillance equipment. These guidelines make it clear that CCTV devices should be used by the police only where they are necessary for the efficient conduct of police operations and with due regard for the intrusion of privacy that may result in particular circumstances.

Video Recorded Evidence

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has received the report of the advisory group on video recorded evidence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: I received the report of the advisory group on 6 October. I am most grateful to the chairman, the Common Serjeant of London, his Honour Judge Pigot QC, and to the other members of the group for their work. I have arranged for the report to be published today. A copy will be placed in the Library. Comments on the report are welcome: they should be sent to the Home Office, C4 Division, Room 339, 50 Queen Anne's Gate, London SW1H 9AT by 30 April 1990.

Law Courts

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many vacancies there are currently countrywide for court clerks, giving figures by region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Manpower returns received from 91 of the 105 magistrates courts committees in England and Wales indicated that there were 102 vacancies for court clerks at 30 September 1989, the latest date for which information is available, as shown in the table.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the latest figure available for the current year for (a) the number of cases in court which last five minutes or less, (b) the amount of legal aid costs these cases incur and (c) what representation he has received on the waiting time for such cases; and if he will make a statement concerning the introduction of court timetabling.

Mr. John Patten: No information is available on the number of cases in magistrates courts which last five minutes or less and I understand from my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor that information on the number of legal aid bills submitted for cases where legal representatives appeared in court for five minutes or less could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

From time to time complaints are made about long waiting periods for cases which were disposed of very quickly. However, it can be difficult to predict how long a case will take.

As to the introduction of court timetabling I would refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to his question on 7 December 1989 at column 397.

Civil Defence

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many nuclear bunkers have been built or provided by local authorities in Wales to date; and how many additional bunkers are now being planned.

Mr. John Patten: The Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983 impose on local authorities a duty to establish, equip and maintain emergency centres for the control and co-ordination of action in the event of hostile attack or threat of attack. Of the total of 53 such centres required in Wales, 16 are in place and comply with standards advised in guidance given to local authorities. A further 14 centres require modification in order to meet these standards fully. Planning for such modifications and for the provision of additional centres will be raised in current discussion with relevant authorities in connection with their performance generally in meeting civil defence statutory requirements.

Vehicle Security

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken to implement the conclusions of the working group on car security made in November 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The working group on car security made a number of recommendations, most of which were aimed at car manufacturers and the insurance industry.

In response to the working group's recommendations, car security publicity by the Home Office, Department of Transport and the DVLC has continued at a high level and there has been a noticeable increase in publicity from manufacturers.

Five parts of a British standard on vehicle security, covering mechanical locking systems, security of in-car entertainment equipment, window etching, central power locking and dead-locking, and both parts of a standard on anti-theft alarms, have now been published. Much progress is already evident in new vehicle production, including high security door, boot and ignition locks, fuel filler locks, anti-theft radios and alarm systems and in the provision of window etching services. A computerised motor insurance anti-fraud and theft register was launched in March 1987 and there has been a general increase in car security advice from insurers and brokers, though more could be done.

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps have been taken to implement the recommendations of the Standing Conference on Crime Prevention working group on car crime, made in December 1988.

Mr. John Patten: The car crime working group continued its work this year. A group of experts has been formed to consider the production of a car-crime prevention video for use in schools. The working group and the Home Office have taken steps to bring the working group's recommendations to the attention of car manufacturers and the media. In response to the working group's recommendations, the Home Office scientific research and development branch is carrying out research into the production of an index of the vulnerability of types of car to theft and into the correlation between car theft and road accidents. The working group has explored ways in which statistics aimed at the prevention of car crime might be collected and published.

It is encouraging that the most recent published statistics, covering the period of 12 months to June 1989 showed a reduction of almost 4 per cent. in the number of recorded offences of car crime, compared with the corresponding period to the end of June 1987.

Drugs

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money has been spent on research into drug addiction, other than on the campaign Heroin Screws You Up and its evaluation, in the past five years or for any other period of years for which the information is available, by (a) his Department, (b) the Department of Education and Science and (c) the Department of Health.

Mr. Mellor: Estimated expenditure on research into drug addiction in the current and preceding four financial years, excluding evaluation studies, is as follows:—

Financial year	Home Office	Department of Health
1985-86	8,769	[1]
1986-87	26,331	[1]
1987-88	56,525	[1]
1988-89	32,182	£311,222
1989-90	28,259	£225,406
Total	152,066
Sub-total		£536,628
5 year DH total £1·2 million

[1] Separate figures for these years are not readily available, but an average of £221,124 was spent in each year.

The Department of Education and Science has no responsibility for research into drug addiction, but has funded a number of projects related to the development and evaluation of education about substance misuse.

Interpreters

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many interpreters are employed by his Department in the immigration service for translation from English to Kurdish; and what training they are given.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 18 December 1989]: There are no Kurdish-speaking interpreters in permanent employment with the immigration service, but seven have been employed this year on a casual basis. Interpreters are instructed to give a direct translation of questions put and answers given.

War Crimes Inquiry

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is his best estimate of the cost to public funds of prosecuting the three alleged war criminals referred to in paragraph 10.5 of the report of the war crimes inquiry, including the cost of obtaining witnesses and evidence from the Soviet Union and eastern Europe and assuming the provision of legal aid to the defendants;

(2) what is his best estimate of the overall cost to public funds over the coming 10 years of implementing the recommendations contained in the report of the war crimes inquiry (Cm. 744) in respect of the 127 alleged war criminals believed to be in resident in the United Kingdom and recommended for prosecution or further investigation.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 18 December 1989]: It is not possible to give an indication about the costs which might arise in connection with any investigations and prosecutions of war criminals which might take place if the necessary legislative provision were to be made. However, the experience of other countries which have instigated investigations suggests that the costs involved could be substantial. The costs of conducting any trials of alleged war criminals which might take place would depend upon the number of such trials and the complexity of each case.

WALES

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has issued any recent guidance to the Forestry Commission in Wales concerning the release of agricultural land for afforestation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I recognise the important role that forestry can play as an alternative use of agricultural land. Guidance is readily available.

National Health Service

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provision he has made for expenditure on the National Health Service in Wales in the next financial year on (a) remuneration to non-executive members of health authorities and family practitioners services authorities, (b) arrangements necessary for establishing contracts for services, (c) arrangements necessary for establishing hospital trusts, (d) additional tasks as a result of the introduction of general practitioner practice funds, (e) capital cost of information systems for the management of drug expenditure, (f) audit costs, and (g) the upkeep of asset registers and the calculation of capital charges.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend expects to announce the detailed provision for hospital and community health service resources to district health authorities when the House reassembles in the new year. I shall write to the hon. Gentleman then.

School Buildings

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice he gives local education authorities in Wales concerning (a) the repair of flat roofs in schools and (b) the use of flat roofs in plans for new school buildings.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Design note 46 entitled "Maintenance and Renewal in Educational Buildings: Flat Roofs" was issued to all local education authorities in England and Wales in 1985. I will arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has received as to which Welsh schools are in need of refurbishment; what is the age of the schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Expenditure plans submitted each year by local education authorities provide information about education building needs, including refurbishment of schools, and these are the subject of discussion with the Department. The age of schools is not a reliable indicator of expenditure needs.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will commission a survey of the school buildings in Wales concerning their state of repair, energy conservation and age; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: In the context of my right hon. Friend's efficiency initiative, local authorities have already prepared reports on energy management and property review, and have further action in hand. The property review requires the setting up of appropriate records in regard to age and condition of buildings, including schools.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he has any plans to meet (a) Clwyd local education authority leaders, (b) Clwyd parent—teacher association leaders, (c) teacher union leaders and (d) representatives of school governers to discuss funding for school regions and the problem of water seepage on flat school roofs; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a special allocation to the Clwyd local education authority to enable the authority to deal with the water seepage on flat roofs of Clwyd schools.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No. Allocations of resources within a local education authority's area and responsibility for education buildings are matters for the local education authority.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish estimated poll tax payments per head, in current prices, which will be required after removal of safety net arrangements and based on current Welsh Office targets for local government spending for (a) Wales as a whole and (b) each district council area.

Mr. Peter Walker: Estimates of community charge levels for Wales as a whole and for each district council area were placed in the Library on Monday 18 December 1989. I no longer propose to make safety net adjustments to revenue support grant entitlements.

Welsh Water

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for Welsh Water plc the estimated percentage held by (a) individual shareholders and (b) financial institutions as on the first day of trading in the new company.

Mr. Grist: The allocations to applicants for shares in Welsh Water plc were announced by Schroders in a press release on 11 December. The offer of Welsh Water shares to the general public was oversubscribed to an extent that the clawback provisions set out in the prospectus on the water share offers were triggered. Thus, 39·25 per cent. of the shares on offer was allocated to institutions and 46·875 per cent. of the shares on offer was allocated to applicants in the retail public offers.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the percentage of shares in Welsh Water plc which were in the hands of shareholders with addresses outside Wales on the first day of trading in the new company.

Mr. Grist: No. This information is not readily available, but at least half of the shares allocated to applicants in the retail public offer were to customers, employees and pensioners of Welsh Water.

Improvement Grants

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the details of the means-testing for the new improvement grants payable from 1 April 1990.

Mr. Peter Walker: Details of the test of resources will be included in regulations which are currently being prepared and will be laid before this House in due course.

European Regional Development Fund Aid

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his best estimate of the total level of European regional development fund aid commitments jointly to all eligible public bodies in the three counties of Powys, Gwynedd and Dyfed in each of the years 1984 to 1988.

Mr. Peter Walker: European regional development fund commitments to eligible public bodies in the three counties of Powys, Gwynedd and Dyfed in each of the past five years are shown in the following table:

Year	£ million
1984	6·6
1985	19·5
1986	7·5
1987	5·6
1988	14·0

Figures do not include some Welsh projects which cross the boundaries of administrative areas.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his best estimate of the total level of European regional development fund aid commitments to all eligible public bodies in Clwyd in 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Peter Walker: The latest estimate for European regional development fund non-quota commitments to all eligible public bodies in Clwyd for 1989 is £2·4 million.

No commitments have yet been made for 1989 and 1990 under the Clwyd integrated development operation programme.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his most up-to-date estimate for the amount of European regional development fund assistance commitments to all eligible public bodies in the four counties of industrial south Wales in each of the years 1984 to 1988.

Mr. Peter Walker: European regional development fund commitments to eligible public bodies in the four counties of industrial south Wales in each of the past five years are shown in the following table:

Year	£ million
1984	51·1
1985	17·0
1986	17·8
1987	41·9
1988	29·1

Figures do not include some Welsh projects which cross the boundaries of administrative areas.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his most up-to-date estimate for the amount of European regional development fund commitments to all eligible public bodies in the four counties of industrial south Wales in (a) the present year and (b) 1990.

Mr. Grist: The latest estimate for European regional development fund commitments to the mid-Glamorgan national programme of community interest and for non-quota grant in the four counties of industrial south Wales for 1989 is £10·4 million.

No commitments have yet been made for 1989 and 1990 under the integrated development operation programme for industrial south Wales.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his most up-to-date estimate of the amount of European regional development fund commitments to all eligible public bodies in Clwyd in each of the years 1984 to 1988.

Mr. Peter Walker: European regional development fund commitments to eligible public bodies in Clwyd in each of the past five years are shown in the following table:

Year	£ million
1984	4·3
1985	18·3
1986	19·2

Year	£ million
1987	10·2
1988	20·2

Figures do not include some Welsh projects which cross the boundaries of administrative areas.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his most up-to-date estimate of the likely final total of European regional development fund aid commitments jointly to all eligible public bodies in the counties of Powys, Gwynedd and Dyfed in 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Grist: The latest estimate for European regional development fund commitments to all eligible public bodies in the three counties of Powys, Gwynedd and Dyfed for 1989 is £20·4 million.

No commitments have yet been made for 1990.

Health Service Resources

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has reached a decision about the allocation of resources for health and personal social services in Wales in 1990-91.

Mr. Peter Walker: Subject to parliamentary approval, I propose to allocate £1,472 million in 1990-91 to central Government's own expenditure on health and personal social services in Wales. This represents a cash increase of £156·7 million over 1989-90 plans, and an increase of some £98 million over planned provision for 1990-91.

My proposals include £1,055·8 million for the hospital and community health services, an increase of £101·1 million over planned provision in 1989-90. I will announce allocations to individual health authorities as soon as possible. In addition to their allocations, health authorities will retain the benefit of cash released through cost improvement programmes, income from charges for the treatment of private patients and from income generation schemes, and receipts from the sale of surplus land and buildings.

These additional resources will allow substantial investment in the information management systems that are required to support implementation of the White Paper "Working for Patients", and will also make possible the further development of modern patterns of service for those with mental handicaps, and those suffering from mental illness; of breast and cervical cancer screening services; of programmes to address the problems of alcohol and other drug abuse; and of initiatives to support the promotion of a healthy lifestyle.

HEALTH

Expenditure

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for each year since 1974-75 capital spending on hospital and community health services in net terms after deducting proceeds from land and property sales (i) in cash terms, (ii) adjusted using the gross domestic product deflator and (iii) adjusted using the relevant index of National Health Service prices.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I see no logical reason for excluding proceeds of land and property sales from figures on capital spending by the NHS and I have given these proceeds in addition to the information requested in order to give a sensible picture of capital investment in the service.

Community Care

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the redeployment of financial resources from long-stay hospitals in the closure/partial closure programme and on how and where these have been used to develop services for community care for people with mental handicap.

Mr. Freeman: Decisions regarding the redeployment of financial resources released from long stay hospitals are primarily a matter for health authorities in consultation with the relevant local authorities and in the light of local needs and circumstances. Proceeds from the sale of mental handicap hospitals must be used specifically for the development of services for that client group unless there are exceptional circumstances and the Department has agreed otherwise. Systematic information as to how resources have been redeployed to community services is not available centrally.

Energy Statistics

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give, for each region and as a total for England and Wales (a) the total number of licensed vehicles at the latest available date, (b) the total amount spent on energy during the latest year for which figures are available, broken down into (i) petrol supply, (ii) electricity supply, (iii) gas supply and (iv) other and (c) the total amount spent on insulation on the National Health Service estate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Statistics on the total number of licensed vehicles which include Crown cars, ambulances and commercial vehicles, are not held centrally. The total amounts, for hospital sites in England and Wales, spent by health authorities on petrol supply, electricity supply, gas supply and others, in the financial year 1988-89 (£ million rounded up to two decimal places) are provisionally estimated as follows:

Region	Petrol	Electricity	Gas	Other

Grand Total England £229·23 million
Wales £13·07 million

[1]There is not a separate figure for total amount spent on petrol in Wales. Expenditure on petrol is included in "other" column.

(c) Figures for the total amount spent on insulation on the NHS estate are not available. Guidance on insulation and other energy-saving measures is available to the NHS in my Department's national energy code ('ENCODE'). Ministers have, on a number of occasions, stated their wish for energy savings in the NHS commensurate with providing a proper service. So too has the Public Accounts Committee and its target of a saving in energy consumption of 1·5 per cent. per annum is generally being achieved.

Infections

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the incidence of infection by county in England and Wales caused by (a) campylobacter, (b) cryptospiridia and (c) leptospira.

Mr. Freeman: The data requested are not available by county. The provisional data given in the table are a breakdown of reports by National Health Service health regions for England and Wales and are based on reports received by CDSC from laboratories in England and Wales. They cover 1989 up to and including the week ending 8 December 1989.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has concerning the incidence by county in England and Wales and by occupational group of salmonella infection caused by (a) drinking unpasteurised milk and (b) contact with sick animals.

Mr. Freeman: Information is not available in the form requested. Three outbreaks of salmonellosis associated with drinking unpasteurised milk, in which there was microbiological or epidemiological evidence to confirm the association, were recorded in 1988 (provisional total), two in the north western region, and one in Wessex region. One outbreak affected the local community and two outbreaks affected farming personnel from the implicated milk-producing farms as well as persons in the local community. No outbreaks have been recorded so far in 1989.

This information is based on reports of outbreaks of salmonella infection to the public health laboratory service communicable disease surveillance centre by laboratories and local authority environmental health departments in England and Wales.

It is not possible to identify separately salmonellosis which is linked to contact with sick animals as distinct from that of a food origin.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has concerning the incidence of chlamydiosis arising from (a) domestic poultry and (b) other birds; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information available is set out in the table. Person-to-person transmission of chlamydia psittaci is rare: outbreaks of the disease in humans occur mainly among aviary and quarantine station workers, poultry processors and veterinarians.

Ambulance Service

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the average time spent by an ambulance man on transporting (a) emergency cases and (b) non-emergency cases.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not available centrally.

Nurses Grading

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the numbers of nursing grade appeals that have not been dealt with by each health authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide estimates showing the amount of capital expenditure on hospital and community health services in each financial year from 1978-79 to 1989-90.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is shown in the table.

Laboratory Facilities

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any health authority laboratory facilities in the North West regional health authority area are used for veterinary purposes.

Mr. Freeman: We are aware of only one health authority in this region whose laboratory facilities are being used for veterinary purposes, that being Oldham health authority, which does a very small amount of specimen testing.

Self-governing Trusts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all the expressions of interest in self-governing trust status that he has so far rejected.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A total of 188 expressions of interests in NHS trust status have been received so far. I understand that sponsors of some 79 of these intend to prepare draft applications for NHS trust status in April 1991. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State will consider all applications for trust status on their merits when received.

Deaf-Blind People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many registered deaf-blind people there are in each local authority;

(2) what assessment he has made of the efficacy of the current methods of recording deaf-blind people in local authorities;

(3) what is his Department's estimate of the total number of deaf-blind people in Britain;

(4) whether any pilot project is being carried out to identify numbers of deaf-blind people.

Mr. Freeman: The numbers of registered blind persons in each local authority who are also deaf or hard of hearing are published in "Registered Blind and Partially Sighted Persons at 31 March 1988: England", a copy of which is in the Library.

The social services inspectorate has recently undertaken an inspection of personal social services for deaf-blind people. The inspection's findings confirm that the number of people registered with local authorities as blind who are also deaf or hard of hearing cannot be used as a reliable basis for a national estimate of the numbers of deaf-blind people because registration with a local authority is voluntary and not all deaf-blind people choose to register.

However, using a broad, functional definition of deaf-blindness, the National Deaf Blind and Rubella Association (SENSE) has estimated that there may be some 11,000 deaf-blind people in the United Kingdom.

The Department is not carrying out any pilot project to identify numbers of deaf-blind people. However, I understand that the Royal National Institute for the Deaf has done some work in this area and will be publishing a report in January 1990.

Profoundly Handicapped People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times local authorities have used their powers under section 43 of the National Assistance Act 1948 to assume responsibility for the care of adults who are unable to care for themselves as a result of profound handicap.

Mr. Freeman: I assume that the right hon. Member is referring to section 47 of the Act. This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times profoundly mentally handicapped people have been sanctioned under the terms of the Mental Health Act in order to ensure their safety.

Mr. Freeman: In 1987-88 there were 186 admissions, under sections of the Mental Health Act 1983, of patients categorised as mentally impaired or severely mentally impaired. Information is not held centrally as to how many of these patients were admitted for their own safety, rather than the other reasons specified in the Act.

Severely Disabled People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether he has any plans to introduce an at-risk register for severely disabled adults being cared for at home, where there is doubt as to the quality of the care they are receiving;

(2) whether he has any plans to review the legislation available for protecting the interests of severely disabled people over the age of 18 years who are unable to look after themselves; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We have no plans to do so.

Speech Therapy

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to review the procedure whereby district health authorities which fund speech therapy provision in schools should give reasonable notice to the schools concerned before withdrawing funding arrangements.

Mr. Freeman: No. District health authorities are responsible for determining the level of speech therapy provision for schools in their area, in the light of local circumstances, their assessment of priorities, and the available resources. We expect district health authorities to liaise closely with local education authorities over provision of speech therapy in schools.

Wythenshawe Hospital

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has had from the head of medical services at Manchester airport in regard to the future of the accident and emergency department at Wythenshawe hospital; what reply he is sending; if there is any action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received a letter from the chief executive of Manchester Airport plc about the provision of accident and emergency services in the area of Manchester airport and referring to the proposals of the South Manchester district health authority to rationalise acute and other services at the Withington and Wythenshawe hospitals. The South Manchester district health authority has invited comments on its rationalisation plans from all interested parties including the community health council. The district authority will be able to proceed to implement the plans only with the agreement of the local community health council or, if that is withheld, with the agreement of the North West regional health authority. This is the standard procedure for dealing with significant changes in the use of Health Service facilities. The planning of health services at district level is of course best dealt with at a local level. Ministers would not wish to be involved unless no local agreement can be reached.

The Department will be replying to the chief executive in these terms.

Health Service (Bradford)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many people are to be appointed to assist Dr. Mark Baker to prepare Bradford's acute hospital services for self-government; what budget has been agreed to meet staff costs and other costs associated with this preparatory work; who is to pay these costs; who has authorised this preparatory expenditure; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what salary and expenses will be paid to the person appointed as district general manager of Bradford health authority, to succeed Dr. Mark Baker; how long the appointment is to last; whether the person appointed will be given a contract; whether Dr. Mark Baker has the right to resume his former role as district general manager; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: These matters are for decision locally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Bradford health authority, Mr. R. G. Brooke, in the first instance.

Benzodiazepines

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide a breakdown of the number of prescriptions issued by community pharmacists during 1988 for the following benzodiazepines (a) diazepam, (b) tenazepam, (c) lorazepam, (d) nitrazepam and (e) chlordiazepoxide.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The number of prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists for the drugs requested is as follows:

Great Britain	Number of prescriptions in 1988
	Millions
Diazepam	4·5
Tenazepam	7·7
Lorazepam	2·1
Nitrazepam	4·6
Chlordiazepoxide	0·9

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has of the number of chronic users of benzodiazepines in the United Kingdom and what action he intends to take to reduce this number.

Mr. Freeman: There are no precise figures to show the level of benzodiazepine dependence. A number of measures have been taken to tackle the problem, including the issue of advice to doctors on the careful use of these drugs, the promotion of alternatives to their use, and the development of services to help those dependent on them.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what grants have been made in 1989-90 under the central drugs initiative to services specifically for those dependent on benzodiazepines.

Mr. Freeman: The central drugs initiative was established in 1983-84 as a pump-priming scheme to provide capital and revenue resources for local projects to assist people suffering from drug dependence. Each grant was to last for three years, and the last approach was made in 1987, so that the scheme is now drawing to a close.

Grants specifically for those dependent on benzodiazepines or other tranquillisers under this initiative totalled over £300,000. None of these grants fell into the current financial year. It is not possible to estimate the extent to which these grant-aided schemes also provide services for this group.

The initiative is in addition to the other funds for drug dependence, in particular the earmarked money allocated to regional health authorities for drug dependence in each financial year since 1986, and which in the current year totals nearly £15 million.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health why people dependent on benzodiazepines are classed by his Department as drug misusers.

Mr. Freeman: The Department is concerned with the prevention and treatment of drug dependence irrespective of whether the condition arises from illicit or prescribed drug use. Equally, the funds that the Department has made available are for the development of services both for those dependent on prescribed drugs and those experiencing problems with illicit drug use.

Medicine Leaflets

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the European Community proposal to require leaflets to be provided with medicines has now been adopted; and when it will be implemented in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: European Community (EC) Council directive 89/341 of 3 May 1989, among other things, introduced a requirement to provide leaflets with medicines. The content of such leaflets is still under consideration. The EC Commission has recently announced its intention to forward a proposal to the Council of Ministers early in the new year. It would be premature to make commitments about United Kingdom implementation in advance of negotiations and adoption by Council of the directive, but we look forward to playing a constructive part in discussions.

Disabled People

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to begin consultation with local authority associations and voluntary organisations on sections 1, 2 and 3 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Mr. Freeman: We are currently examining these sections with a view to identifying those provisions with significant resource implications. We will then seek the assistance of interested bodies to help us to estimate their cost.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date he expects to publish the first report to Parliament under section 11 of the disabled persons Act 1986, due to be implemented at the end of 1989.

Mr. Freeman: Within the next few days.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements will be made to publish on an annual basis, the total public sector expenditure on care services for disabled people, covering expenditure incurred by central Government, including social security payments, local authorities, health authorities and other statutory service providers funded from public money.

Mr. Scott: I have been asked to reply.

Information on public expenditure on care services for disabled people is currently available in a number of publications. The public expenditure White Paper analyses past and present expenditure on social security both by broad client groups and by individual benefits, some of which may be relevant to the provision of care. Expenditure on health and personal social services by broad client group is published in "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics", for example tables 2.8, 2.6 and 2.9, in the key indicators of local authority social services package; and in the local authority profiles. Information is also available from Health Service cost returns and reports of the Social Services Committee, copies of which are available in the Library. The use made by disabled people of general health and social services (for example acute hospital services and home help services) is not separately identified. We have no plans to change the present publication arrangements.

Contraceptive Services

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those district health authorities who have (a) expanded and (b) contracted their provision of contraceptive services in each of the last three years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 11 December 1989]: The information is not available in exactly the form requested.

The data collected cover the number of family planning clinic sessions, and attendances at family planning clinics.

The latest available figures are for 1987-88. The districts listed, copies of which have been placed in the Library, are those where:

(1) both the number of attendances and the number of sessions held increased over the period 1984 to 1987-88. (14 districts)
(2) both the number of attendances and the number of sessions decreased over the same period. (110 districts)
(3) the number of attendances decreased while the number of sessions increased. (58 districts)
(4) the number of attendances increased while the number of sessions decreased. (9 districts)

The number of sessions offered by family planning clinics may be reduced as part of a rationalisation of services by health authorities to make more effective use of available resources. Some 97 per cent. of general practitioners provide planning services and about 65 per cent. of the women using family planning services prefer to see a general practitioner.

Government policy remains that people should be free to choose their source of family planning advice and that health authority contraceptive services complement, rather than duplicate, those which general practitioners provide. This is reflected in current guidance issued to health authorities by the Department.

NHS Reform

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many written comments he received on (a) the White Paper "Working for Patients" and (b) the White Paper "Care in the Community", and how many of (a) and (b) were favourable to the proposals.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 18 December 1989]: More than 13,500 written comments have been received on the Government's proposals to improve the Health Service. Many ask questions, many support all or some of the proposals, some refer only to specific aspects. It is not possible to distinguish them in the way the hon. Member requests. We have also received a number of comments on the White Paper "Caring for People". These are generally favourable, but seek clarification on a number of points. The lengthy Labour party campaign produced the equivalent of about 300 postcards for each district health authority area.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Staff

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many employees employed by hon. Members are paid for through the secretarial and office allowance.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: A total of 1,262 in the month of December 1989.

The above figure relates to persons directly employed by Members, ie, paid through the PAYE system. It does not include persons who are self-employed or fee-earning, or agency and other staff provided through an arrangement with a firm or business organisation.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit Statistics

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will update the information given in tables 1 and 2 in answer to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central on 21 December 1988, Official Report, columns 303-6 to April/May 1989 using April/May 1988 prices and supply additional information on the proportion of residents on supplementary benefit/income support from February 1986, update table 2 in May 1989 prices and provide the figures for the categories mentioned in table 2 as per the uprating due to take effect in April 1990.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is in the tables. All figures in table 1 are estimates. Information on the proportion of residents receiving income support is not yet available beyond May 1988. Table 2 provides information from April 1985 when the current system of national limits was introduced.

Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many contracts over £92,500 have been let by his Department in the 1988-89 financial year and in the current financial year to date; and how many of these were (a) automatically renewed and (b) open to competition by advertisement throughout the European Community.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The number of contracts awarded by the then Department of Health and Social Security and covered by the provisions of the EC supplies directive, for which the current threshold is £92,000, was 40 in the 1988-89 financial year. Of these 37 were awarded following advertisement in the EC Journal and one was considered to be exempt from advertising and may have been awarded to the previous supplier.

The number of contracts awarded by the Department of Social Security and covered by the provisions of the EC supplies directive, for which the current threshold is £92,000, is 14 in the current financial year to date. All were awarded following advertisement in the EC Journal.

Begging

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of people begging in (i) London and (ii) the rest of the country; what recent surveys have been carried out; and if he will institute a survey now so as to ascertain the up-to-date numbers involved.

Mr. John Patten: I have been asked to reply.

The only statistics available are of the number prosecuted for begging each year. In 1988 there were 573 such prosecutions in England and Wales of which 512 (89 per cent.) resulted in convictions. In the Metropolitan police district there were 500 prosecutions of which 455 (91 per cent.) resulted in convictions. We have no present plans to institute a survey on begging.

Social Fund

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has yet reached any conclusion as a result of his continued monitoring of the social fund.

Mr. Tony Newton: Our continued monitoring of the social fund suggests that it is generally working well. After a slow start in the first year, awareness of both community care grants and of the interest-free loan system has clearly grown. Arrangements for repayment also appear to be working well, indeed, the flow of repayments is somewhat higher than had been forecast, though this partly reflects the pattern of loans in the previous financial year.

It is however also clear from our monitoring that, as might be expected at what is still a relatively early stage in the fund's operation, the pattern of demand varies from office to office, and the present budgets of certain offices have come under exceptional pressure. We shall of course seek to take these factors into account in setting the allocation for 1990-91, which we shall do in the early part of next year. Meanwhile, however, I intend to increase the gross budget of the fund by about £3 million in 1989-90, in order to increase the individual allocation of just under 100 offices where such particular pressures have arisen. In view of the flow of repayments, this will not entail a corresponding increase in the expected net total of expenditure in the present year.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review the national allocation to the social fund for the current year as a matter of urgency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart).

Homelessness

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Social Security what special resources have been made available to support the homeless and destitute over the Christmas period.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The social security system provides substantial help for the homeless and destitute at all times of the year. The Government are keeping under review whether special emergency arrangements are necessary to meet special problems and, if so, what form of help would be most effective.

Benefit Claimants, Woolwich

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration his Department undertook before deciding to transfer responsibility for all benefit claimants in Abbey Wood SE12 and Thamesmead SE28 from the Woolwich to the Bexley office.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The transfer of responsibility for all benefit claimants to our Bexley office forms part of a larger scheme to improve service to the public in the Lewisham/Eltham, Woolwich/Bexley area.

Before taking the decision a survey was carried out into the population distribution of the area and into lines of communication to the relevant offices. Another factor taken into account was that the postal districts in question were already dealt with by two separate offices. It has been our policy for some time in the London area to avoid unnecessary confusion by arranging for complete postal districts to be dealt with by a single local office.

We are very much aware of the need for the local community to have easy access to advice and information. We believe that by drawing together all benefits for a particular area into a single office we shall improve the overall standard of service to the public. Anyone who does not wish to visit an office and who needs general advice may use the DSS freeline service on 0800 666555. In addition, we are always ready to arrange a home visit if one is needed.

Family Benefits

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was expenditure in the United Kingdom on maternity/family social protection benefits using the European system of integrated social protection statistics depreciation for each year from 1979 to the latest available; and what equivalent information he has for each of the other European Community member states.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest statistics available were published in June 1989 in issue 1989-2 of Eurostat's "Rapid Reports on Population and Social Conditions", a copy of which is in the Library.

Local Offices, Edinburgh

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many staff at his Department's offices in Edinburgh speak (a) Urdu, (b) Punjabi, (c) Bengali, including the Sylheti dialect, (d) Chinese, (e) Farsi, (f) Hindi and (g) Gujerati.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In the Department's five Edinburgh local offices there are two speakers of Urdu, two of Hindi and there is one speaker of Punjabi.

Family Credit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of people on family credit immediately before the start of the recent family credit publicity campaign; what was the number of successful claims during the campaign; what was the number of unsuccessful claims during the campaign; what is the number of claims currently awaiting processing; what is the number of people now receiving family credit; and if he has plans to follow up this campaign.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 5 December 1989]: A further publicity campaign to promote awareness of family credit began on 6 November and is still continuing. A full evaluation of the effectiveness of the campaign will not be possible for some time, but in the first five weeks after it began a total of 107,000 claims were received compared with only 68,800 in the same period in 1988. Of the 107,000 claims, 62,200 were new claims from families not receiving an existing award, compared with 49,500 new claims in the five weeks before the campaign began. On 8 December, 63,600 claims were awaiting a response to inquiries (mainly from employers).

Fuller information is available about the campaign conducted in the spring of 1989. During the nine weeks of TV publicity, nearly 260,000 claims were received. Separate information about the outcome of these particular claims is not available, but of all the claims decided in the three months following the start of the campaign over 160,000 received awards and some 134,000 were unsuccessful.

At the end of March 1989, immediately before the spring campaign, about 280,000 families were receiving family credit. The number increased by the end of July to 313,000, and the latest indications are that by the end of September it rose further to about 320,000. (This latter figure was previously thought, as a result of a computer error, to have been reached two months earlier, thus the July figure is a correction of those published previously.) This estimate of about 320,000 is the latest available indicator of caseload prior to the start of the current campaign.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will raise the threshold of capital assets at which disqualification for cold weather payments operate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 18 December 1989]: Following the uprating statement I made on 25 October, I am pleased to announce that today I have laid regulations which amend the Social Fund Cold Weather Payments (General) Regulations, so that from 1 January 1990 elderly people who are receiving income support may be able to qualify for cold weather payments whilst retaining up to £1,000 in savings. The increase in the amount of capital that people aged 60 and over may have before it affects entitlement to cold weather payments will enable more elderly people to obtain help with the extra cost of heating their homes at times of very cold weather.

The regulations also correct defects in the regulations concerning the treatment of the capital of a claimant's partner and the description of the areas covered by the national climatological message stations.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Farm and Moorland Holdings

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will list the address and location of all freehold and leasehold farm and moorland holdings of the Duchy of Lancaster, showing the different categories, stating when first acquired by the duchy;

(2) if he will list the address, type and size of all freehold and leasehold property holdings of the Duchy of Lancaster, showing the different categories located in (a) Greater London, (b) Aldershot, (c) Bedford, (d) Bristol, (e) Kettering, (f) Leeds, (g) Leicester, (h) Lewes, (i) Northampton, (j) Hadley Wood and (k) Harrogate.

Mr. Kenneth Baker [holding answer 7 December 1989]: It would be impractical to list the addresses and locations of all the property holdings of the Duchy of Lancaster as these would number several hundred items. However I hope that the following summary will be helpful.

The freehold farm and moorland properties owned by the Duchy or in which the Duchy has an interest are as follows:

Estates: Predominantly agricultural in nature in the following counties:

County	Acreage (approx):
Northamptonshire and Lincolnshire	2,865
Staffordshire and Cheshire	12,350
Lancashire	10,920
Yorkshire	9,318
	35,453

In addition, the Duchy owns some fifteen thousand acres of moorland in north Yorkshire and south Wales most of which are subject to common rights.

The estates include some 165 agricultural tenancies and 3,145 acres of woodland.

There are no leasehold ownerships in this category.

In all of the counties other than Cheshire ownership of part of the holdings can be established from 1267. Subsequent additions have been made.

In Cheshire, estates have been acquired over the last 50 or so years.

Other property ownership, all of which are freehold except for a long leasehold property in the City of London, may be summarised as follows:

(a) Greater London The freehold of properties in the Manor of Savoy bounded by Lancaster Place, the Embankment, Savoy Hill and Strand (including the Savoy Chapel) and a building at 2/4 Lancaster Place to 137 Strand. A Substantial part of these properties are let on building lease or equivalent terms, having between twenty-nine and ninety years unexpired.
Two office buildings, one freehold and one leasehold, are owned in the City of London. both are let on long leases without reviews.

(b) Aldershot None.

(c) Bedford One shop in High street.

(d) Bristol None.

(e) Kettering None.

(f) Leeds None.

(g) Leicester One shop in High street.

(h) Lewes One shop in High street.

(i) Northampton None.

(j) Hadley Wood
i. Twenty-six acres of land and twenty-nine cottages.
ii. Two petrol filling stations (on long lease).

(k) Harrogate Miscellaneous commercial properties in Harrogate which include five shops, one hotel, and a house now converted to offices.
These properties, in the main, are let on occupational leases. There is also the remainder of a residential estate developed over a period of one-hundred years or so producing thirty-six ground rents. The freehold reversions are sold to the lessees on terms which follow the provisions of the Leasehold Reform Acts.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Value Added Tax

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what compensatory payments Customs and Excise make to traders when a court or value added tax tribunal has decided that value added tax was incorrectly charged.

Mr. Ryder: Section 40(4) of the Value Added Tax Act 1983 provides that, when a tribunal decides that VAT should not have been charged by Customs, a compensatory payment of interest should be made in addition to repayment of the tax itself. Interest is also payable by order of a court. In cases analogous with those where such a finding has been reached, Customs make ex gratia payments in lieu of interest.

All of these payments fall as a charge on subhead B1 of class XIX vote 2. A recent case where the House of Lords found against Customs is considered to be applicable to a substantial number of similar cases in which Customs had previously refused full repayment. As a result, some significant costs will be incurred in 1989-90. These costs are currently being assessed and will be reflected in a spring Supplementary Estimate which will be presented to Parliament.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many letters have been sent out from value added tax headquarters at Southend in the current year and in each of the last two years to value added tax defaulters threatening surcharge in respect of payments which related to taxpayers who were (a) less than three days late with their returns, (b) less than seven days late with their returns and (c) less than 14 days late with their returns; and if he will estimate the cost of this administrative action.

Mr. Ryder: A trader is sent a notice warning of liability to default surcharge when value added tax returns or payments have been received late but records are not available in a form which enables me to provide the information requested.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the treatment for capital gains tax of shares issued under the business start-up and business expansion schemes before 19 March 1986.

Mr. Lilley: Up to 5 April 1988, when shares issued before 19 March 1986 under the business start-up scheme or business expansion scheme were exchanged for shares in another company on a takeover or company reconstruction, the transaction was generally not regarded as giving rise to a disposal for capital gains tax purposes. Instead any gain or loss which would otherwise have accrued was effectively rolled over into the new share holding. The Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988 changed the law affecting business start-up and business expansion scheme shares issued before 19 March 1986 so that after 5 April 1988 roll-over treatment was no longer available where incomes tax relief had been given on these shares and not withdrawn. This change in the law was not intended.

The Government therefore propose to bring forward legislation in the 1990 Finance Bill to restore the previous capital gains tax treatment for exchange or cancellations of business start-up and business expansion scheme shares after 5 April 1988 which are affected by this change in the law. For a limited period shareholders will, however, be able to choose to have an exchange or cancellation of shares which takes place before 1 January 1990 treated under the provisions as they currently apply, if this is to their advantage.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report tables showing, for the latest years now available, identifiable general Government expenditure by function in England, Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland and the United Kingdom expressed (a) in cash terms, (b) as a percentage of United Kingdom total identifiable general Government expenditure, (c) as an amount per capita, and (d) as an amount per capita expressed as an index, United Kingdom identifiable general Government expenditure = 100.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Most public expenditure is planned on a national basis and there is no geographical disaggregation apart from expenditure which is the responsibility of the territorial Departments. However, in order to provide a more comprehensive breakdown of public expenditure within the four countries of the United Kingdom an additional analysis, covering outturn years, is carried out each year. This analysis allocates, where possible, expenditure to England, Scotland, Wales or Northern Ireland and therefore includes within the territories a wider coverage of expenditure than that for which the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are directly responsible.

In previous years this analysis has covered expenditure included within the planning total. Since the new planning total (announced in Cm. 441), on which outturn and plans for future years were published in the Autumn Statement (Cm. 879), includes central Government support for local authorities rather than local authority expenditure, the basis of the territorial analysis has been changed this year to cover general Government expenditure. The analysis thus covers central Government's own expenditure, finance for public corporations, and local authorities' expenditure, as it has in the past. Public corporations' market and overseas borrowing is, however, excluded.

The analysis divides expenditure into "identifiable" and "non-identifiable" expenditure. The term "identifiable expenditure" refers to expenditure that can be identified from official records as having been incurred for the benefit of people in a particular country. The coverage of identifiable expenditure has been expanded since last year's exercise to include grants, subsidies and net lending to those public corporations, mainly dealing with housing and development, where allocation between territories is possible on a consistent basis. Total identifiable expenditure accounts for around three quarters of general Government expenditure. The remainder, unidentifiable expenditure, covers mainly expenditure deemed to have been incurred on behalf of the United Kingdom as a whole, for example, defence, overseas aid and other overseas services. The coverage of identifiable expenditure is largely unaffected by the change of basis to general Government expenditure.

Tables 1 to 5 show figures for identifiable general Government expenditure according to main function in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland in the years 1984-85 to 1988-89. The tables show identifiable general Government expenditure in each territory in total and on a per capita basis. The per capita figures are based on mid-year population estimates. Figures for earlier years are not available on a totally consistent basis with those given in these tables.

Table 6 compares, for the latest year, 1988-89, expenditure by function in the Scottish, Welsh and Northern Ireland programmes with the total identifiable expenditure in the respective countries. It shows that identifiable expenditure has a wider coverage than expenditure within the responsibilities of the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales; in the case of Northern Ireland it has a slightly wider coverage than the Northern Ireland programme. The table also shows, for 1988-89, unidentifiable expenditure where this can be allocated to function.

In some cases, expenditure which cannot be separately identified for England, Scotland or Wales can be allocated to Great Britain rather than the United Kingdom; for example, the majority of the finance provided for expenditure by the nationalised industries can be allocated to Great Britain. Tables 7a and 7b compare Northern Ireland allocated expenditure with that allocated to Great Britain over the five-year period.

The extent to which expenditure can be identified may vary from year to year and between countries. The coverage of particular functions can also vary between countries; for example, in Northern Ireland, expenditure on arts and libraries is contained in the education category.

The terms and definitions used for this analysis are the same as those used for the recent Autumn Statement (Cm. 879) but the figures are based on less up-to-date outturn information.

Warsaw Pact

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list, for each of the countries of the Warsaw pact, the terms of the grants and loans, over the last year, to which the United Kingdom has contributed.

Mr. Ryder: These are as follows:

POLAND:

Know-How Fund of £50 million over 5 years (grant)

The general aim is to finance projects and training in political and economic skills that will underpin democracy and assist economic reform. There are no specific terms.

$100 million contribution to $1 billion Stabilisation Fund (grant)

Terms are that an economic adjustment programme agreed with the International Monetary Fund should be in place. The Stabilisation Fund will be available to support policies aimed at liberalisation of payments and transfers for current international transactions. Its management will be agreed between the contributors and the Polish authorities.

300 million ecu aid (for Poland and Hungary) (grant)

Although not disbursed, provision has been included in the 1990 European Community budget. No terms are attached but it is intended that the money be used in areas such as imports of pesticides and agricultural machinery, environmental protection and training that will help with restructuring the economy.

100 million ecu emergency food Aid (for Poland and Hungary) (grant)

Aid agreed by Community agriculture Council last July to cover shortages of beef and cereals. Mostly from 1989 EC budget, but small part from 1990 EC budget.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the sterling value of the European currency unit at today's price equivalent for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Ryder: There is no single definition of real exchange rates. The nominal sterling/ecu exchange rate is published in the Central Statistical Office's "Financial Statistics", table 13.1.

Friendly Societies

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to publish either a Green or White Paper on new legislation for friendly societies following the Treasury's internal review commenced in September 1988.

Mr. Ryder: I hope to be able to publish the conclusions of our review early in the new year.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will bring up to date the information on the weight of council rents etc., in the retail prices index given in his written reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 29 July 1988, Official Report, columns 800-01.

Mr. Ryder: Following is the information:

	Rents	Mortgage interest payments	All items in retail prices index
Weight in retail prices index in 1989	32	60	1,000
Weekly expenditure (in £) on which the weight is based (average over all households covered by the RPI, both tenants and owner-occupiers), at January 1989 prices	6·55	12·47	—
Percentage change in year to January 1989	8·2	49·9	7·5

Mortgage Debt

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the ratio of outstanding personal mortgage debt to disposable incomes before tax in 1966, 1970, 1974, 1979, 1983, 1985 and 1988; what was the average rate of interest payable; and what was the ratio of interest payments to disposable incomes.

Mr. Ryder: Figures for outstanding personal mortgage debt and average building society mortgage rates can be obtained from "Financial Statistics", and figures on personal disposable incomes are given in "United Kingdom National Accounts", both published by the CSO. Figures for average mortgage rates covering all lenders are not available.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the criteria used at local Customs and Excise offices to determine whether value added tax is charged on small cycle helmets, as opposed to children's cycle helmets; if he will make it his policy to apply a zero value added tax rating on all cycle helmets; and if he will make a statement on the current variation in the application of value added tax on cycle helmets between different local Customs and Excise offices.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 18 December 1989]: There is no general relief from value added tax for cyclists' safety helmets and under European Community law no such relief could now be introduced. However helmets falling within the provisions of group 17 of schedule 5 to the Value Added Tax Act 1983, as articles designed for young children and not suitable for older persons, are relieved from the tax. While it is for the sellers of goods to determine their liability under value added tax law, local Customs and Excise offices are glad to offer advice on request. If the hon. Member has any particular problem in mind I would urge him to take it up with the chairman of Customs and Excise.

Security Vetting

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the amount to compensate civil servants undergoing security vetting is calculated; how much it is; how often it is paid; and how much has been spent on it in the current financial year.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 18 December 1989]: Civil servants are not compensated for undergoing security vetting.

Rover Group

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which departmental Ministers and officials represented the Government in the discussions with British Aerospace on the applicability of section 768 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988 to proposals to be made by British Aerospace following their acquisition of Rover Group.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 18 December 1989]: Discussions leading up to the exchange of correspondence of 8 July 1988 between Inland Revenue and British Aerospace's advisers—which has been placed in the Library—were concerned with explaining how the Revenue approaches the law in this area and its possible application to possible changes in Rover Group's trade. The procedural arrangements for conveying the Revenue's formal views on any such changes were also discussed. The discussions were between British Aerospace, its advisers and the Inland Revenue. Officials from the Department of Trade and Industry and their advisers were also present. Treasury Ministers were aware that the Inland Revenue were having these discussions, but no Ministers were present at them. As the exchange of correspondence makes clear, the guiding principle throughout was that the tax treatment of anything concerning the Rover acquisition must be consistent with the law and the treatment of other taxpayers in comparable circumstances.

Discussions since the sale of Rover Group concerning British Aerospace's tax liabilities under the law are a matter between the company, its advisers and the Inland Revenue. It would not be in keeping with the strict rules of tax confidentiality for Ministers or other departmental officials to be involved in any such discussions.

It is not the practice of this Government or their predecessors to name officials.

TRANSPORT

M2/A2

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list details of all accidents on the M2/A2 between London and Dover for the three months ended 10 December, giving information on causes, location, types of vehicles involved and any injuries sustained.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested is currently unavailable. Details of road accidents in Kent for the period requested have not yet been provided to the Department by Kent county council. The information collected by the police and forwarded to the Department does not include an assessment of the cause of the accident.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to increase safety on the M2/A2 roads between London and Dover.

Mr. Atkins: The following measures are proposed:—

A2 London Boundary to M2
Provision of hardshoulders and lighting.
Brenley to Harbledown
Provision of central reserve safety fencing and lighting.
Harbledown to Bridge
Provision of central reserve safety fence.
Shepardswell
Provision of lighting.
Jubilee Way Dover
Alterations to road markings and removal of laybys.

The White Paper "Roads for Prosperity" also announced a route assessment and scheme indentification study of the A2 from Bean to the M2.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next intends to carry out a traffic survey on the M2/A2 roads between London and Dover.

Mr. Atkins: The next traffic count is scheduled for 17 May 1990 on the M2 at Rochester. Counts are not normally carried out between November and March because flow levels then are not representative.

Net Safety Benefit Analysis

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has made an assessment of the benefits and drawbacks of the net safety benefit analysis development by the Civil Aviation Authority.

Mr. McLoughlin: The net safety benefit analysis was a study by a group of four civil aviation safety authorities: the US Federal Aviation Administration, Transport Canada, DGAC France and the Civil Aviation Authority. The CAA published the results of the study as CAA paper 87017.

I know of no reason to doubt the validity of the conclusions of the study.

Salvage

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 1 December to the hon. Member for Fife, North-East, Official Report, column 445, what sums accrued to the Government in each case in respect of the salvage operations carried out on each ships listed.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is commercially confidential and cannot therefore be published.

Merchant Shipping

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of his Department's anticipated contribution to the NATO study of supply and demand for merchant shipping in crisis and war, as set out in the 1989 Defence White Paper; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department's contribution to the cost of this study is 2,248,670 Belgian francs, about £37,000 which has now been paid. The Department is also providing the chairman of the steering group overseeing the study.

Radioactive Materials (Transportation)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what contribution his Department will make to the International Atomic Energy Agency review of regulations governing the transportation of radioactive materials;

(2) what contribution is being made by his Department to the International Atomic Energy Agency's standing advisory group on the carriage of radioactive materials.

Mr. Atkins: The Secretary of State is the competent authority for the safe transport of radioactive materials. Officials from the Department's radioactive materials transport division co-ordinate national policy and lead United Kingdom delegations at International Atomic Energy Agency meetings on this subject.

Channel Tunnel

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the decision of the Channel tunnel intergovernmental commission on non-segregation.

Mr. Portillo: I have placed in the Library a copy of the letter sent today to Eurotunnel by the chairman of the United Kingdom/French Channel tunnel intergovernmental commission about non-segregation of passengers from their vehicles on the shuttle trains operating between Folkestone and Calais, and a copy of the English translation.

Buses

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has undertaken any studies or sought advice as to whether the replacement of big bus services by mini-midi buses has an effect on congestion and pollution.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 11 December 1989]: The choice of vehicle type is a matter for bus operators. Nonetheless the Department's transport and road research laboratory is currently engaged on a financial analysis of urban minibus operations which will touch on fuel consumption and congestion effects.

Air Services

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the countries which impose restrictions on the leasing and operation of foreign-registered and operated airliners.

Mr. McLoughlin: This information is not generally collected, although I understand that the United States does not permit its airlines to lease foreign-registered and operated aircraft.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the number of (a) foreign-registered and operated airliners leased by British airlines and (b) flights undertaken by those airliners in each of the last five years.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of permits issued by my Department for the lease of foreign-registered and operated aircraft by British airlines in each of the last five years is as follows:

Year	Permits
1984	3
1985	1
1986	18
1987	19
1988	19

Details of the numbers of flights undertaken by those aircraft are not available.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the use of foreign-registered and operated airliners; to what subjects those representations referred; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: From time to time the Department and the Civil Aviation Authority receive representations about foreign-registered and operated aircraft. In the main, these relate to the quality of service provided by the airlines and the correspondent is encouraged to take the matter up direct with the airline. Exceptionally, where poor safety standards are alleged, the Department and/or the Civil Aviation Authority will investigate, both with the airlines and the other Governments concerned.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what safety checks and controls are routinely required to be carried out on British airliners; and whether there is any difference in the requirements put on foreign-registered and operated airliners leased by British airlines.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Civil Aviation Authority has the statutory responsibility for the safety regulation of civil aviation.

I understand that there is a large number and a wide variety of safety checks and controls routinely required to be carried out on British airliners. Should the hon. Member have any specific questions, they should be addressed to the chairman of the authority.

Foreign-registered and operated airliners leased by British airlines are required to comply with the safety standards of the International Civil Aviation Organisation.

Park and Ride Schemes

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the number of authorities and bus companies in local authority areas which operate park and ride schemes (a) during the Christmas shopping period and (b) at other times of the year by area.

Mr. Portillo: The Department does not collect statistics on park and ride schemes. Some local highway authorities include information on these schemes in their annual transport policies and programmes (TPPs). In the 1990-91 TPPs submitted to the Department in July 1989 there are references to 27 park and ride schemes in 23 local authority areas in England. Of these, four relate solely to the Christmas shopping period, 10 to other periods of the year (but in two cases including Christmas), 11 to permanent arrangements.

In London, park and ride cannot readily be distinguished from commuter parking. A survey undertaken in 1987 showed that 64 of the 250 London Underground stations had their own car parks, as did 538 of the 922 stations on British Rail's Network SouthEast. In addition, British Rail has a number of "parkway" stations close to motorways.

We have no information about the number of bus companies operating park and ride schemes.

Channel Tunnel Terminals

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has received regarding (a) a Channel tunnel terminal at Kings Cross/St. Pancras, (b) a Channel tunnel terminal at Stratford and (c) a Channel tunnel terminal at locations other than the above; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The representations that I have received about the preferred location of a second London station for international passenger services have been confined to King's Cross and Stratford. I have received a number of representations for and against each of these proposals.

Trains (Two-way Radios)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to ensure that two-way radios are fitted in all passenger train cabs by the end of 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: In its evidence to Sir Anthony Hidden's investigation into the Clapham junction accident, BR gave a commitment to complete its programme of installation of cab radios by 1992. The investigation accepted this timescale. The Government have played their part by making all the necessary radio frequencies available to BR.

Cyclists

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what account he takes of cyclists' needs in considering major new road schemes planned by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: In planning new trunk roads and improving existing ones, we consider the needs of cyclists for safe and convenient routes. Particular attention is paid to the design of junctions and consequent modifications to the local road network. Detailed guidance is published in our local transport notes series and through our traffic advisory leaflets. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Urban Development

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide estimates showing for each financial year from 1987-88 to 1990-91 the amount of actual or planned expenditure designed to support the urban programme.

Mr. Atkins: Each year about £10 million of the public expenditure plans for local authority transport capital expenditure are incorporated within the urban programme administered by the Department of the Environment. The amounts spent on local transport were:

Year	£ million
1987-88	10·527
1988-89	[1]10·661
1989-90	[1]10·822

For 1990-91 the amount incorporated will be £2·773 million of credit approvals and £8·320 million of central Government grants; totalling £11·093 million.

In addition, much trunk road spending and a substantial amount of local road spending supported by transport supplementary grant (TSG), is designed to assist inner-city areas. In 1990-91 over 100 major schemes accepted for TSG will benefit inner-city areas.

Since "Action for Cities" was launched in 1988 total expenditure benefiting inner cities on the trunk roads and local roads programmes is estimated at:

Year	£ million
1988-89	250
1990-91	300

The Department is also supporting expenditure on the Manchester Metrolink (expected to cost £110 million) and, from 1990-91, will be spending £1 billion on the Jubilee line extension. Both schemes are designed to improve public transport in urban areas.

Motorway Accidents, Manchester

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many serious road accidents involving stationary vehicles on the motorway network in the Greater Manchester area have been reported during each of the last five years; and how many people were (a) killed and (b) injured as a result of such accidents.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested is given in the table.

Accidents involving stationary vehicles on motorways: Greater Manchester: 1984-1988

	Severity of Accidents			Severity of Casualties
	Fatal	Serious	Total	Fatal	Serious	Slight	Total
1984	0	5	5	0	5	1	6
1985	1	6	7	1	6	3	10
1986	0	4	4	0	4	4	8
1988	2	5	7	2	6	7	15

Stationary vehicles include those stopped or parked, and vehicles waiting to go ahead but held up.

Highway Schemes (Compensation)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to make highway authorities liable to compensate owners of businesses for loss of trade and profit caused through the loss of passing trade associated with highway schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Compensation is payable where land is acquired for highway schemes. Claimants are entitled to the market value of their interest in the land acquired, disregarding any increase or decrease in its value to the scheme. They are also entitled to any other reasonable loss for disturbance, which could include loss of trade caused by the acquisition of all or part of a property. Compensation is also payable where a highway authority stops up a private means of access to the highway.

However, where a business is affected by a highway scheme but no land is taken or access stopped up, I am advised that there is no liability on the highway authority to compensate for any loss of trade, assuming that the works are carried out directly by it and under statutory authority. Owners of businesses have no right in law to any maintained level of passing trade. Temporary or permanent reductions in traffic flows are part of the commercial risks of running a business.

There are no plans to seek to change these arrangements.

Madeira Shipping Register

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how the proposals for untaxed crews on the proposed Madeira shipping register will affect the competitiveness of United Kingdom registered shipping:

(2) what effect Portugal's proposal to set up a low-cost shipping register in Madeira will have on (a) British registered shipping and (b) European Community registered shipping.

Mr McLoughlin: I have no information on whether United Kingdom or other European owners will wish to register any of their ships on the Madeira shipping register.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Primary Schools (Computers)

6. Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps are being taken to ensure that the supply of computers in primary schools will meet the demands of the national curriculum.

Mr. Alan Howarth: LEAs are responsible for ensuring that schools have enough microcomputers to meet the requirements of the national curriculum. Under our education support grants programme some £25 million is being set aside over a three-year period beginning last year to assist LEAs to purchase microcomputers for educational use in schools. For 1990-91 the Department has asked the LEAs to give particular attention to the needs of primary schools.

73. Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to ensure that the supply of computers in primary schools will meet the demands of the national curriculum.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Bootle (Mr. Roberts) and the hon. Member for Motherwell, North (Dr. Reid).

Professional Association of Teachers

12. Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning recognition of the Professional Association of Teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Professional Association of Teachers has represented to my right hon. Friend that some local education authorities still do not recognise the association. The Government recognise the PAT as one of the six schoolteacher unions with which it deals.

Opting Out

13. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the number of schools seeking to opt out under the Education Reform Act 1988.

Mr. MacGregor: To date 79 schools have embarked on the process of applying for grant-maintained status and parents at 51 of them have so far voted in favour of proceeding with an application. Forty-one proposals have so far reached me for decision: I have approved 32 of them.

Expenditure (Nottinghamshire)

14. Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much money his Department has spent (a) on repair and maintenance of all schools in Nottinghamshire and (b) on the city technology college in the past year.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Repairs and maintenance of schools, other than external repairs at voluntary aided schools, are the responsibility of Nottinghamshire local education authority. No figures are available for sums spent by it on these items over the past year. A total of £5·96 million has been spent on the building of the city technology college in Nottingham in the last calendar year.

National Curriculum

15. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will state the number of letters he has received from head teachers concerning the shortfall of resources for implementation of the national curriculum.

Mr. MacGregor: I frequently receive correspondence from head teachers. Some of it concerns the provision of resources for the national curriculum.

83. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the resources being allocated next year to developing the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: Development of the national curriculum will be achieved largely by the redirection of existing resources. However, we intend next year to use specific grants to support some £120 million expenditure by local education authorities expressly to help with the introduction of the national curriculum. This is in addition to general RSG support of local education authority expenditure. Some £30 million will additionally be deployed to support central expenditure on the national curriculum, including the running costs of the National Curriculum Council and the School Examinations and Assessment Council and the costs of developing standard assessment tasks.

108. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many letters he has received from primary school head teachers concerning the speed at which changes within their school operation and curriculum are being made.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is not readily available in the form requested. My right hon. Friend frequently receives correspondence from primary school head teachers about various aspects of education provision.

55. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will report the outcome of the consideration of physical education and the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) on 12 December 1989 at column 555.

43. Mr. Donald Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of parents' reaction to the national curriculum.

49. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from parents about the introduction of the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: The parental awareness survey published on 4 December indicated that some 90 per cent. of parents interviewed support the introduction of the national curriculum. In particular, they welcome the broadening of provision and the setting of clear objectives. Parents also value the availability of more information from the school about the education being provided.

22. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he has taken to ensure that there will be the required number of teachers to deliver the national curriculum.

69. Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to ensure that there are sufficient teachers to teach the national curriculum.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer the hon. Members to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on 12 December 1989 at column 553.

24. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the delivery of the national curriculum in primary schools.

30. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of the national curriculum.

56. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress in the introduction of the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: Evidence from Her Majesty's inspectors shows that in general schools are making satisfactory progress in implementing the national curriculum.

Rural Schools (Sanitation Facilities)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will urge Devon county council to engage in a priority programme to equip all rural schools with indoor sanitation facilities.

Mr. Alan Howarth: It is the responsibility of the Devon local education authority to determine the priority given to projects included in the authority's annual capital expenditure plans. This requires detailed knowledge of individual schools and their needs as part of the whole educational provision of the area and the authority is best placed to judge these needs.

Pre-school Education

16. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to ensure that every three and four-year-old child has the opportunity of pre-school education.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to ensure that every three and four-year-old child has the opportunity of pre-school education.

91. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to ensure that every three and four-year-old child has the opportunity of pre-school education.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government believe that there should be a diversity of provision for pre-school children and that its scope and balance should be for local decision. We want to ensure that the educational experience offered to three and four-year-old children is as high as possible, and that is the purpose of the committee of inquiry which I am chairing.

Under-fives

17. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will seek information from his Danish, Dutch and French counterparts about their policies on under-fives public education in order to improve Her Majesty's Government policies in this area.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information on provision in these and other countries may be found in Statistical Bulletin 13/89 published by the Department last month, a copy of which is in the Library.

Higher Education

18. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on his projections for student numbers in higher education over the next 10 years.

57. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his plans for the future expansion of student numbers in higher education.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his policy for the expansion of higher education.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on his projections for student numbers in higher education over the next 10 years.

54. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on his projections for student numbers in higher education over the next 10 years.

Mr. Jackson: We expect to see significant growth in student numbers during the 1990s, actively fostered by the Government's education policies. The latest projection indicates full-time equivalent student numbers rising from about 760,000 in 1988 to about 820,000 by 1992. As a result of the very substantial decline in the relevant age groups, numbers are then expected to level off until 1995 before rising again to about 890,000 by the turn of the century.

102. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of young people over the age of 18 years are in higher education in each of the 12 member states of the European Community.

Mr. Jackson: The available information is as follows for each country for the latest year available.

New entrants[1] to higher education

Country[2] (main ages on entry)	Latest year	Participation rate[3] (per cent.)
Belgium[4] (18 to 19)	1985	39
Denmark (18 to 20)	1985	35
France (18 to 20)	1985	32
West Germany (19 to 21)	1987	29
Greece[5]	1984	38
Ireland[5]	1985	35
Italy (19 to 21)	1986	25
Netherlands[4] (18 to 20)	1985	38
Portugal[5]	1984	14
Spain (18 to 20)	1985	31
United Kingdom[6] (18 to 21)	1987	34

[1] Includes full-time and part-time students entering higher education for the first time, ie excluding postgraduate students and others already having a qualification in higher education. Not all other countries may adhere to this general definition.

[2] Compatible information is not available for Luxembourg since most higher education is undertaken abroad. Ireland figures partly estimated.

[3] To aid comparison and overcome the problem of the varying lengths of courses in different countries the participation rate is the percentage of all new entrants (defined above) to a derived relevant single year group. The latter is calculated by taking the total populations for the ages providing at least 70 per cent. of the new entrants and dividing by the number of ages involved. For the United Kingdom this is the population of ages 18 to 21 divided by four. OECD recommend this procedure.

[6] Excludes the private sector and students from abroad. Includes nursing and paramedical students at Health Department establishments.

79. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students were in higher education in the 1988-89 academic year; and how many in 1978-79.

Mr. Jackson: It is provisionally estimated that in 1988-89 there were 993,000 full-time and part-time students on higher education courses in Great Britain, compared with 766,000 in 1978-79.

45. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of persons aged 16 and 18 years went to institutions of higher education in 1979, 1983 and the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: A measure of young peoples' participation in higher education is the age participation index (API). This is defined as the numbers of young home full-time initial HE entrants expressed as a percentage of the average numbers of 18 and 19-year-olds in the population. In 1979 and 1983 the API for higher education in Great Britain were 12·4 per cent. and 13·1 per cent. respectively. A provisional estimate for 1988 is 15·1 per cent. I also refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle).

Governing Bodies

19. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice he has given to local authorities regarding political appointments to governing bodies.

93. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice he has given to local authorities regarding political appointments to governing bodies.

103. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice he has given to local authorities regarding political appointments to governing bodies.

Mrs. Rumbold: Last year the then Secretary of State made clear his view that local authorities which nominate only majority party supporters as school governors are not behaving as their electorates would expect. My right hon. Friend fully endorses that view. Choosing the best people to be school governors need not be a party political matter. However, where a number of governors are to be appointed by a local authority which does wish to act on the basis of political affiliation, they should have regard to the balance of the parties within the authority itself.

71. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has issued any guidance to local education authorities on the appointment and training of school governors.

Mrs. Rumbold: On the issue of appointments, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) earlier today.

We have issued information and guidance on the training of school governors on a number of occasions, particularly in relation to the use of education support grant funds to support LEA training schemes. The Department and HMI have also recently held two conferences bringing together governors and their trainers to discuss this important task.

City Technology Colleges

20. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met the City Tecnnology College trust.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend last met representatives of the City Technology College trust on 17 November 1989.

Expenditure (Lancashire)

21. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what increases in capital and revenue spending have taken place in Lancashire in each of the last five financial years; and what are the national average figures.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The figures for expenditure on education for the most recent five-year period available are as follows:

	Financial year
	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	Average
Lancashire
Capital £ million	16·0	11·4	14·4	16·2	13·4	14·3
Percentage increase on previous year	22·3	−28·5	25·7	12·4	−17·4	2·9
Recurrent £ million	275·9	292·3	305·5	322·9	348·7	309·1
Percentage increase in previous year	6·0	4·5	5·7	8·0	8·0	6·4
England
Capital £ million	469·2	501·3	530·2	574·9	592·8	533·7
Percentage increase on previous year	2·9	6·8	5·8	8·4	3·1	5·4
Recurrent £ million	10,111	10,517	11,003	12,002	13,021	11,331
Percentage increase in previous year	5·3	4·0	4·6	9·1	8·5	6·3

University Entrants

23. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science by what percentage applications to enter universities have increased or decreased for 1989-90 against 1988-89.

Mr. Jackson: By the beginning of this month, the Universities Central Council on Admissions had received 135,600 applications from home and overseas students for admission to university next autumn, some 12·8 per cent. more than the corresponding position last year.

31. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his latest estimate of the number of students likely to be admitted to university education in 1991-92 expressed as a proportion of the total number of school leavers.

Mr. Jackson: The latest projection of numbers of young, home initial entrants to full-time higher education in Great Britain in 1991-92 is 137,000. The projection of the associated age participation index—defined as the number of full-time, home initial entrants aged under 21, expressed as a percentage of the averaged 18 and 19-year-old populations—is 18·3 per cent.

Special Needs

25. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions he has had with local education authorities in the last six months relating to integration into mainstream schools of children with special educational needs.

50. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions he has had with local education authorities regarding the integration of children with special education needs into mainstream schooling.

Mr. Alan Howarth: No such discussions have taken place.

41. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what account he has taken of special education needs in considering schemes for local management of schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has consistently made clear his expectation that authorities would take special care to ensure that their proposals for local management of schools reflected fully the need to ensure appropriate provision for all children with special educational need. A number of authorities believe this provision can be best made by delegating resources to schools and have made appropriate proposals in their submitted LMS schemes. Others have indicated that they wish to retain central control of such resources.

Reforms

26. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the role of governors in implementing the education reforms.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government believe that governors have a central role in improving the effectiveness of our schools. This is reflected in the provisions of the Education Reform Act, including the new arrangements for the local management of schools.

Local Management Schemes

27. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made in reviewing local management schemes submitted by London education authorities.

Mrs. Rumbold: The 20 outer London education authorities all submitted their schemes of local management by the due deadline of 30 September, and my right hon. Friend has to date announced his preparedness to approve six of them for implementation in April 1990, subject to certain modifications. The 13 inner London councils are not required to submit their schemes until 30 September 1991; but one—Westminster—had done so already, and my right hon. Friend has announced his intention to approve it for implementation in April 1990.

68. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to recommend to education authorities reductions in the size of education departments and the numbers employed there in order to facilitate the release of resources for local management of schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Under local management of schools, more decision-making and administration are being delegated to schools. There should accordingly be scope for economies in local authorities' central administration costs. The scale of these economies, and the speed at which they can be achieved, will vary. But my right hon. Friend expects authorities to secure the largest economies they can as soon as they can, in order to maximise the proportion of available resources which can be delegated to schools.

65. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent reports he has received about the implementation of local management of schools in Norfolk.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has had a number of letters from schools in Norfolk about aspects of local management of schools. Norfolk LEA's scheme for local management of schools was the first to receive approval from my right hon. Friend, and I understand that the LEA is on course for the successful introduction of local management next April.

51. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from education authorities regarding local management of schools.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received regarding local management of schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Members to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo) on 14 November at column 215.

52. Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions he has had with local authority associations regarding local management of schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I met representatives of the Association of County Councils and the Association of Metropolitan Authorities on 13 September to discuss a wide range of local management of schools issues. Representatives expressed their support for the principles of local management. They also set out their concerns about the position of schools with high teaching staff costs when funding is determined mainly by pupil numbers. I made clear in response that it was open to LEAs through their formulae to enhance funding for small schools with above-average salary costs, and that we would also consider sympathetically proposals for an extended transitional period to pure LMS funding for larger schools with high salary costs.

Physical Education Teachers

28. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will supply the latest figures on the shortage of physical education teachers.

Mr. Alan Howarth: In January 1989 there were 162 vacancies for full-time physical education teachers in maintained secondary schools in England, equivalent to 1·2 per cent. of physical education teachers in post.

Grant-maintained Schools

29. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress made by those schools which became grant-maintained in September 1989.

Mrs. Rumbold: The first 18 schools were incorporated as grant-maintained schools in September 1989. They are now experiencing the benefits of greater financial and administrative autonomy. They are proving popular with parents and pupils. I share their confidence in the future and expect them to take full advantage of the opportunities which grant-maintained status offers.

Teacher Shortages

32. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further proposals he is considering as to how industry can help to alleviate teacher shortages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Officials from the Department are engaged in discussions with a number of industrial concerns about their future involvement with teacher shortage initiatives. My right hon. Friend acknowledges the valuable contribution that industrialists have already made in this field and welcomes new proposals.

100. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the current level of teacher shortages in primary and secondary schools.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 24 October 1989 at col. 392-93.

47. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he will take to deal with teacher shortages in Lambeth.

Mrs. Rumbold: The employment and deployment of teachers are matters for local education authorities and schools. The Secretary of State's role is to ensure that there are sufficient teachers from whom they can recruit. Government measures include the provision from next April of education support grant for local recruitment measures to attract more mature new entrants and re-entrants to teaching, and my right hon. Friend's request to IAC to look at measures to improve supply in areas where vacancy rates are highest, particularly in inner London.

37. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement on the measures which he is taking to overcome the shortage of teachers.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what measures he is taking to increase the permanent supply of teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Amos) on 14 November at column 235.

Older Pupils

33. Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has for the future of 16-to-19 education.

58. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to increase the numbers of 16 to 19-year-olds participating in full-time education.

Mr. Jackson: The Government are committed to increasing the participation of 16 to 19-year-olds in education and training, and believe that every young person should either be in full-time education or in a job with time off for good quality training.

Recent examination reforms and the Education Reform Act will raise standards in schools giving more young people the qualifications and the motivation to stay on in full-time education. This is the key to improving participation. In 1988, after the first year of the GCSE examination, staying on rates for 16 and 17-year-olds rose to a record level. The Government wish to ensure that young people continuing their education at age 16 have access to a range of opportunities that will equip them with the general skills, knowledge and understanding they will need for adult and working life. Young people will have the choice of pursuing that goal through either the academic route—comprising mainly A and AS courses —or the vocational route—where they can choose from courses leading to about 4,000 qualifications. My right hon. Friend has asked the Schools Examinations and Assessment Council and the National Curriculum Council to work with the main vocational bodies to advise on the core skills that A/AS level students should develop and how work on them should be built into the A/AS curriculum.

Expenditure

34. Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from local education authorities regarding their spending on education.

62. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from local education authorities regarding their spending on education.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend discussed the education component of the Government's proposed local authority grant settlement for England for 1990-91 with representatives of the local authority associations at a meeting on 26 October. That was in addition to the statutory consultations about the overall settlement conducted by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment following his 6 November announcement. Many of the letters and other representations which my right hon. Friend receives from local education authorities about a range of education issues also touch on spending.

Pupil Profiling

35. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the introduction of pupil profiling.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) on 4 December at column 14.

Maintenance and Repairs

36. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much money has been allocated for school maintenance and repairs over the past 12 months.

Mr. Alan Howarth: It is for individual local education authorities and, under local management, their schools to determine how much money should be allocated for school maintenance and repairs. The latest outturn data on recurrent spending show that in 1987-88 local authorities in England spent some £435 million on repairs and maintenance in primary and secondary schools.

Research Students

38. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science by how much the maintenance grant of £3,725 per annum paid by the research councils to research students has increased in real terms since 1979.

81. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the level of maintenance grants paid by the research councils to research students outside London.

104. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the annual post-graduate award for research students living away from home outside London paid by the research councils.

Mr. Robert Jackson: I refer the hon. Members to the reply that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Oldham, Central and Royton (Mr. Lamont).

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the annual maintenance grant paid by the research councils to research students outside London; and what estimate he has made of average lifetime earnings of post-doctoral scientists in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jackson: The annual maintenance grant paid by the research councils in 1989-90 to research students attending an establishment outside London and living away from home is £3,725. The Department does not collect or hold information on the lifetime earnings of post-doctoral scientists in the United Kingdom.

Science Budget

39. Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the science budget as a percentage of gross domestic product in 1979-80; and what he expects it to be in 1990-91.

Mr. Jackson: In 1979-80 the science budget was 0·160 per cent. of the gross domestic product. In 1990-91 it is estimated that it will represent 0·163 per cent.

64. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the planned budget for pure science and the research councils.

Mr. Jackson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 15 November at column 272-76.

Design and Technology

40. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of implementing design and technology as part of the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 7 December at column 313.

Bishopshalt School

44. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will announce his decision on the application of Bishopshalt school, Hillingdon, to opt out of local education authority control.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend expects to make an announcement soon.

Research Councils

46. Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met representatives from each of the research councils; and what was discussed.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has occasional meetings with representatives of individual research councils to discuss matters of current concern. He met the heads of all the research councils at a reception he held on 14 September.

Surrey University

48. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to visit the University of Surrey.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has no present plans to do so.

Student Loans

53. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has had on his plans to introduce student loans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner).

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many banks have agreed in principle to operate the student loan scheme.

Mr. Jackson: Ten banks have formed Student Loans Company Limited to undertake preparatory work for the student loans scheme. Additional financial institutions will be invited to become shareholders in the company when a brochure is issued.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to advertise the Government's scheme for student loans; at what estimated cost; and over what period.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government will ensure that students and potential students are fully informed of the public support available.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the costs of the administration of the student loans scheme by (a) the public sector, (b) competitive tender and (c) the student loans company.

Mr. MacGregor: I have nothing to add to the estimates of the costs of administration of the student loans scheme which have already been published.

59. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met Lloyds bank to discuss student finance.

70. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met Lloyds bank to discuss student finance.

77. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met representatives of the Royal Bank of Scotland concerning student finance.

80. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met Lloyds bank to discuss student finance.

94. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met the Clydesdale bank to discuss student finance.

Mr. Jackson: Ministers and officials have had a series of discussions with representatives of the financial institutions as proposals for the student loans scheme have developed. Ten banks have now formed a company, Student Loans Company Limited, to undertake preparatory work for the scheme.

Schools Repairs

60. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he proposes to take to improve the state of repair of schools.

Mr. Alan Howarth: It is primarily for each local education authority to ensure that the schools it maintains are kept in an acceptable state of repair. But my right hon. Friend is aware of concern that some school premises fall below that standard. Accordingly, Government plans for 1990-91 allow for capital borrowing by local authorities in respect of schools, colleges and other educational services of £436 million. For current spending, the Government's proposals for the 1990-91 local authority grant settlement allow for increased spending on repairs and maintenance relative to the levels assumed in the comparable total for 1989-90. Otherwise, the Department promotes improvements in the quality of school premises through the guidance issued by its architects and buildings branch.

Professional Development Scheme

61. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will examine the professional development scheme operated by the British Computer Society as a possible model for career planning for scientists trained and supported by the research councils.

Mr. Jackson: The British Computer Society professfional development scheme is designed for the particular needs of professionals in information technology. It is not an appropriate model for the career planning of scientists, although aspects may be relevant to them. Responsibility for the career planning of scientists employed by research councils and by higher education institutions rests with their employers.

Teacher Training Courses

63. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning the joint circular on the approval of initial teacher training courses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend has received no representations about DES circular 24/89 and Welsh Office circular 59/89 on the approval of initial teacher training courses. The circular was the subject of full consultation before it was issued.

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

66. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the current pupil-teacher ratio in England and Wales (a) in primary schools and (b) in secondary schools; and what were the comparable figures 10 years ago.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The pupil-teacher ratios within maintained primary and secondary schools in England in 1989 and 1979 were as follows. Corresponding figures for Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

	Primary	Secondary
1989	22·0	15·3
1979	23·1	16·7

Modern Languages

67. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the level of modern languages taught in schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government are concerned to increase both the number of pupils continuing to study a modern foreign language until age 16 and beyond and their standards of language competence. That is why the national curriculum includes a modern foreign language as a foundation subject at secondary level to be studied by all pupils between the ages of 11 and 16. The national curriculum working group on modern foreign languages is expected to recommend, by July 1990, attainment targets and programmes of study for modern foreign languages based on current best practice, in order to raise standards and to provide a stimulating and worthwhile challenge to pupils of all abilities during their period of compulsory secondary schooling.

Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council; and if he will make a statement.

72. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council; and if he will make a statement.

84. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has discussions from time to time with members of the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council on matters of current interest.

City Technology College, Langbaurgh

74. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will consider establishing another city technology college in Langbaurgh in east Cleveland.

Mrs. Rumbold: City technology colleges are focusing on urban areas because it is there that the aspirations and expectations of pupils and parents are, generally, furthest from fulfilment. Macmillan college, the Teesside city technology college, already provides for children in the inner city area of Middlesborough. There are no plans to establish a further city technology college in the vicinity.

96. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the numbers of representations he has received (a) in favour and (b) against the establishment of a city technology college in Telford.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received 36 letters following the announcement by the Mercers' Company of its intention to sponsor a city technology college in Telford. Thirty-one are against the proposal and five sought further information.

42. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the contribution of city technology colleges to educational practice in schools and to inner-city areas in which they are situated.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is a key aim of the city technology college programme that the colleges should make a major contribution to the development of higher standards in all schools. It is too early yet to evaluate their impact in detail but it is already clear that they are immensely popular with parents and pupils. With three city technology colleges now open, and eight more with firm opening dates, we are now looking very carefully at how the good practices they are pioneering can best be disseminated.

Asbestos

75. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he intends that asbestos removal from schools should be included in local schemes of management or financed by the local authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Under LMS it is for local education authorities to decide whether to retain responsibility centrally for asbestos removal or to delegate responsibility and funding for this within their schemes of local management.

GCSE

76. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what were the number of GCSE passes at grade C and above by school children in Basildon for 1988 and 1989.

Mrs. Rumbold: Figures for the Basildon area are not available centrally, but in 1988 there were 583,000 results at grade C and above in the GCSE in schools within the Essex local education authority. Figures for 1989 are not yet available.

Supply Teachers

78. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from schools in Nottinghamshire about the adequacy of supply teacher cover for schools where teachers have to be absent on national curriculum training courses.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend has received one letter dealing solely with this subject from the governors of a Nottinghamshire infant school.

Industrial Links

85. Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress is being made in encouraging links between schools and local industry and commerce.

88. Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps are being taken by his Department to improve links between education and industry.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Good progress is being made in encouraging links between schools and local industry and commerce. Preliminary analysis of a recent DES survey indicates that around 90 per cent. of secondary schools now have such links.

The Department is involved with others in a range of initiatives designed to assist in the establishment of links between schools and industry. In particular, it publishes guides to good practice and selectively funds particular projects and organisations. Funding for teacher training in this area is made available to local education authorities through the LEA training grant scheme.

Teachers

86. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps his Department is taking to encourage mature entrants, with practical work experience in other fields, to train as teachers.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department has a range of teacher recruitment measures, one of whose main aims is to increase the number of mature entrants to teacher training recruited from other careers. The teaching as a career unit (TASC) targets older people with special publications, and through its national and local advertising. In conjunction with ICI, the Department has run a well-subscribed programme of taster courses for people considering switching to a career in teaching, and the number of courses is being increased in 1990-91. We are also funding part-time and shortened courses of initial teacher training which take account of students' existing commitments and previous qualifications. The introduction of the licensed teacher route will also facilitate the entry into teaching of mature entrants.

107. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he plans to announce the next steps towards the introduction of new arrangements for determining the pay and conditions of teachers.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend is currently considering the views expressed by the six teacher unions and the employers at his meeting with them last month.

101. Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has available for the percentage of teachers leaving the profession each year in (a) the United Kingdom as a whole and (b) Hertfordshire.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Teachers in Scotland and Northern Ireland are the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. Figures for England and Wales and for Hertfordshire for the year ending 31 March 1987 (the latest available) are shown in the table.

Percentage of teachers in England and Wales and in Hertfordshire leaving full-time service in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools (MNPS)

Per cent.

	Year ending 31 March 1987
	England and Wales	Hertfordshire
Percentage of teachers leaving full-time service in MNPS	7·7	8·6
of which:
transfers to other service, full or part-time, in the maintained sector[1]	1·3	1·1
transfers to teaching in the independent sector[1]	0·3	0·5
retirements and deaths	2·4	2·3
others[2]	3·7	4·6

[1]The Department's "Database of Teacher Records" does not provide complete coverage of the independent sector or of part-time service in the maintained sector, so these figures may be slightly under-stated.

[2]Many of these will be women withdrawing from teaching temporarily for family reasons.

Exams

87. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the Government's current policy with regard to the A and A/S level exams.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies that I gave on 14 November to the hon. Members for Heywood and Middleton (Mr. Callaghan) and for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher) at column 218 and that my right hon. Friend gave on 28 November to my hon. Friend the Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) at column 181.

ILEA

89. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the current state of preparations for the assumption by the London boroughs of the current educational responsibilities of ILEA.

Mrs. Rumbold: The inner London councils are making good progress towards becoming LEAs. Most of the management posts in their education departments have been filled, and councils are developing their own packages to assist the recruitment and retention of good-quality teaching staff. I am looking forward to the operation of an efficient and responsive education service in the capital after 1 April 1990.

Severe Learning Difficulties

90. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to provide further help for schools for children with severe learning difficulties.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for providing for pupils with special educational needs lies with individual local education authorities: this includes provision for pupils with severe learning difficulties.

Wandsworth

92. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to visit the London borough of Wandsworth.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend would welcome the opportunity to visit Wandsworth, and plans to contact the borough about a possible date.

School Buildings, Nottinghamshire

95. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what level of grant he has made available to Nottinghamshire county council for new school buildings next year.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend expects to announce his decisions on the distribution of annual capital guidelines for education to LEAs before Christmas.

History Curriculum

97. Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to announce the new history curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales are waiting for the final report of the history working group, which is now expected by the end of January. When they have considered that report they will publish their proposals for history in the national curriculum.

Greenhouse Effect

98. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what provision he has made for research into the greenhouse effect in 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Jackson: I understand that in 1989-90 the research councils have allocated about £29·3 million towards research into all aspects of global climate change, including research into understanding the processes of climate change and the impact of such changes. This amount includes about £8 million by the Agriculture and Food Research Council, £19·3 million by the Natural Environment Research Council and some £2 million by the Science and Engineering Research Council. In addition, other research undertaken by the councils, especially AFRC, bears on environmental aspects.

As stated in his answer on 15 November to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) at columns 272-76, my right hon. Friend has announced allocations totalling £18·6 million in 1990-91 and 1991-92 in respect of the construction costs of the RRS James Clark Ross, and a minimum allocation of £2 million per annum for the years 1990-91 to 1992-93 to provide for a remote sensing instrument for the ERS-2 satellite. He also announced that he has sought the advice of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils on the allocation of the science budget for 1990-91 and 1991-92. His decisions after receiving that advice will be announced in due course. Within the totals allocated, it will be for the research councils to decide their priorities for specific research areas.

Teachers' Negotiating Body

99. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received with regard to the establishment of a new teachers' negotiating body.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received a variety of representations regarding the establishment of new permanent arrangements for determining teachers' pay.

Milk

105. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the implications of recent changes in the provision of milk in schools.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The statutory requirements related to the provision of milk in schools are set out in section 22 of the Education Act 1980 as amended by section 77 of the Social Security Act 1986. There have been no recent changes in these requirements.

Under certain conditions children under five years old in maintained schools may be entitled to receive free milk provided under the Welfare Food Regulations 1988. These regulations are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

Student Statistics

106. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many full-time students are enrolled with universities and polytechnics in the current academic year; and what was the number 10 years ago.

Mr. Jackson: Information for academic year 1989-90 is not yet available centrally. In 1988-89 there were 318,000 full-time university students and, provisionally 310,000 polytechnic and college full-time students on higher education courses in Great Britain, compared with 293,000 and 217,000 such students, respectively in 1979-80.

Educational Performance

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the relative educational performance in different areas of the country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what figures are published by his Department to show the comparative educational performance of each education authority in England and Wales.

Mrs. Rumbold: In its annually published statistics on school leavers the Department includes information on examination attainments in respect of maintained schools in each local education authority in England. Comparable statistics for Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. These figures reflect in part the different abilities of pupils resident in local education authority areas.

Disabled Students

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many disabled students do not receive the disabled students allowance because (a) they are not in receipt of a mandatory award and (b) they have no additional disability-related costs.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make particular arrangements for the repayment of loans by disabled students and people who become disabled after graduation.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend intends that disabled people with low incomes should be protected by the standard provision for deferment of repayments. Like other aspects of the loans scheme, these arrangements will be monitored.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what measures his Department is taking to publicise the disabled students allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The availability of the disabled students allowance for mandatory award holders is publicised in the DES booklet "Grants for Students". Bulk supplies are sent each year by the Department to local education authorities for wide free distribution among schools, colleges and other establishments. Copies are available to the public on request.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to ensure that disabled students are enabled to benefit fully from the access funds proposed in the White Paper "Top-Up Loans for Students".

Mr. Jackson: Each further or higher education institution will be responsible for assessing the needs of students, including any who are disabled, and will distribute its share of the access funds accordingly.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will begin consultation on reviewing the maximum level of the disabled students allowance.

Mr. Jackson: Comments on the disabled students' allowance for mandatory award holders have already been received from interested bodies. My right hon. Friend will take these and any other representations into account in the course of the annual review of the awards regulations, so that any changes made can take effect from 1 September 1990.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will begin consultation to revise guidelines to local education authorities on the administration of the disabled students allowance.

Mr. Jackson: Before making the awards regulations each year my right hon. Friend considers representations from a number of sources about the detail of the provisions made in them. This process is well under way for 1990. As in previous years, once the 1990 regulations have been made the Department is likely to issue guidance designed to help local authorities to put them into effect.

Capital Allocations

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he proposes to announce the 1990-91 capital allocations to local education authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Garston (Mr. Loyden) on 14 November at column 216.

Goldsmith's College

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what arrangements were made by his Department for the funding of Goldsmith's college, university of London, during the transitional period towards entering the University Funding Committee; what assumptions were made about the rate of inflation in such arrangements; and what shortfalls have occurred since that arrangement was made;

(2) what arrangements are being made to deal with the shortfall that has arisen within Goldsmith's college's finances before they enter the university funding system.

Mr. Jackson: Since Goldsmith's college formally became a school of the university of London on 1 August 1988, funding has been the responsibility of London university with the assistance of public funds, now channelled through the Universities Funding Council. With the agreement of all the parties concerned, including Goldsmith's, there was an agreed level of funds transferred from the grant-aided sector to the university sector to provide basic funding for Goldsmith's over the period from 1 August 1988 to 31 July 1991. This reflected then current assumptions including the Treasury's forecast of the gross domestic product deflator. Subsequent additions to the public funding of universities have taken account of the transfer of Goldsmith's to the university sector. The actual distribution of such additional sums is a matter for the Universities Funding Council and the university of London.

Student Grants

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the rates of undergraduate student grants and parental contributions for 1990-91.

Mr. MacGregor: Subject to Parliament's approval of the necessary regulations, the main rates of mandatory grant for undergraduate students will be increased in the 1990-91 academic year by 5 per cent. for those studying outside London and for those who study from their parents' home. For those studying in London the main rate will be increased by 7·4 per cent. in recognition of their higher living costs. The new rates, which apply to students from England and Wales, and will be supplemented by the top-up loan facility subject to the enactment of the legislation now before Parliament, will be as follows (1989-90 rates are shown in brackets):

Halls or Lodgings
(i) London	2,845	(2,650)
(ii) Elsewhere	2,265	2,155
Parental home	1,795	(1,710)

For most students, the 1990-91 main grant and full-year loan together will amount to some 25 per cent. more than the 1989-90 grant alone.

Rates of grant for supplementary allowances, and for postgraduates, will be announced later.

Residual income will be retained for the time being as the basis for assessing parental contributions. Consultations revealed divided views on the proposal in the White Paper "Top-Up Loans for Students" (Cm. 520), to move to a gross income basis, and further work would be needed to resolve some practical difficulties. The matter will be kept under review. Meanwhile, the threshold for parental contributions, and the points on the contribution scale at which the rate of contribution changes, will be uprated in 1990-91 to reflect the movement of earnings. Parents whose residual income is below £11,500 will not be assessed for a contribution.

The full parental contribution scales for 1990-91 are as follows:

Residual Income	Assessed contributions
	Scale 1	Scale 2

Notes:

1. The second scale of parental contribution was introduced following the announcement on 15 March 1988 that tax relief on new non-charitable covenants would cease. Contributions assessed on Scale 2 are 25 per cent. less than those assessed on Scale 1. Scale 1 applies to parents whose student children began their courses before the 1988-89 academic year, and Scale 2 where students first entered higher education in 1988-89 or later. In 1990-91 over 90 per cent. of assessments will be at the Scale 2 rates.

2. For 1990-91 the level of contribution will be assessed as follows:

Residual income	Scale 1	Scale 2
From £11,500 to £14,700	£1 in £7	£1 in £9·33
From £14,701 to £21,600	£1 in £5	£1 in £6·66
From £21,601	£1 in £4	£1 in £5·33

3. The maximum contribution, which applies to parents with more than one child holding an award, will rise from £5,300 to £5,800. The minimum contribution will remain at £60 on Scale 1 and £45 on Scale 2.

4. The contribution payable may be less than the amounts shown on the scale, particularly at its top end and where the contribution is in respect of one award holder only. This will depend on the amount of grant against which the contribution has to be set and whether any of the assessed contribution is offset by allowances for other dependent children.

Adult Education

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what current national spending and monitoring of success levels have been achieved in relation to adult basic education programmes over the last 10 years, by year; to increase funding and provision in this area; what plans he has; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Local education authorities are mainly responsible for providing basic literacy and numeracy tuition for adults. Central Government support is provided to the adult literacy and basic skills unit (ALBSU) which is funded by the Department of Education and Science and the Welsh Office to act as the central focus for adult literacy and related basic skills in England and Wales. Grants to ALBSU during the past 10 years are as follows:

1980-81	495,000
1981-82	1,000,065
1982-83	1,406,652
1983-84	1,513,000
1984-85	1,500,000
1985-86	1,723,000
1986-87	2,170,000
1987-88	2,248,500
1988-89	2,596,000

Local education authorities and voluntary organisations report that the provision of adult basic skills tuition has increased over the past 10 years. In November 1988, the latest year for which figures are available, they reported that 110,626 adults were receiving tuition. HMI monitor the quality of provision as part of their regular inspection programmes.

My right hon. Friend is not yet in the position to announce what funds will be made available to ALBSU in the future. The Department will continue to work closely with ALBSU to increase the opportunities for adults to improve their basic skills, through initiatives such as the provision of open learning centres in inner-city areas, open learning centres supported through the ESG programme and the development of workplace tuition. The Department will also continue to co-operate with ALBSU, the BBC and the Training Agency in the basic skills accreditation initiative.

Pupils (Per Capita Spending)

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the per capita spending for pupils at city technology colleges and for secondary school pupils in the last year for which figures are available; and what is projected spending for the next year.

Mrs. Rumbold: In 1987-88 average recurrent spending per pupil in maintained secondary schools was some £1,520. The estimated average spending per pupil implied by the proposed total standard spending for 1990-91 is of the order of £2,000. These figures do not include spending on central services such as administration. The recurrent per capita grant for pupils at city technology colleges for 1989-90 is based on a unit of funding of £1,825. This figure includes central administration costs, but excludes an allowance for diseconomies of scale during the start-up period, and specific grants for certain items. The comparable figure for 1990-91 will be determined by reference to LEA expenditure in 1988-89, updated to a 1990-91 base.

CIVIL SERVICE

Forms

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what progress has been made on revising Government forms since September 1987.

Mr. Luce: I have just reported continuing good progress to the Prime Minister. A copy of the Cabinet Office (OMCS) report which includes reports from Departments has been placed in the Library of the House and a broadsheet summary is being published today.

The report shows that over 44,000 forms in national use have been reviewed in the last two years. Over 16,000 have been improved and over 9,000 abolished. Savings of over £1 million have been achieved.

Non-departmental Bodies

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many non-departmental bodies are currently in existence; and when the annual list of such bodies will be published.

Mr. Luce: On 1 April 1989 there were 1,555 non-departmental public bodies. That is 93 fewer than last year and 612 fewer than in 1979. The bodies are listed in "Public Bodies 1989" published today. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

In the year to 31 March 1989, 128 bodies were abolished and 35 new bodies set up. Funding rose by approximately 2·7 per cent. and members of staff employed fell by 12·1 per cent.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Select Committees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council how long elapsed in 1983 and 1987 between the general election and the setting up of the Select Committees; and what action he is proposing to ensure the speedy creation of Select Committees after the next election.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The 1983 general election took place on 9 June 1983; the departmentally related Select Committees were nominated on 14 December 1983. The 1987 general election took place on 11 June 1987; the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee was nominated on 24 November 1987; the other departmentally related Select Committees were nominated on 2 December 1987. I understand that this is one matter which the Procedure Committee may look into.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many reports have been produced by Departmental Select Committees since 1979; and how many have been the subject of debate on a substantitive motion on the Floor of the House.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Since 1979, 543 reports and 213 special reports have been published by departmentally related Select Committees. Seven have been debated in the House on substantive motions.

Order Papers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will examine the possibility of providing a simple daily batting order of the business of the House for visitors and Members.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Visitors are provided with a basic guide to the order of business in the booklet "A Guide for Visitors to the Galleries". It would not be practical to provide a more specific guide. Business not listed in the Order Paper such as a statement or private notice question is not announced until after 1 pm. Some business such as Standing Order No. 20 applications does not become public until the moment it is raised in the House.

I am not aware that Members stand in any need of a simple daily batting order of business.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will examine the design of the front page of the Order Paper.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The design of the front page of the Order Paper is a matter for the House itself. If the hon. Member has specific suggestions for improvements to the format of the Order Paper, I suggest that he writes to the Services Committee.

However, since and in so far as this is one of a number of proposals which the hon. Gentleman intends to make in respect of the content of the Order Paper itself he should, as I have already indicated, raise the matter in the first instance with the Procedure Committee of which he is a member.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what areas of the form of the Order Paper he is examining; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have commenced a general examination of the form of the Order Paper, but I am also awaiting suggestions from many other hon. Members, not least those which may come from the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee whose responsibility this is. It is not an entirely straightforward matter, since I understand that significant changes would involve considerable alterations in the nightly printing procedures, but I am concerned that all serious possibilities should be considered. The Sub-Committee's further consideration of this matter is itself dependent upon elements that relate to wider procedural issues, in particular various aspects of oral questions, which have been considered by the Procedure Committee. The hon. Member is now a member of the Procedure Committee and I have no doubt that he will not hesitate to make a contribution to their consideration of these issues.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will launch an inquiry into the practice of planting questions.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have no plans to do so, but I understand that the Procedure Committee, of which the hon. Member is now a member, is considering an inquiry into various aspects of oral questions following comments made by Mr. Speaker on 22 November at column 115 and other representations.

Procedure Committee

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make it his policy to bring forward a substantive motion to embody the recommendations of the outstanding reports from the Procedure Committee; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: No. I think it is better to reach an understanding through the usual channels and then to bring forward proposals which are likely to be generally acceptable to the whole House.

Staff Shop

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what representations he has received seeking the closure of Annie's Bar and its replacement by a shop for the use of hon. Members and staff of the House; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: No suggestion of this kind has been received. It is, however, proposed that a small general shop and a souvenir kiosk will be established in phase I of the new parliamentary buildings. Both will be run by the Refreshment Department and are expected to be open for business in the late spring of 1991.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Love Lane, Carrickfergus

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the reasons for the proposal by the Department of the Environment (Northern Ireland) Roads Service to stop up Love lane, Carrickfergus, under article 40 of the Roads (Northern Ireland) Order 1980.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The notice of intention to make an order for the stopping up of Love lane, published by the Department of the Environment, indicated that a copy of the draft order was available for inspection at the Lord Chancellor's Department's office in Carrickfergus. The draft order sets out the reason for the proposed stopping up—that the Department is of the opinion that another road is available which provides alternative facilities for traffic.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the Department of the Environment (Northern Ireland) Roads Service will give the fullest consideration to any alternative solution put forward by objectors before proceeding on the basis of the Department of the Environment (Northern Ireland) proposals for Love lane, Carrickfergus.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. Under the provisions of schedule 6 to the Roads (Northern Ireland) Order 1980, the Department of the Environment is required to consider all representations made.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what was the full-time equivalent staffing level in each of the further education colleges in Northern Ireland during the academic year 1988-89;

(2) what was the full-time equivalent student enrolment to each of the further education colleges in Northern Ireland during the academic year 1988-89.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department of Education does not collect such information on a full-time equivalent basis. The actual numbers of teaching staff and student enrolments, both full-time and part-time, in each of the further education colleges during the academic year 1988-89 were as follows:

FE College	Staff		Enrolments
	Full-time	Part-time	Full-time	Part-time

Newry/Kilkeel	95	92	891	1,456
Totals	2,270	2,794	15,619	41,089

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total recurrent budget for each of the further education colleges in Northern Ireland during the academic year 1988-89.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not centrally available for individual further education colleges.

Youth Training Programme

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the likely number of redundancies resulting from the proposed change in funding at the youth training programme from 1 April 1990 among lecturers employed in colleges of further education.

Dr. Mawhinney: Colleges of further education are currently considering the programmes of training that they will be providing under the new funding arrangements. It is not yet possible to assess the effect of the delivery of these programmes on the staffing levels at the colleges.

Harbours

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the level of harbour dues for boats in Donaghadee harbour; and if he proposes any changes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 18 December 1989]: The mooring fee for the 1989-90 season is £28 for all vessels which use the mooring chains supplied by the harbour commissioners. No other fee is charged. Vessels with private moorings use the harbour free of charge. The mooring fee is reviewed annually. A review is currently in progress.

PRIME MINISTER

Petitions

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister how many petitions have been handed in to 10 Downing street by groups or individuals for each of the past 10 years.

The Prime Minister: Since January 1985, approximately 500 petitions containing over 200 signatures, have been handed in to 10 Downing street. Further detailed information is not recorded.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Footwear

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has received a copy of a letter dated 12 December sent from the British Footwear Manufacturers Federation to his right hon. Friend the Prime Minister; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have received a copy of the letter sent to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister. The question of renewing the voluntary restraint arrangement (VRA) for imports of leather footwear from Poland is under consideration at present and a reply will be issued shortly.

Financial Reporting Council

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the Financial Reporting Council will have statutory powers to take companies to court for producing defective accounts; and what statutory arrangements are being proposed to deal with auditors who perform inadequate audits.

Mr. Redwood: I cannot prejudge the proposals that we have asked Sir Ron Dearing, chairman-designate of the Financial Reporting Council, to develop on the implementation of his committee's report on the making of accounting standards, including the revision of defective accounts. As regards statutory arrangements to deal with auditors who perform inadequate audits, I refer the hon. Member to part II of the Companies Act 1989.

Consumer Goods

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the ratio of (a) imports and (b) exports to United Kingdom production of consumer goods less food etc. in 1970, 1973, 1985 and 1988.

Mr. Redwood: The information sought is not readily available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the ratio of (a) imports and (b) exports to United Kingdom production of "other" consumer goods in 1970, 1973, 1985 and 1988.

Mr. Redwood: The information is not readily available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the ratio of (a) imports and (b) exports to United Kingdom production of consumer durables less cars in 1970, 1973, 1985 and 1988.

Mr. Redwood: The information sought is not readily available.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what contracts, including those relating to privatisations, the Government have awarded since 1979 to accountancy firms criticised by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors or sued for negligence by the Government;

(2) whether any advisors from accountancy firms sued for negligence by the Government or criticised by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors have been seconded to Government Departments.

Mr. Redwood: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Clothing and Footwear

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the ratio of (a) imports and (b) exports to United Kingdom production of clothing and footwear in 1970, 1973, 1985 and 1988.

Mr. Redwood: Figures for 1985 and 1988 are shown in the table. Figures for 1970 and 1973 are not readily available.

1985	47	20
1988	57	21

Notes:

The United Kingdom production measure used in the calculation of percentages is United Kingdom manufacturers' sales. Percentages have been calculated in terms of value.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many visits to Blyth Valley he and his predecessor have made over the last five years; and if he will list and date them.

Mr. Ridley: I have not yet visited Blyth Valley as Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, nor have there been any visits to the area by my predecessors during the past five years. However, my hon. Friend the Member for South Ribble (Mr. Atkins), then Under-Secretary of State for Industry, visited the area on 30 March last year.

Vietnam

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what were the United Kingdom's exports to, and imports from, Vietnam in each of the past four years; and what representations he has received from (a) business organisations and (b) individual United Kingdom owned companies which are now interested in trading with Vietnam.

Mr. Redwood: The United Kingdom's exports to, and imports from, Vietnam in each of the past four years were:

	United Kingdom
	Exports	Imports
1985	2·0	1·7
1986	1·3	1·2
1987	2·5	0·3
1988	2·2	0·5
1989[1]	3·2	0·5

[1] January to October 1989.

A number of companies have been in touch with my Department seeking information on market conditions. In June the DTI, in association with the South East Asia Trade Advisory Group of the BOTB, organised an information seminar which was well attended. Subsequently several companies approached us for more detailed information.

Prospects for any substantial increase in trade are limited by Vietnam's acute shortage of foreign currency and the limitation of export credit insurance cover to short-term business secured by confirmed letters of credit. Until Vietnam reaches a lasting agreement with the IMF and makes tangible efforts to clear its arrears there is little prospect of ECGD reinstating medium to long-term credit insurance cover.

Sound Recordings

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether it has yet been decided what action is needed to implement the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the collective licensing of public performance and broadcasting rights in sound recordings; and whether he intends to propose any changes to the legal basis for copyright protection of foreign sound recordings in the United Kingdom to the criterion known as first fixation.

Mr. Redwood: The Home Secretary and I have now completed our consideration of these matters. We have decided that the recommendations of the commission should be implemented as set out in the report, with only minor modifications, but that there should be no switch from the criterion known as "first publication" as the basis for protecting foreign sound recordings in the United Kingdom.

As to the commission's recommendations, we intend to include provisions in the Broadcasting Bill to introduce the system of statutory copyright licensing put forward in paragraphs 7.49(a)(ii) to paragraphs 7.49(a)(viii) of the report in respect of the broadcasting of collectively licensed sound recordings. The system will also apply to use of such recordings by cable programme providers. The effect will be that where such users cannot reach agreement with a collective licensing body for the use of its repertoire of sound recordings, they will be able to have recourse to a statutory licence, initially on the basis of self-assessed royalties, pending a copyright tribunal order on the level of remuneration. The tribunal will be empowered to require a user who had paid an unreasonably low interim royalty to pay the costs of both parties before the tribunal, and will be required to make its order retrospective to the date on which the statutory licence was exercised.

The user will have to comply with a code of conduct notified by the licensing body and to supply that body with such information as it may reasonably require, but will be able to refer disputes over such matters to the tribunal.

A statutory licence will not be available (a) in respect of the unexpired period of any relevant licence which the user may hold, or (b) where licences are available on terms which have been ordered by the tribunal, except where the user seeks a greater number of hours of use than is permitted under such licences. In that event the statutory licence will be available for the full extent of the repertoire being sought.

Corresponding provisions will be introduced in respect of the public performance of sound recordings when a suitable legislative opportunity arises.

On the Commission's recommendations regarding the copyright tribunal (recommendations (ix) to (xiv) of paragraph 7.49(a) of the report) the Government consider that improvements already effected by means of the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988 and the Copyright Tribunal Rules should be sufficient and no further changes are currently planned.

In paragraph 7.38 of its report the commission recommended that all performers participating in a recording should receive equitable remuneration directly paid by PPL, for that recording's use in broadcasting or public preformance. It did not, however, make any recommendation as to whether this should be made a statutory requirement or achieved on a voluntary basis. PPL has indicated its willingness, with the co-operation of the Musicians Union and any others concerned, to implement the recommendation as fully as may be practicable. The Government therefore intend to seek voluntary undertakings to this effect rather than to introduce what would necessarily be complex statutory provisions.

The commission further recommended that PPL should abandon its practice of limiting the number of broadcasting hours, or "needletime", for which recordings from its repertoire might be used and also its requirement that musicians be employed for certain public performances. I understand that PPL has now abandoned both practices. The proposed statutory licence procedure will prevent PPL from reimposing needletime restrictions and we do not therefore intend to introduce any separate statutory provisions to this end. As to the musicians' employment requirement, I intend to ask PPL for a voluntary undertaking that the practice will not be reintroduced.

On "first fixation", the Government have been considering the findings of a study commissioned from National Economic Research Associates to establish the effects of providing copyright protection for foreign sound recordings in the United Kindom on the basis of the country in which the recording was first made instead of, as now, the country where it was first published. NERA's report will be published by HMSO on 20 December. The report forecasts that the loss of revenue to PPL (and the corresponding financial gains to radio and public performance users of sound recordings) would in the long term amount to around £9 million a year or nearly half PPL's current income. NERA does not, however, consider that the change would increase radio stations' efficiency or significantly promote the growth of radio, and they identify a number of disbenefits, not only to the record industry, but to consumers and to the efficient allocation of economic resources. The Government have concluded that, on balance, the findings of the NERA study do not justify a departure from present practice.

Cross-Channel Ferry Services

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on cross-channel car ferry services is to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on cross-channel car ferries is being published today. The MMC concluded that a proposal by P and O and Sealink to provide from 1991 a joint car ferry service may be expected to operate against the public interest. P and O and Sealink argued that a joint service was necessary to provide effective competition to the Channel tunnel. The MMC recommended that it should not be permitted.

I accept the commission's findings and this recommendation.

My prime concern is to ensure effective competition. It is clear from the MMC's report that this proposal would have reduced competition in the period before the tunnel is operational. I also accept the commission's view that any joint service intended as more effective competition with the tunnel would not need to be introduced so far in advance of the tunnel's opening.

The competitive environment will look very different when the tunnel is operational. But I share the MMC's view that there are too many uncertainties to establish now whether a joint service might be found to operate in the public interest in the market conditions prevailing after the tunnel has opened.

However, the uncertainties will diminish as we approach the opening of the tunnel. It would be open to the parties to approach the Director General of Fair Trading again then if they wished to make a renewed case for a joint service, and for the director general to advise me on the balance of public interest as it appeared at that time. Then, as now, I will be concerned primarily to ensure the most effective competition. I will have regard to how vigorous competition with the tunnel can best be assured, in the light of how well the current competitive arrangements have operated.

Media Groups (Cross-promotion)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will enlarge the terms of his inquiry into cross-promotion of group interests by media groups by adding to the first terms of reference "and to knock, denigrate or undermine the media services or products of competitors".

Mr. Redwood: The terms of reference do not require enlargement. The terms of reference make it clear that promotion by media companies includes, among other things, "unfavourable reporting or editorial comment about . . . their competitors' media services and products".

Company Reports and Accounts

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the reason for companies having to submit annual accounts to Companies house.

Mr. Redwood: The directors of all limited companies, and certain others, are required by law to provide the Registrar of Companies with copies of their annual accounts. This enables Companies house to make information available to the business community and the public at large, so helping to ensure the development of open and informed markets as well as achieving a fair level of protection for the individual consumer, creditor and shareholders.

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what are his Department's criteria for accepting company accounts other than that they are duly signed;

(2) what consideration is given by his Department to auditors' reports accompanying accounts submitted by companies; and whether the same consideration is given for public and private companies;

(3) what efforts are made by his Department to check the authority of company reports submitted according to law to his Department.

Mr. Redwood: Responsibility for the content of accounts and directors' reports rests with the directors. Auditors are required to state whether the accounts meet the requirements of the legislation and give a true and fair view. Companies house staff carry out certain checks for completeness, but do not vet the contents in detail except in response to specific complaints.

Mr. H. P. Herbert

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the basis, in the case of Mr. H. P. Herbert, of the finding that no wrongdoing had taken place by the chairman and managing director of the company complained of; and what cognisance his Department took of the allegation that assets were removed by the chairman and managing director, and that the company was trading whilst insolvent for six months.

Mr. Redwood: Information obtained by the Department concerning the company complained of is at present under consideration as to what action, if any, is appropriate.

Cognisance has been taken of all allegations made by Mr. H. P. Herbert concerning the company.

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he has taken to ensure that the complaints made on behalf of Mr. H. P. Herbert have been fully investigated by his Department.

Mr. Redwood: Information relevant to the complaints made on behalf of Mr. H. P. Herbert is under consideration. Further comment would not be appropriate.

Tourism

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was his Department's total investment in tourism in each of the last five years.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 18 December 1989]: Prime responsibility for tourism rests with the Department of Employment. DTI may assist towards tourism projects, for example under the consultancy initiatives, but these are not separately identified except in the case of the exchange risk guarantee scheme for tourism projects. Under this scheme—which closed to new applications in 1984—the Department offered an exchange risk guarantee on European Investment bank loans for tourism projects. Expenditure under this scheme over the last five years has been as follows:

1985-86	259
1986-87	320
1987-88	303
1988-89	325

Homeopathic Medicines

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the purchases of homeopathic medicines by United Kingdom traders in recent years from Bulgaria.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 18 December 1989]: Information on imports of homeopathic medicines is not identified in the trade classification.

EMPLOYMENT

Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish in the Official Report a further breakdown into manufacturing and non-manufacturing to that given in his answer of 15 November, Official Report, column 279, and divide the resultant figures by the increase in productivity in, respectively, the manufacturing and non-manufacturing sectors; whether he will provide the corresponding figures for full-time females; and whether he will include the numbers represented by each category.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the further breakdown of increases in real earnings provided in my reply of 13 December 1989 (Official Report, columns 658-59). The available estimates of productivity are published in table 1.8 of the Employment Gazette. The available figures of the numbers represented by each category were published in my reply of 8 December 1989 (Official Report, column 426).

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, further to his written reply of 11 December to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, Official Report, columns 467-68, with regard to the increase in weekly and hourly earnings of certain workers, whether he will publish a table giving corresponding figures for pay increases since 1979 for full-time adult male employees employed in manual work in (a) the public sector and (b) elsewhere and for non-manual workers employed in (i) the public sector, (ii) manufacturing and (iii) elsewhere.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 19 December 1989]: I shall write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Market Research

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many market research and sample surveys were carried out by or for his Department in the last 12 months; what was the cost of each; what was the total cost; how many were carried out in-house; how many were carried out for his Department by outside organisations; and what percentage of the total expenditure was paid to outside organisations.

Mr. Eggar: There were 163 projects carried out for my Department in 1988-89. The cost of these surveys in the 1988-89 financial year was £4,047,977. Outside research contractors carried out 158 of these projects, accounting for 99 per cent. of the total expenditure. I have placed details of each survey in the Library.

Labour Statistics

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give for the west midlands and the other regions and for each year from 1984 to 1987, together with the source of the information, figures for (a) total employment, and (b) manufacturing employment.

Mr. Nicholls: The table below shows the data requested for west midlands and the other regions for each year from 1984 to 1987. Information on total employment relates to the civilian workforce in employment and covers employees in employment, the self-employed, and those on work-related Government training programmes. The sources of this information are as follows:

Employees in employment

Estimates of employees in employment are based on the following sources:

(a) the census of employment conducted triennially from 1978 to 1987:

(b) monthly and quarterly surveys of employers;

(c) inquiries conducted biennially by the Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food (MAFF) for employment in agriculture, and quarterly by the Department of the Environment for employment in the construction industry;

(d) "centralised returns" covering employment in some nationalised industries, Government Departments and other large organisations such as British Coal, and the London and Scottish Clearing Banks Association;

(e) the Labour Force Survey

For census of employment dates, the estimates given by the census are used without adaptation. Between census of employment dates, sources b. c. and d. are used to estimate monthly and quarterly trends in employees in employment.

Self Employment

The estimates of the self-employed in Great Britain up to mid 1988 are based on the 1981 census of population and the results of the labour force surveys carried out between 1981 and 1988.

Work-related Government Training Programmes

Numbers of participants are provided from the Department's own records.

Information on manufacturing employment relates to employees in employment in standard industrial classification 1980 division 2 to 4. The sources of this information are as above.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the actual number of planned basic inspection visits paid by Health and Safety Executive area office 16, Greater Manchester inspectors in the half year from 1 April to 31 October; and what was the number in the Health and Safety Executive area plan of work for the same period.

Mr. Nicholls: The plan of the Health and Safety Executive's (HSE) factory inspectorate is based on proportions of time to be spent on different aspects of its work. Inspectors based in the HSE's Greater Manchester area office carried out 2,731 preventive inspection visits in the half year 1 April 1989 to 30 September 1989 which is 96·6 per cent. of the number of visits which it was estimated would be carried out in this period.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of its planned programme of basic inspections the Health and Safety Executive area office 18 North-West has achieved in the half year from 1 April to 31 October; and what is the total.

Mr. Nicholls: The plan of the Health and Safety Executive's factory inspectorate is based on proportions of time to be spent on different aspects of its work.

In the half year 1 April 1989 to 30 September 1989 inspectors in the Health and Safety Executive's north-west area office made 2,098 preventive inspection visits which is 86·4 per cent. of the total number of visits which it was estimated would be carried out in this period.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of its planned programme of basic inspections the Health and Safety Executive office 19 North East has achieved in the half year from 1 April to 31 October; and how many this was in total.

Mr. Nicholls: The plan of the Health and Safety Executive's factory inspectorate is based on proportions of time to be spent on different aspects of its work.

In the half year 1 April 1989 to 30 September 1989 inspectors in the Health and Safety Executive's north-east area office made 3,473 preventive inspection visits which is 122·3 per cent. of the total number of visits which it was estimated would be carried out in this period.

Disabled People

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement regarding the current situation in the employment market for disabled people.

Mr. Eggar: The talents of people with disabilities are currently not fully utilised in the labour market. In 1988-89 this Department spent an estimated £350 million, through general and special services, in helping people with disabilities to train for, find, and keep suitable jobs and in encouraging good practice by employers.

A review of the Department's services for people with disabilities is well advanced and a consultative document will be published as soon as possible.

Training Agency

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons are employed by his Department and the Training Agency, and its predecessors the Manpower Services Commission and Training Commission, in each year since and including 1979.

Mr. Eggar: The table details permanent staff in post statistics each year since and including 1979.

Earnings

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were average weekly adult earnings for full-time work in April 1989; what was the number and proportion of people who had earnings below this level; and how many of these were (a) men and (b) women.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information is published in tables 1 and 14 of part A of the 1989 new earnings survey report, a copy of which is in the Library.

Redundancy Payments

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to implement the provisions of the Employment Act extending redundancy payments to women over 60 years of age; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: This provision will take effect on 16 January 1990.

Women's Earnings

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the number of women who have earnings below (a) the tax threshold and (b) the national insurance threshold broken down into married women, lone parents and single women at the latest date.

Mr. Nicholls: It is not possible to provide reliable estimates.

Labour Statistics

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the increase in unemployment, expressed as a percentage and using current counting methods (a) between 1979 and 1989 overall and (b) for each year between 1979 and 1989.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 8 December 1989]: The information is available in the Library. In 1979 the average monthly level of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, for the United Kingdom was 1,075,800 compared with a 10-month average of 1,825,800 for 1989, an increase of 69·7 per cent. NATIONAL FINANCE

Trade Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the rate of inflation in the 10 years ended June 1989 and in the 10 years ended in 1973; and what was (a) the fall in the real exchange rate; (b) the increase in manufacturing output and (c) the rate of investment in manufacturing industry net of capital consumption in these two periods.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Most of the figures requested can be obtained directly from the published sources available in the Library.

The relevant retail prices indices are available from the latest issue of Employment Gazette and "Retail Prices Indices 1914-1986". An historical quarterly series for manufacturing output appears in "Economic Trends Annual Supplement" and the most recent figures are given in Economic Trends or alternatively the Central Statistical Office's databank.

Net domestic fixed capital formation in manufacturing is estimated to have averaged £3½ billion a year at constant 1985 prices in the decade to 1973 and minus £¼ billion a year in the decade to the end of 1988. These figures exclude capital goods leased from financial sector lessors. Including leased assets, net domestic capital formation by manufacturing industries averaged +£¼ billion a year in the decade to 1988. Estimates including leased assets for the decade to 1973 are not available. However, leasing was a much less important feature of investment then, so the estimate of an average £3½ billion a year set out above is unlikely to be significantly different. Estimates are available only for calendar years and must be interpreted with some caution. The figures for net capital formation include estimates of capital consumption. Capital consumption is not directly observable and is estimated on the basis of a series of assumptions.

There is no unique way of measuring changes in real exchange rates, but a range of figures is available, for example, in the IMF's "International Financial Statistics" which is in the Library.

Married Couple's Allowance

Mr. Raison: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is his best estimate of the saving from abolishing the married couple's allowance for non-pensioners in 1990;

(2) what is the expected cost of the married couple's allowance in 1990-91.

Mr. Major: The direct revenue cost of the married couple's allowance in a full year at 1990-91 levels of income is estimated to be £5 billion. If the allowance were to be given only to married couples where either the husband or wife was aged 65 or over, there would be a saving of about £4·5 billion.

Estimates are based on a projection of the 1987-88 survey of personal incomes, and, in line with Autumn Statement forecasts, assume 7·5 per cent. indexation of allowances and the basic rate limit; all estimates are provisional.

Mortgage Tax Relief

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the median mortgage and the median house price on which tax relief is claimed.

Mr. Lilley: In 1989-90, the estimated median mortgage is £23,000. Information is not available from which to estimate the median value of houses on which mortgage tax relief is given.

Stamp Duty

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated revenue for stamp duties on land and buildings, shares and other transactions for 1988-89 and for the current financial year.

Mr. Lilley: Details of the revenues from stamp duties received in 1988-89 were published in table 12.1 of Inland Revenue statistics 1989. The latest forecast of receipts for 1989-90 was given in the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) on 30 November 1989, Official Report, column 431-32.

National Insurance

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many taxpayers have earnings above the upper earnings limit for national insurance contributions; and how many of these pay income tax at the higher rate.

Mr. Lilley: It is estimated that in 1990-91 about 3 million employees will have earnings above the upper earnings limit for class 1 national insurance contributions; and that, of these, about 900,000 will be liable to income tax at the higher rate.

The estimates are based on a projection of the 1987-88 survey of personal incomes and are therefore provisional.

Taxation

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the revenue raised from introducing a minimum tax equivalent to 20 per cent. of gross income on all individuals whose gross incomes from all sources exceed £25,000 a year; and how many units' total income tax liability is currently less than this figure.

Mr. Lilley: At 1990-91 levels of income, a minimum tax equivalent to 20 per cent. of gross income on all individuals whose gross incomes for tax purposes exceeds £25,000 per annum is estimated to yield about £¾ billion per annum. About 1 million individuals would have a higher tax liability under this proposal.

Estimates are provisional and are based on a projection of the 1987-88 survey of personal incomes, assuming indexation of allowances and the basic rate limit consistent with the Autumn Statement.

Income Tax

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research his Department has commissioned on the policy options and implications of the ending of personal or other income tax allowances; and what assessment he has made of these options.

Mr. Lilley: I have nothing to add to the answers that I gave to the hon. Member on 6 December and 13 December, Official Report, cols 236 and 650.

Special Shares

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the powers which attach in each case to the special shares held by the Government in those companies which he listed in his reply on 11 December.

Mr. Lilley: Special shares entrench provisions contained in the articles of association of the relevant companies. For details of the provisions in each case I refer the hon. Member to the relevant articles of association.

RPI Advisory Committee

Mr. Forman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee will next meet; and who is to be the chairman of that committee.

Mr. Lilley: The Central Statistical Office is now arranging a meeting of the committee for early in 1990 so that consideration of the remaining issues in its terms of reference can be taken forward. The intention is that the committee will complete its work during 1990. With the change in departmental responsibility for the RPI, the chairman of the advisory committee will be Mr. Jack Hibbert, director of the CSO and head of the Government statistical service. He replaces the previous chairman, Mr. I. T. Manley, from the Employment Department.

Life Assurance

Mr. Forman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make an announcement about the outcome of the consultations between the life assurance industry and his officials authorised by his predecessor in his 1989 Budget statement.

Mr. Lilley: Significant progress was made in a series of meetings between representatives of the insurance industry and Inland Revenue officials. I am particularly grateful to the Association of British Insurers and the other representative bodies involved for their constructive approach. Treasury Ministers have given the most careful consideration to all the representations made to them.

The legislation in the Finance Act 1989 put in place the framework of the new tax rules for life assurance which followed the Government's policy of broadening the tax base and cutting tax rates. We recognised at the time the 1989 measures were announced that some of the further legislation on the more technical points to be introduced in the Finance Bill 1990 would be integral to the new regime; and that accordingly both sets of measures would need to come into effect at the same time. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer therefore proposes to bring forward the following legislation in the Finance Bill 1990 which will for the most part have effect from 1 January 1990. These measures include some technical improvements to the legislation now in the Finance Act 1989, in part to fulfil commitments given by the Government during its passage earlier this year. The measures are:

Allocation of income and realised gains

—new rules for the allocation of income and realised gains to different types of business where a company writes more than one of the types of business which have to be treated separately for tax purposes;

Pension business

—rules clarifying the calculation of the profits of pension business for the purposes of section 83 of the Finance Act 1989;

General annuity business

—consequential changes to the rules for calculating the investment income and profits referable to general annuity business, pending further consideration of the tax treatment of this type of business;

Overseas branch and agency business

— amendments to the current rules for the overseas branch and agency business of UK life offices;

Division between shareholders and policy holders

— a revised approach to the allocation of investment income, capital gains and profits between shareholders and policy holders for various tax purposes;

Reassurance commissions

— new provisions for the tax treatment of reassurance commissions received;

Life office holdings in exempt investment media

— a new basis of charge on capital gains arising from holdings in authorised unit trusts and comparable offshore investment vehicles, subject to transitional provisions for existing holdings and protection for obligations under investment-linked policies taken out up to the end of March 1990. The charge will ensure that life office investment via unit trusts will be treated on terms more level with direct investment.

Transfers of undertakings between insurers

— new provisions to provide continuity for tax purposes where life assurance business is transferred to another company (for example, on a merger) or from a friendly society to another society or company, including the carry forward of unrelieved expenses of management to the transferee and incorporation in the legislation of the existing extra-statutory concession.

A press release to be issued today by the Indland Revenue gives further details of the proposed legislation.

I will be giving further consideration to the other topics on which consultations have been held:

— tax treatment of policy holders
— other international aspects
— reassurance business
— general annuity business.

ECOFIN

Mr. Forman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Ryder: The ECOFIN Council met in Brussels on 18 December. The Chancellor of the Exchequer represented the United Kingdom.

The abolition of fiscal frontiers was discussed. The Presidency concluded that the Community should aim to reach a decision on VAT standard rates by the end of 1991 on the basis of a rate band or a minimum rate within a 14 to 20 per cent. band. The Chancellor of the Exchequer recorded the United Kingdom's view that Community decisions on tax rates are neither necessary nor desirable, but the Chancellor of the Exchequer stated that there is no present intention of diverging from the 14 to 20 per cent. bracket of the standard rate of VAT. The Chancellor of the Exchequer reiterated also the importance to the United Kingdom of retaining zero rates. We now expect work to move forward on the technical systems of collecting VAT and excise duties after 1992, on a basis that is fully acceptable to the United Kingdom.

Eleven member states, including the United Kingdom, were prepared to accept the Commission's proposals for improving mutual assistance between tax authorities to counter tax evasion, but Luxembourg is still unable to do so.

Company Cars

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to abolish tax relief on company cars.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 18 December 1989]: I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend's Budget statement.

Tax Recovery

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the results of those High Court cases in the last two years in which the Inland Revenue has sought to recover £1 million or more of tax revenue.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 19 December 1989]: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Tax Avoidance and Evasion

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will call for and publish a report by the Inland Revenue on the current extent of tax avoidance and evasion.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 19 December 1989]: Because of their nature it is not possible to measure accurately the overall extent of tax avoidance and evasion.

Tax Havens

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has of tax revenue which is being lost through the creation of business transactions carried out solely or mainly for tax reasons between

United Kingdom-based individuals and companies and trusts and companies located in (a) Jersey, (b) the Isle of Man, (c) Guernsey, (d) the Netherlands Antilles, (e) the Cayman Islands and (f) Liechtenstein.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 19 December 1989]: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimate he has of assets owned by United Kingdom resident companies and individuals which have been disposed of or transferred to (a) the Isle of Man, (b) Guernsey, (c) Jersey, (d) the Cayman Islands and (e) the Netherlands Antilles corporate, trust or individual ownership in each of the last five years.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 19 December 1989]: I regret that the information is not available on which to base such estimates.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the effect on revenues of raising the top rate of capital gains tax to 40 per cent.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 19 December 1989]: The 1988-89 FSBR estimated the yield from aligning capital gains tax and income tax at £70 million in 1988-89 and £65 million in 1989-90. However, tax on gains realised in 1988-89, the first year for which capital gains were charged at income tax rates, became payable from 1 December 1989. It will therefore be some time before sufficiently complete information about 1988-89 liabilities is available.

Accounting Firms

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which accounting firms are or have been involved in privatisation work; and which of those accounting firms maintain affiliated offices in (a) Jersey, (b) the Isle of Man, (c) Guernsey, (d) the Netherlands Antilles, (e) the Cayman Islands and (f) Liechtenstein.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 19 December 1989]: The following accountants have been, or are currently engaged by the Government in connection with the privatisation programme:

Arthur Andersen
Binder Hamlyn
Coopers and Lybrand[1]
Deloittes, Haskins and Sells[1]
Ernst and Whinney[2]
Peat Marwick Mitchell[3]
Price Waterhouse
Thomson McLintock[3]
Touche Ross

[1] Now merged.
[2] Now merged with Arthur Young to become Ernst and Young.
[3] Now the merged firm of Peat Marwick McLintock

Details of their affiliated offices may be obtained from the firms in question.

Solicitors

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which solicitors firms are or have been involved in privatisation work; and which of those firms maintain affiliated offices in (a) Jersey, (b) the Netherlands Antilles or (c) the Cayman Islands.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 19 December 1989]: The following solicitors have been, or are currently, engaged by the Government in connection with the privatisation programme;

Allen and Overy
Ashurst Morris and Crisp
Coward Chance[1]
Clifford Turner[1]
Freshfields
Field Fisher Waterhouse
Herbert Smith
Linklater and Paines
Lovell White and Durrent
McGrigor Donald
McKenna
Norton Rose
W. and J. Burness

[1] Coward Chance and Clifford Turner have merged to become Clifford Chance.

Details of their affiliated offices may be obtained from the firm in question.

Environmental Damage

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to revise economic indicators to take into account the environmental impact of industrial processes.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 18 December 1989]: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has no plans at the present time.

Friendly Societies

Mr. Forman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies has yet considered the representations made to him for an increase in the financial limits set in the Credit Unions Act 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies has held discussions on the representations with the representative bodies. He told them last year that he accepted in principle the case for increases, but that he needed further confirmation that the work which the bodies had done to ensure that their member societies were properly run was bearing fruit. He is now satisfied on the basis of improvements since then that the increase in limits can be made without running risks to members' funds.

The Chief Registrar accordingly sought Treasury consent to an order under the Credit Unions Act 1979 increasing the limit on the size of loans to £5,000, with similar increases in other limits. I gave that consent. The order has been laid today, and will take effect on 1 February 1990.

I hope that these increases will help the credit union movement at this relatively early stage in its development, immediately by enabling unions to give an enhanced service to their members, and thereafter by encouraging more groups to form such unions.

DEFENCE

Poland

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to visit Poland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no current plans to visit Poland.

I was there at the beginning of September for the commemoration of the outbreak of world war 2.

Trident

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the Trident missile programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Trident programme continues to progress to time and budget towards its in-service date of the mid-1990s.

Defence Policy

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what practical changes in policy have arisen from the new situation in eastern Europe.

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reassessment he has made of defence policy in the light of political changes in the Warsaw pact countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member and my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) on 28 November 1989 at column 573.

RAF St. Mawgan

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many hardened aircraft shelters are being constructed at RAF St. Mawgan;

(2) what is the purpose of the hardened aircraft shelters being constructed at RAF St. Mawgan;

(3) who is funding the hardened aircraft shelters being constructed at RAF St. Mawgan.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Nine hardened aircraft shelters are being constructed at RAF St. Mawgan to provide protection for Buccaneer aircraft. The airfield is designated as a forward operating base for these aircraft. Costs are being met from NATO common infrastructure funds.

Explosives and Propellants

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the expenditure on explosives and propellants in each of the years since 1979.

Mr. Alan Clark: Expenditure related to explosives and propellants is not available as we purchase the great majority of these components as an integral part of ammunition, mines and bombs. Our approximate expenditure (VAT inclusive, in year cost) on those weapons, but excluding guided weapons and rocket motors, was:

Year	£ million
1985-86	380
1986-87	395
1987-88	400
1988-89	350

Data for earlier years are currently in our archives. I will write to the hon. Member once the information has been retrieved.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many explosive and propellant contracts were placed in the periods (a) January to July 1987, (b) July to December 1987, (c) January to July 1988, (d) July to December 1988 and (e) January to July 1989; and what are the values of those contracts.

Mr. Alan Clark: The value of the explosives and propellants purchased by the Ministry is not recorded separately. The approximate number and values of orders for ammunition and stores containing explosives and propellants, but excluding those for guided weapons and rocket motors and orders placed under international collaborative arrangements were:

Period	Number of orders	Value of contracts VAT excluded £ million
1 January 1987—20 June 1987	35	29
1 July 1987—31 December 1987	50	99
1 January 1988—30 June 1988	60	37
1 July 1988—31 December 1988	45	145
1 January 1989—30 June 1989	60	128

Rover Group

Mr. Allan Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any moneys were given to the Rover Group to help correct deficiencies in the DROPS contract.

Mr. Alan Clark: No.

Berlin

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to review the role of British defence forces in Berlin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: British forces will continue to fulfil our responsibilities for the protection of Berlin in conjunction with those of other Allies.

Submarines

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) of 28 November, Official Report, column 568, if he will give brief details of all of the incidents which have taken place in water far too shallow for submarines.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Examples of which I am aware include the losses of FV Tijl Eulenspiegel on 5 March 1989 and FV Salve Regina on 6 December 1987 and allegations that the FV Crystal Sea was towed backwards on 17 October 1987.

The Ministry of Defence does not however maintain records of accidents to civilian shipping where there is no military involvement.

Fishermen's Associations

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) of 28 November, Official Report, column 245, if he will list the dates and meetings which have taken place and which are planned to take place between the Royal Navy and fishermen's associations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The following meetings have been held between fishermen's organisations and the Royal Navy during the past year:

20 June 1989—Maritime Liaison Meeting.
4 August 1989—Meeting between Senior Naval Officers and the West Coast Committee of the National Federation of Fisherman's Organisations.
1 December 1989—Clyde Annual Fishing Liaison Meeting.
14 December 1989—Fishermen's representatives spent a day at sea in HMS SCEPTRE in the Firth of Clyde.

Further meetings are planned. The dates and details of these are still to be agreed.

Sea-based Weapons

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Eastwood (Mr. Stewart) of 28 November, Official Report, column 571, whether sea-based weapons systems will be included in the consideration of significant reductions on the NATO side.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: By agreement of all participants, maritime forces are specifically excluded from the mandate for the CFE negotiations.

Warsaw Pact War Materials

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Faversham (Mr. Moate), of 28 November, Official Report, column 570-71, if he will list the types and numbers of the war materials being newly produced by the Soviet Union and the Warsaw pact.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) on 30 November at column 360.

Frigates

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent competition for Duke class type 23 frigates.

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to implement the Royal Navy's requirement for vessels to modernise its escort force.

Mr. Neubert: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave yesterday to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr O'Neill) at column 197.

Conventional Arms Planning

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what considerations prompted United Kingdom participation in the NATO conventional arms planning system agreement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United Kingdom, in common with other NATO nations, participated in the trial of a conventional armaments planning system to determine whether a system could be devised to meet the following objectives: to provide guidance to the conference of national armaments directors (CNAD) and orientation to the nations on how the military needs of the Alliance can best be met by national armaments programmes, individually and collectively, and to help to elaborate armaments co-operation opportunities and priorities for CNAD.

The trial was completed in October, and NATO Ministers, meeting in the reinforced council in November, adopted the recommendation put to them by CNAD, that two full cycles of the conventional armaments planning system should now take place over the next four years, based on procedures derived from the lessons learnt during the trial.

Developing Defence Industry Countries

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the developing defence industry countries, in the light of the NATO report entitled "Shared Roles, Risks and Responsibilities in the Alliance."

Mr. Archie Hamilton: NATO has long accepted the need for assistance to be given to developing defence industry countries to help them meet their defence requiremens. We provide assistance in a variety of forms, including training and credit support for sales of defence equipment.

Procurement Executive

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the job description of the director of contracts and organisation in the Procurement Executive of his Department.

Mr. Neubert: To develop the procedural and organisational framework for handling the contractual aspects of certain new initiatives, notably at present those concerned with contracting for reliability, implementation of the Next Steps policy and the establishment of the new management strategy.

Al Yamamah Contract

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what sums his Department has paid to British Aerospace and other United Kingdom defence contractors to make up the deficit in the Al Yamamah contract as a result of the reduction in the price of Saudi Arabian oil.

Mr. Alan Clark: None.

Ambulance Duty

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any additional payments are to be made to service personnel engaged on ambulance duty over the Christmas and new year period.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It has been decided that additional welfare benefits will be made available for those service personnel deployed on ambulance duties who are on duty or confined to barracks on Christmas day, Boxing day or new year's day. Welfare funds will be specially supplemented by £15 per head to allow units to provide extra Christmas and new year fare and entertainment. These are not cash payments to individuals, as emergency duties are something that have to be accepted in service life, but an enhancement of welfare funds to enable some additional comfort to be provided. In addition, each person will be allowed two extra free private telephone calls, and where service personnel are required to split their leave and make two journeys home, the cost of the second will be met.

Atomic Weapons Establishment

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether companies that are either partially or fully foreign owned will be allowed to bid for the management contract for the atomic weapons establishment.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 11 December 1989]: Bids will be invited for the management contract at AWE from United Kingdom-based prime contractors who are also able to satisfy United Kingdom national security requirements.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total amount of overtime that has been paid out at the atomic weapons establishment sites at (a) Aldermaston, (b) Burghfield, (c) Cardiff and (d) Foulness in each year for the last 10 years.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 18 December 1989]: The total amount of overtime paid out at the AWE sites during 1987-88 was:

AWE sites	£ million
Aldermaston	6·5
Burghfield	0·8
Cardiff	0·6
Foulness	0·5

Figures for previous years on the same basis are not readily available.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the budget for the compliance director at the atomic weapons establishment will be the responsibility of the chief executive of that establishment.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 18 December 1989]: Financial arrangements for the compliance office will ensure its independence from the contractor.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the safety division of the atomic weapons establishment will be retained after the introduction of private contractors at the atomic weapons establishment.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 18 December 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 11 December at column 528.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the accountancy firm advising the Government on the student loan scheme has at any time since June 1979 been (a) criticised by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors or (b) criticised by any disciplinary committee of the accountancy profession for lacking in professional conduct, efficiency or competence.

Mr. Jackson: The accountancy firm advising the CLSB and, subsequently, the Student Loans Company Limited was criticised by the Department of Trade and Industry inspectors in 1982 and 1983 and under the profession's disciplinary scheme in 1983. The accountancy firm advising the Government has not been criticised by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors; a predecessor firm to the one advising the Government was criticised in 1983 under the accountancy profession's joint disciplinary scheme.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children with special educational needs are currently at schools (a) in the north-west and (b) in the Bolton education authority area; and what is the cost to the authority of providing the special education which they need.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The number of pupils with special educational needs in maintained schools in (a) the north-west and (b) Bolton in January 1989 were as follows:

	North-West	Bolton
(i) Pupils in maintained special schools	15,209	464
(ii) Pupils with statements of special educational needs in maintained ordinary schools	6,375	124

Information on the cost of special education which relates directly to the above figures is not available centrally.

Korean Language Departments

Mr. Neil Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many British universities have Korean language departments; which they are; and how many (a) first degree and (b) postgraduates they produced in 1988;

(2) how many British universities teach Korean subjects; which universities they are; and what are the subjects they teach.

Mr. Jackson: Several institutions offer oriental language and area studies, although none has a separate Korean department. The School of Oriental and African Studies (University of London) offers Korean as half of a joint first degree and, like the university of Sheffield, offers Korean at post-graduate level and as a subsidiary subject in a first degree. Centrally available figures are not sufficiently disaggregated to show the number of such first or post-graduate degrees awarded.

Accountancy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of Britain's university and polytechnic graduates make a career in accountancy.

Mr. Jackson: The 1988 survey of first destinations of graduates shows that 52,936 new first degree graduates of United Kingdom universities and polytechnics in England and Wales were recorded as entering United Kingdom employment. Of these, 4,836 or 9 per cent. went into accountancy. Separate information from the 1987 labour force survey shows that 18 per cent. of all graduates employed in Great Britain were working in industry division "Banking, finance and insurance" which, includes accountancy.

Incentive Allowances

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many teachers are employed by each local authority in England; how many teachers are in receipt of an incentive allowance for each local authority in England; what percentage this is of the total employed by each local authority; and how many teachers in receipt of an incentive allowance in each local authority in England hold allowances that are (a) incentive A, (b) incentive B, (c) incentive C, (d) incentive D and (e) incentive E.

Mrs. Rumbold: No information is at present available about the number of teachers with incentive allowances in September 1989. The Government's present plans assume the award of 174,600 allowances to teachers in ordinary schools in September 1989. Of these 38 per cent. (66,000) are A allowances, 30 per cent. (52,900) Bs, 11·5 per cent. (20,000) Cs, 15 per cent. (26,000) Ds and 5·5 per cent. (9,500) Es. If allowances were awarded in line with the Government's assumptions some 40 per cent. of primary and over 55 per cent. of secondary teachers paid on the main scale in England and Wales will have been in receipt of an allowance this September. Information from various sources suggests that the number awarded in previous years has been broadly in line with the Government's assumptions.

Student Loans

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his written answer of 22 November, Official Report, column 5, whether he now proposes to guarantee the obligations of the Student Loans Company Limited as described in the departmental minute laid before the House on that date.

Mr. John MacGregor: A departmental minute was laid before the House on 22 November, describing the contingent liability which would arise if I were to guarantee the obligations of the Student Loans Company Limited under an agreement to lease and a lease on premises in Glasgow. That minute has now been before the House for 14 sitting days. Right hon. and hon. Members expressed an objection to the minute, in early-day motion 55, dated 23 November. The hon. Member for Blackburn has explained the nature of that objection during debates in Standing Committee B. I have considered his arguments. I am now satisfied that it is right in principle to seek to locate the Student Loans Company Limited in Glasgow, on the assumption that a suitable lease can be negotiated. If, therefore, I am asked by a landlord to guarantee the obligations of Student Loans Company Limited under an agreement to lease and a lease, and if I am satisfied that it would be appropriate to do so, I shall give such a guarantee.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on capital expenditure on schools and further education establishments in 1990-91, including the voluntary aided sector.

Mr. MacGregor: Local education authorities have today been informed of their annual capital guidelines for 1990-91, and of the allocations for capital spending by the governors of voluntary-aided and special agreement schools in their areas. These figures amount to a big increase in local authorities' borrowing power for education capital expenditure and in grant for the governors of voluntary aided schools.

Annual capital guidelines (ACGs) for education under the new system of local authority finance will total £485 million compared with allocations of £352 million in 1989-90 under the old system; £410 million is available for schools, £65 million for further and higher education and £10 million for other educational services. In 1988-89 allocations for schools totalled £318 million and those for colleges totalled £34 million while allocations for other educational services were included on the larger "other services" block distributed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Within the schools sector I have given priority to new projects designed to:

provide new school places in areas of population growth implement cost-effective schemes to remove surplus places and continue remedying deficiencies in existing school buildings.

I have therefore distributed £76·5 million to allow more new projects to be added to the special programme of school improvements started two years ago. This represents a four and a half times increase over the sum so distributed last year.

Within the further and higher education sector I have given priority to new major building projects, where the ACGs allow for nearly 90 per cent. of local authorities' requirements. Allocations for minor works and for equipment each exceed £6 million.

The ACGs are not grants and do not themselves give authorities the power to borrow money for capital purposes. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will issue credit approvals to each authority which will give authorisation to borrow. ACGs include a small element in respect of spending from capital receipts on top of the spending that can be financed by borrowing. In addition authorities will be able to spend further sums from capital receipts and from their revenue budgets if they so choose. Local authority expenditure, including that on loan charges resulting from capital expenditure, is assisted by central Government through revenue support grant.

I am also announcing increased allocations for spending on building projects by the governors of aided and special agreement schools. I have authorised 59 new starts for major projects with first year costs in 1990-91 totalling £12·9 million, and minor work totalling £5·4 million, an increase in new work overall of 17 per cent. on last year. In addition, I have accepted more than twice as many projects as last year on to the design list to enable detailed costed plans to be drawn up. I pay direct grant aid on this work of 85 per cent.

Lists of annual capital guidelines and allocations to individual local authorities, together with lists of major new projects at voluntary aided schools accepted for a start in 1990-91, are as follows:

Student Loans

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many banks have agreed in principle to operate the student loan scheme.

Mr. Macgregor [pursuant to the reply, 19 December 1989]: My predecessor announced on 19 June that, subject to the satisfactory outcome of the contractual negotiations, a sufficient number of financial institutions would wish to participate in the administration of the student loans scheme to ensure that the student loans company would be viable. I was able to announce on 16 November that agreement had been reached by 10 major banks to the establishment of a company, Student Loans Company Limited, to undertake preparatory work; and to the terms on which that company would operate the scheme.

Notwithstanding those agreements I have been told today by the chairman of the Committee of London and Scottish Bankers, speaking on behalf of his own bank (Barclays) and of the National Westminster bank, the Midland bank, the TSB and the Royal Bank of Scotland that in view of the fact that Lloyds bank in particular was not participating in the scheme, they now wished to withdraw. I have also been told today that Lloyds has now firmly decided that it will not participate. The four Irish banks have now also confirmed that in these circumstances they wish to withdraw. I am informed that the Girobank is not in a position to take a decision about full ownership of the company.

The objectives, principles and framework of the scheme as outlined in the Education (Student Loans) Bill remain completely unchanged. The Government decided that, on balance, there were advantages in operating the mechanics of the scheme through a sufficient number of banks, whose branch networks throughout the country would have provided swift and easy access for students. The main effect of their withdrawal will be to make the process of applying for a loan less convenient for students themselves. I have made clear to the chairman of the Committee of London and Scottish Bankers the Government's regret that the participants feel unable to honour the commitment entered into before the 19 June statement. The relevant negotiations were satisfactorily concluded, as I announced on 16 November.

Arrangements are now being made for the Student Loans Company to pass into the ownership of the Government so as to ensure continuity in the necessary preparations for the scheme.

The Government have spent just under £1 million so far on the preparations for the loans scheme, chiefly in the form of consultancy and legal fees. Although it is not possible to attribute this precisely as between preparing for the participation of the banks and preparing for the scheme itself, the banks have agreed to contribute £0·5 million to these preparatory costs.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Know-How Fund

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a list of those projects being supported by his know-how fund, with details of the support in cash and in kind for each project.

Mrs. Chalker: We have already approved a wide range of activities under the know-how fund for Poland, costing £2·1 million. They are as follows:

Cambodia

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has yet met heads of non-governmental organisations involved in humanitarian aid projects in Cambodia to discuss the details of further United Kingdom aid disbursements in Cambodia; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and I met representatives of British non-governmental organisations on 14 November to discuss further Government support for their humanitarian activities in Cambodia. Another meeting at official level will take place early in the new year to follow up the recent visit of British officials to Cambodia.

Bangladesh

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations Her Majesty's Government have undertaken on the problem of flooding in Bangladesh; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government hosted an international conference at Lancaster house on 11-12 December at which the Bangladesh Government and all major bilateral and multilateral aid donors to the country were represented. The meeting was chaired by the World Bank.

The meeting endorsed an initial five-year flood action plan prepared for the Bangladesh Government by the World Bank. The plan recommends a staged approach to dealing with the flooding problem in Bangladesh, and emphasises the need to identify structures that are economically and technically viable and also socially and environmentally sound. The plan starts with a series of further detailed studies and pilot activities. Some of the studies would examine specific regions of the country which are affected by flooding to devise area specific solutions. The others would establish general guidelines for the conduct of the whole programme, and include pilot work on critical aspects such as river training, flood modelling and compartmentalisation.

One or more donors offered finance for each of the study and pilot activities recommended. The United Kingdom will take the lead in one of the regional studies (in the north-west), and three major supporting studies; and will participate in a number of other activities under the programme. The World Bank has agreed to co-ordinate this ambitious multi-country effort, and the flood action plan, which extends for an initial five years, will be reviewed every two years and defined in more detail as the studies proceed. The cost of the studies and the initial works that they are expected to identify is tentatively estimated at some $650 million. On the basis of this initial work it will be possible to take informed decisions on a possible comprehensive programme of flood control and development, which would be a much longer-term objective.

I believe that the conference took a major step forward in initiating a programme which offers the hope of a major reduction and alleviation in the devastation which flooding can bring to Bangladesh. Her Majesty's Government and the other Governments and agencies represented intend to push the programme forward energetically. I am grateful to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister for visiting the conference and discussing its work with participants.

Fourth Lomé Convention

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the negotiations on a fourth Lomé convention.

Mrs. Chalker: The main outstanding issues in the negotiation were settled at the fifth ACP/EC ministerial negotiating meeting in Brussels on 25-27 November. After further discussions, both sides subsequently confirmed their acceptance of the final outcome. The way was thus clear for signature in Lomé on 15 December. As soon as the finalised text of the new convention has been received a copy will be laid before Parliament.

The general framework of ACP/EC co-operation is largely unchanged under Lomé IV. The main features of the new convention are as follows:

(a) Duration: Lomé IV is of 10 years duration (ie it expires 29 February 2000) with provision for review after 5 years. Financial resources will continue to be provided on a 5 yearly basis so Lomé IV will be covered by two five-year European Development funds (EDF).

(b) New ACP members: The applications by Haiti and the Dominican Republic to join Lomé IV were accepted. Namibia will also be welcome to join Lomé when it becomes independent and if it wishes to do so.

(c) Financial package: Lomé IV contains a financial package of up to 12 billion ecu (around £8·5 billion). This comprises 10·8 billion ecu (around £7·7 billion) under the seventh European Development Fund (EDF VII), an increase of 46 per cent. over the previous EDF, and up to 1·2 billion ecu from the European Investment Bank's (EIB) own resources. This financial package will cover the first five years of the new convention. The Community will also provide up to 165 million ecu over the next five years to member states' dependencies under an associated Council decision. This comprises 140 million ecu from EDF VII plus up to 25 million ecu from EIB own resources.

The EDF is financed by direct contributions from the member states and not from the EC budget. The UK contribution to EDF VII will be 1·79 billion ecu (around £1·3 billion); this is 16·37 per cent. of the overall sum. EIB own resources are raised on the capital markets of the world as part of its overall financial operation.

(d) Use of EDF:

(i) Aid projects and programmes: the bulk of EDF resources will continue to be channelled through national indicative programmes for each ACP state. Aid will be programmed in the same way as under Lomé III, with a series of mutual commitments and obligations designed to maximise the effectiveness of the aid provided. Rural development is likely to continue to be the focal sector of assistance for many countries. However, Lomé IV places increased emphasis on industrial development and encouragement of private sector activity. Assistance will also be available in the form of finance for import programmes both from within national indicative programmes and from a separate earmarking which will be allocated on a selective basis throughout the next five years.

(ii) Investment support: specific support for investment and industrial development will continue to be available in the form of risk capital, managed by the EIB. This has been increased from 600 million ecu to 825 million ecu.

(iii) Stabex: (the arrangement for assisting ACP states facing shortfalls in their export earnings from a specified list of agricultural products). The Stabex provision within EDF VII is 1·5 billion ecu, representing a slightly increased share of the EDF. The system remains broadly the same as under Lomé III, although a number of technical changes have been agreed.

(iv) Sysmin: (an arrangement which provides assistance to ACP states facing shortfalls in production or earnings from a specified list of minerals): Sysmin also remains largely unchanged though the funds will now be provided to the ACP on grant terms. Its financial provision, at 480 million ecu, represents a slightly lower proportion of EDF VII than under EDF VI, reflecting the rate of take-up of available Sysmin funds in recent years.

(e) Use of EIB Own Resources: the EIB will continue to provide loans, subsidised from the EDF, for investment activities in creditworthy ACP countries.

(f) Trade Provisions: Lomé IV contains further improvements to the already favourable Lomé trade regime. These include improved access for a range of agricultural products and various improvements to the rules of origin designed to assist the ACP to develop processing and manufacturing industry. Substantial progress was made on the liberalisation of ACP rum access (rum is the only ACP industrial product still subject to quota restrictions). The EC agreed that the Council should take a decision by 1995 on how the quota should be abolished.

(g) Bananas: the Banana Protocol has been retained coupled with a joint EC/ACP declaration that the interests of traditional ACP suppliers will be safeguarded should any modifications be made to the internal Community arrangements for bananas in the context of the completion of the single market.

(h) Sugar: the sugar protocol is of indefinite duration and continues unchanged in Lomé IV.

(i) Toxic Waste: the EC has agreed to ban the export of all hazardous and radioactive waste to the ACP countries provided they ban imports from all countries.

Poland

Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress there had been in setting up a currency stabilisation fund for Poland.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary told the House on 29 November that the United Kingdom intended to contribute $100 million to a currency stabilisation fund for Poland. It has now been agreed that these resources should be provided as a grant to the fund, which will total around $1,000 million. The fund will be available to support policies aimed at liberalisation of payments and transfers for current international transactions. It will complement resources provided by the International Monetary Fund to support an agreed programme of economic policy reform.

The management of the fund will be agreed between the contributors and the Polish authorities. The fund is expected to become operational in January 1990 and to run for one year although it may be extended for a further period. Drawings on the fund will be limited and will be expected to be reconstituted. The contributors will discuss with the Polish Government how the balances remaining in the fund can most effectively be used to further assist economic reform in Poland.

The United Kingdom contribution will be part of the public expenditure provision for economic assistance to eastern Europe and is additional to and separate from the provision for overseas aid. Parliamentary approval of the new service will be sought in a Supplementary Estimate for the Overseas Aid Vote (Class II, Vote 5). Pending that approval, the sterling cost will be met by a repayable advance from the Contingency Fund.

International Development Association

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the negotiations on the ninth replenishment of the International Development Association; and what will be the United Kingdom contribution.

Mrs. Chalker: Negotiations on the ninth replenishment of the International Development Association (IDA 9) were successfully concluded in Washington on 14 December. Donor countries agreed on a replenishment of 11·68 billion special drawing rights (about $15 billion). This maintains in real terms the value of IDA 8. With repayments from earlier loans, there will be a real increase in the total available for commitment to the poorest countries over the three years starting on 1 July 1990, which will be about $17 billion. The United Kingdom has agreed, subject to Parliamentary approval, to contribute 6·7 per cent. of IDA 9, or nearly £619 million at the agreed exchange rate.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Stable Staff

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what are the powers of the Horserace Betting Levy Board with regard to the National Joint Council for Stable Staff; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will conduct a scrutiny of the role played by the Trainers Federation during current pay negotiations at the National Joint Council for Stable Lads; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is his policy towards making Horserace Betting Levy Board money payable to trainers through travelling expenses; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what steps have been taken to ascertain the requirements of trainers of further financial assistance from the Horserace Betting Levy Board; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what steps he has taken to ensure a full investigation by the Horserace Betting Levy Board of the circumstances whereby trainers have been unable to fund pay awards over the last decade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 19 December 1989]: The levy board has no powers in relation to the National Joint Council for Stable Staff. It is not for my right hon. and learned Friend to scrutinise the Trainers Federation. The levy board does not provide financial assistance direct to trainers of race horses. It is for the board to consider whether to re-introduce travelling expenses for trainers. It is also for the board to decide what, if any, information about the training industry may be relevant to its duties.

Mrs. Eulalia Potter

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will take steps to expedite the granting of a visa to Mrs. Eulalia Potter of the Philippines to enable her to reside with her husband in the United Kingdom;

(2) on what grounds the Philippines-born Mrs. Eulalia Potter, wife of Mr. M. J. Potter of South Hams, was refused a visa for entry to the United Kingdom on each occasion on which application was made.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have been asked to reply.

In accordance with the recent guidelines on the handling of representations by Members of Parliament in immigration cases, issued to Members on 14 December 1988, I have referred the question to the correspondence unit of the migration and visa department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The hon. Member will receive a reply from the unit as soon as possible.

Horse Racing

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he has any plans to investigate current Horserace Betting Levy Board practices in relation to generation of moneys by bookmakers' tax impositions; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will undertake an investigation into the means by which the Horserace Betting Levy Board provides finances for the benefit of racing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend is considering whether to establish an inquiry into the financing of racing. We are not considering any other investigation into the operation of the horserace betting levy system, a statutory purpose of which is the improvement of horse racing and under which bookmakers, not the levy board, customarily provide the horserace betting levy on off-course bets on horseraces by a "tax" on such bets, or by a deduction from winnings from them.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he has any plans to investigate the issue of interest-free loans made by the Horserace Betting Levy Board to racecourses; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has with regard to moves by the Horserace Betting Levy Board to recover £2 million of moneys made in interest-free loans to Goodwood racecourse; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 19 December 1989]: We have no plan to investigate the long-established practice of the levy board of making interest-free loans to racecourses, in pursuance of its statutory duty to apply its moneys for purposes conducive to the improvement of horse racing. We understand from the board that loans to Goodwood racecourse are being repaid on terms agreed either when the loans were made or as a result of subsequent re-negotiation.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to investigate the omission to disclose the £3·8 million bookmakers' surplus during his Department's inquiry in 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In 1988 my right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) invited the bookmakers' committee and the Horserace Betting Levy Board to make submissions to him about the possible terms of the 28 horserace betting levy scheme, which he determined this March. Information about the levy board's financial reserves was provided in these submissions, and we are not aware that any material information about bookmaking was omitted from them.

Sports Grounds

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken following the recommendations of the report by Lord Justice Popplewell on crowd safety and control at sports grounds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The proposals to give effect to the safety recommendations of the final report of the Popplewell inquiry were set out in a Home Office-Scottish Office consultative document published in June 1986.

In addition to revision of the guide to safety at sports grounds, designation under the Safety of Sports Grounds Act 1975 was extended in 1986 to sports grounds used for association football, rugby, or cricket and identified as having accommodation for over 10,000 spectators.

Parts II and III of the Fire Safety and Safety of Places of Sport Act 1987 amended the 1975 Act and introduced a system of safety certification for stands at undesignated sports grounds able to accommodate at least 500 spectators under cover with effect from 1 January 1988 and 1 January 1989 respectively. As from 1 June 1988, part IV of the 1987 Act extended entertainment licensing to indoor sports entertainments to which the public are invited as spectators.

The Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, which came into force on 1 January 1986, had already extended the police powers of search and arrest in ways that help them to deal with troublemakers at football grounds. The Public Order Act 1986 created a new offence of disorderly conduct to cover hooliganism in football grounds elsewhere.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the report by Lord Justice Taylor on crowd control and safety at sports stadia to be complete.

Mr. John Patten: The timing of the final report by the inquiry is a matter for Lord Justice Taylor. I understand that he hopes to complete his report in January 1990.

Drugs

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) male and (b) female foreign nationals are currently serving a prison sentence or are on remand for drug-related offences; and how many come from (i) Nigeria, (ii) Pakistan and (iii) Colombia.

Mr. Mellor: The latest readily available information is given in the table. The recording of nationality for citizens of Commonwealth countries and the Irish Republic is not always reliable. The nationality of remand prisoners and the offences with which they are charged are not recorded centrally until the completion of court proceedings.

Population sentenced for all drugs offences in prison service establishments in England and Wales on 30 June 1989: by nationality and sex.

Number[1]

Nationality (name of country)	Males	Females
Colombia	48	14
Nigeria	267	77
Pakistan	158	2
Other nationalities	606	81
United Kingdom	1,823	151
Not recorded	5	1
All nationalities	2,907	326

[1]Provisional. The figures are those recorded centrally which are approximate: detailed checking would involve disproportionate cost.

Police Recruitment

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applicants passed the police inititial recruitment examination in the Metropolitan police division in 1986, 1987 and 1988, broken down separately for white and black candidates.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis that the information is as follows:

Applicants who passed the PIR test

	White	Black[1]
1986	1,440	65
1987	1,306	74
1988	1,559	42

[1]Includes all members of the ethnic minorities.

Prison Boards of Visitors

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total membership of boards of visitors throughout the United Kingdom; and what number and percentages of them are members of ethnic minorities.

Mr. Mellor: The complement of all boards of visitors in England and Wales is 1,767 and on 14 December there were 1,630 members in post. The information that is held centrally indicates that of these, 127 (8 per cent.) were members of ethnic minorities. Visiting committees in Scotland are the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, and boards of visitors and visiting committees in Northern Ireland are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to increase ethnic minority representation on the board of visitors of Her Majesty's prison, Brixton.

Mr. Mellor: In making appointments to a board of visitors, consideration is given to the abilities of the individual candidate to discharge the duties effectively and the desirability of maintaining, so far as possible, a representative balance on the board in terms, for example, of age, sex and social and ethnic background. No fewer than two members of the board are required to be justices of the peace. The membership of individual boards is reviewed every three years.

The board of visitors for Her Majesty's prison, Brixton, currently has 12 members and one vacancy. Two members of the board are from the ethnic minorities.

Fresh Start

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the fresh start initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Discussions and correspondence with staff associations and other interested groups and individuals have been under way since the beginning of the fresh start initiative. All prison establishments have been working fresh start arrangements since August 1988. The initiative has therefore been completed and operational for some time. The benefits for officers of improved pay and the ending of overtime were felt immediately. Other benefits in terms of more professional management, increased productivity and regime enhancement are being progressively realised. This process will continue through the transitional period of the framework agreement, while the working week of officers is gradually shortened, until by 1 April 1992 all officers will be working a 39-hour week.

Debtors (Imprisonment)

Mr. Aspinwall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are imprisoned each year for non-payment of debts in (a) England and (b) Avon; and what is the average length of the prison sentence.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information from records held centrally is given in the table. Figures for England and Wales are published annually in Prison Statistics England and Wales (table 6.3 of the issue for 1988, Cm. 825); but to compile figures for Avon for several years would involve disproportionate cost.

Persons received into Prison Service establishments in England and Wales after committal for non-payment of debts in 1988 from all courts in Avon and England and Wales; by type of non-payment

Type of non-payment	Avon[1]		All courts in England and Wales
	Number of receptions	Average period imposed (days)	Number of receptions	Average period imposed (days)
Wife maintenance[2]	5	39	3,182	34
Child maintenance			17	38
Arrears under an affiliation order			36	34
Rates	5	43	253	43
Other debts			59	21
All types of non-payment	10	41	747	36

[1] Estimated.
[2] including wife and child maintenance.

Immigration

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the statutory provisions applying to the admission of non-British spouses of British citizens to the United Kingdom after marriage abroad; what ministerial discretion has been involved in such cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The provisions for admission to the United Kingdom as the spouse of a person who is present and settled here are set out in paragraph 50 of the Immigration Rules (HC 388). Ministers consider any representations that are made to them about individual cases but will not normally intervene before the initial decision is taken by the entry clearance officer, or while there is an outstanding appeal against a refusal to the independent appellate authorities. Ministers will also not normally reverse a decision where the appeal process has been exhausted and no new or compelling evidence has become available.

Brixton Prison

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deaths have occurred in each of the last five years in (a) Brixton prison and (b) Brixton prison hospital wing.

Mr. Mellor: The table gives the figures for all deaths of Brixton inmates for each year since 1984. It includes deaths which occurred outside the prison, for example following transfer to hospital for medical treatment, as well as those within Brixton itself. Deaths of all kinds are included.

Location	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988	[2]1989
Hospital	3	1	—	1	—	—
F Wing[1]	2	—	4	3	2	0
Ordinary location within Brixton	1	2	—	2	2	3
NHS hospital	3	2	3	1	—	1
Police custody	—	—	2	—	—	—
At court	—	—	—	—	—	1
Total	9	5	9	7	4	11

[1] F Wing is adjacent to the hospital and is staffed mainly by hospital prison officers. It holds most of the inmates within the prison who require regular medical observation.
[2] To 19 December.

Germain Alexander

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will establish an independent inquiry into the death of Germain Alexander who died in King's College hospital on Wednesday 6 December;

(2) if he will instruct the governor of Brixton prison and the Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis to set up an inquiry to establish how Mr. Germain Alexander incurred serious injuries on 5 and 6 December while in police and prison custody.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. A coroner's inquest is to be held which will inquire into all the circumstances surrounding Mr. Alexander's death. Until the outcome of the inquest is known any further inquiries would be inappropriate.

Morledge Case

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will initiate an immediate inquiry into the conduct of the officers involved in obtaining confessions from Mr. Morledge;

(2) if he will make a statement on the incidents involving Kevin Morledge, Godfrey Hibbert and the Nottinghamshire police force.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. Any allegation of malpractice against officers of the Nottinghamshire constabulary is a matter for the chief constable of that force. I understand that the chief constable has arranged for the allegations in this case to be investigated.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what powers the police have to offer immunity against prosecution; and if he will review these powers in the light of the Morledge case.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The police have no such powers.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what rules apply to the taking of confessions by police officers; and if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable for Nottinghamshire on the extent to which these were followed in the Morledge case.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The code of practice for the detention, treatment and questioning of persons by police officers governs the way in which suspects are interviewed. A copy is available in the Library. The way in which the codes are applied in a particular case is a matter for the Chief Constable of Nottinghamshire and the courts.

Police Disciplinary Codes

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those sections of police disciplinary codes that relate to the use of racially offensive expressions by police officers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Section 9 of the police discipline code, which is set out at schedule 1 of the Police (Discipline) Regulations 1985, is the only section which specifically relates to the offence of racially discriminatory behaviour.

Such behaviour may, however, fall within other sections of the code, such as abuse of authority (section 8), disobedience to orders (section 3) and discreditable conduct (section 1).

West Indian Communities

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps (a) he has taken and (b) he will take to improve the relationship between the police and the West Indian community in the inner cities.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government will continue to support the police in their efforts to be responsive to the needs and concerns of Afro-Caribbean and other communities within the inner cities and elsewhere. We are encouraging effective consultation by the police with all sections of the public, and in particular with members of the ethnic minority communities. We are emphasising to chief officers and police authorities the priority that we believe should be placed on recruitment and retention of ethnic minority officers and civilians, and the importance of implementing effective equal opportunities policies. We have also recently established a specialist support unit for police community and race relations training to help ensure that a professional approach to community and race relations is integrated into all aspects of police training.

Ambulance Stations

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of the Metropolitan police on releasing the telephone numbers of London ambulance stations to members of the public.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis that he would advise the public to use the existing 999 emergency system.

Chinese Nationals

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the arrangements announced on 16 June, Official Report, column 566, allowing Chinese nationals to remain in the United Kindom for six months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend has decided that the concession allowing Chinese nationals to remain here on an exceptional basis should be extended for a further period of 12 months.

Race Relations

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made towards the reduction of the time taken to deal with applications for section 11 funding; and what is the number of applications presently awaiting resolution.

Mr. John Patten: Over the period July 1988 to September 1989 the backlog of section 11 applications has been reduced from 1,400 posts to some 150.

At present the average time taken to process applications of all sizes has fallen to between three to four months.

Prison Medical Service

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to conduct a review of the operation of the prison medical service.

Mr. Mellor: Yes. My right hon. and learned Friend has decided to carry out an efficiency scrutiny of the prison medical service with the following terms of reference.

(1) To examine the effectiveness and value for money of the prison service's arrangements for providing medical and dental services for inmates of penal establishments.

(2) To consider in particular, having regard to the Government's response to the July 1986 report on the prison medical service by the House of Commons Social Services Select Committee and taking as given the need to retain a separate medical service, the following aspects of the service:

(a) the policy and practice in management of the prison medical service and in the employment and deployment of both full and part-time medical and other staff, including the use made of locum tenens and visiting NHS specialists and consultants;

(b) the scale of provision of hospital facilities in penal establishments necessary to support the medical service provided;

(c) the policy and practice of purchasing, stockholding and control of pharmaceutical supplies; and

(d) arrangements for training prison medical service personnel, ie doctors, nurses and hospital officers.

(3) Having regard to the arrangements and management practices in comparable organisations, to make recommendations on changes to increase value for money and effectiveness; and on performance indicators to enable the director of prison medical services to monitor efficiency and cost-effectiveness.

The scrutiny will be conducted by a team of officials led by Mr. Robert Wootton. Dr. Pamela Mason of the Department of Health will act as medical assessor. I will exercise ministerial supervision. The scrutiny will begin in early January and I expect to receive the report during May.

The scrutiny team will be consulting widely about the operation of the service and interested parties may wish to send their observations in writing by 12 February to the prison medical service scrutiny team, room 1106, Home Office, 50 Queen Anne's gate, London SW1H 9AT.

Fixed Penalties

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he proposes to make any changes to the operation of the extended fixed penalty system.

Mr. Waddington: On 27 June 1989, my right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Douglas Hurd) announced that we would be consulting representative organisations about fixed penalty levels and other matters connected with the fixed penalty system. I have now considered possible changes in the light of this consultation.

I propose to increase fixed penalty levels to £16 for non-endorsable offences and £32 for endorsable offences, with effect from 1 April 1990. The levels will be reviewed every two years thereafter. I propose to amend the legislation to enable the level of enhancement which occurs when an unpaid penalty is registered as a fine to be varied by order.

As announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport on 14 December, we shall be consulting further about a possible increased fixed penalty in London and on the proposed system of priority routes.

I propose to amend the range of offences covered by the fixed penalty system to include the offences of failing to comply with a red signal at a pelican crossing, failing to accord precedence to pedestrians at a pelican crossing or zebra crossing, and failing to observe a temporary speed restriction; and to exclude offences of overloading by heavy goods vehicles.

I propose to provide for traffic wardens, in addition to police officers, to issue fixed penalty notices for the endorsable offences of parking on pedestrian crossings.

I propose to correct the anomaly whereby owner liability for parking offences applies only if the fixed penalty notice is affixed to the vehicle, and not if it is handed to the driver.

Orders to increase penalty levels and to amend the range of offences will be made in the near future. The other changes will require primary legislation, which will be brought forward when parliamentary time permits.

Immigration

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the outcome of the meetings of TREVI and European Community Immigration Ministers in Paris on 15 December.

Mr. Waddington: The meeting of TREVI Ministers endorsed a number of measures to reinforce co-operation among member states in the fields of law enforcement and security. In particular, we agreed to do more to co-ordinate our efforts to combat drug trafficking and organised crime, and to co-operate in measures to prevent disorder at international football matches. We approved priorities for further work to develop co-operation in general, including the development of a network of liaison officers; speedier sharing of information; joint studies of scientific and technical aspects; and strengthening security at the external borders of the European Community.

The meeting of Ministers concerned with immigration, attended also by a vice-president of the Commission, was the seventh such meeting following the establishment during the United Kingdom presidency in 1986 of the ad hoc working group on immigration.

Ministers had before them a report from senior officials which set out the work undertaken during the French Presidency and which was approved. In particular, we restated our desire for the conclusion of a convention determining which state should be responsible for examining an asylum applications and we welcomed the opening of discussions on a draft convention on the crossing of external borders of the member states of the Community. Building on earlier discussions, the latter provides for controls to be operated to a common standard at member states' external frontiers and for the harmonisation of a visa policies. It also includes proposals for the recognition of visas issued by other member states and in the longer term for a common visa. Although the United Kingdom is not at present in a position to agree to all these proposals, I undertook that we would play a full and active part in discussing them.

I was pleased to make contact with my Community colleagues at these meetings, at which we also agreed upon two public declarations outlining the measures under development respectively in TREVI and in immigration with a view to completion of the single market. I shall be arranging for copies of these declarations to be placed in the Library.

TRANSPORT

Railways

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if any experimentally re-opened lines or stations have subsequently closed.

Mr. Portillo: No.

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in separate categories for England, Scotland and Wales the lines and stations now opened or re-opened under the 1981 amendment to the Transport Act as agreed between his Department and British Rail (a) sections of line re-opened, (b) stations on re-opened lines and (c) stations on lines previously open and subsequently experimentally re-opened; and if he will give the total mileage of railway re-opened since 1981 under these provisions.

Mr. Portillo: The following lines have been re-opened by British Rail under the Transport Act 1962 (Amendment) Act 1981:

England
- Penistone to Barnsley
- Kettering to Corby
- Dore Curve (Derbyshire)
- Morecambe to Heysham Harbour
- Oxford to Bicester
- Coventry to Nuneaton
- Lichfield City to Lichfield Trent Valley
- Bishop Auckland to Stanhope
- Walsall to Hednesford
- Altrincham to Stockport

Scotland
- Newbridge Junction to Bathgate
- Coatbridge Central to Motherwell

Thornton West Junction to Thornton South Junction (Fife)

Wales
Cardiff City
Abercynon to Aberdare (approximately 91 miles)

The following stations have been opened or re-opened on these lines:

England
Corby
Heysham Harbour
Bicester Town
Bedworth
Lichfield Trent Valley
Stanhope
Hednesford
Cannock
Landywood
Bloxwich
Broad Lane

Scotland
Uphall
Livingstone North
Bathgate

Wales
Ninian Park
Penrhiwceiber
Mountain Ash
Cwmbach
Fernhill
Aberdare
Waun-gron Park

The decision to re-open a station or line is a matter for the board and does not need ministerial approval.

Train Drivers (Telephones)

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in installing telephones in the drivers' cabs of trains on Network South East; and when he expects the programme to be completed.

Mr. Portillo: All driver-only operated rolling stock and all new stock on Network South East has cab radio already. Approximately 1,000 cab radios have been fitted on other trains. In addition, lineside equipment for various lines has either been installed or is on order. The programme is scheduled for completion in 1992.

Light Railway Systems

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to promote rapid light transport railway systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: We accept that light rail or light rapid transit system have a part to play in improving public transport in some urban areas and we are prepared to consider for central Government grant those systems which are expected to bring benefits in terms of reduced road congestion, environmental improvements, and economic development.

Rail Electrification

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss proposals for the electrification of the Edinburgh-Linlithgow-Glasgow line.

Mr. Portillo: No. It would be for the British Railways board to bring forward such proposals. However, I understand that BR proposes to introduce new class 158 express diesel units on this line in 1990. These units will be fully air-conditioned and capable of speeds of up to 90 mph.

London Underground (Escalators)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many new escalators have been built on London Underground stations during the last five years; how many new ones are planned and at what cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: This is an operational matter for London Underground Limited, but I understand that 26 escalators have entered service in the last five years and that a further 11 are currently under construction.

Driving Instructors

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to change the regulations governing the qualifications of those supervising learner drivers.

Mr. Atkins: I share the public concern about the risks involved where learner drivers are under the supervision of other drivers who are themselves very young and only newly qualified.

I have today issued a consultation paper on our proposals to require a minimum age of 21 and at least three years as the holder of a full driving licence for those who accompany learner drivers. A copy of the document has been placed in the Library.

Airport Security

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what warnings have been received about the need for extra security at British airports during the Christmas period; what action has been taken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend ensures that the level of security required at British airports is appropriate to the threat to civil aviation. The "Threat Advisory" issued by the US State Department on 15 December did not refer to aviation and neither the US Federal Aviation Administration nor my Department judged that additional security measures were necessary at airports. Nevertheless airports have been reminded that it is important that existing security requirements should be scrupulously observed. We do not publicly discuss threat information, or what action is taken as a result of any information.

Vehicle Emissions

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what regulations exist to prevent the emission of smoke from diesel vehicles in use on the highway; who is responsible for their enforcement; and if he will provide statistics showing the extent of enforcement of these powers;

(2) whether he has any plans to introduce new powers to control the emissions of smoke from heavy diesel vehicles in use on the highway.

Mr. Atkins: Regulation 61 of the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986 prohibits the emission of smoke likely to cause damage to property or injury or danger to persons.

The annual tests for buses and heavy goods vehicles conducted by the Department's vehicle inspectorate include a visual check on smoke density. Over the past two years the inspectorate has increased substantially its programme of roadside checks on the condition of goods vehicles and fleet checks at operators' premises. These include a check on smoke emissions. Vehicles can be banned or owners required to rectify defects within a specified period. The total number of roadside and fleet checks in 1988-89 was almost 155,000.

In addition, the police are responsible for day-to-day enforcement of requirements set by the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations which include controls on vehicle emissions. As well as prosecuting offenders, they can require defects to be rectified within a specified period.

There are no plans to alter these powers.

A12, Lowestoft

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions he has reached on a second A12 trunk road crossing of Lake Lothing at Lowestoft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Following a report by consultants commissioned by my Department about options for improving the A12 truck road through Lowestoft, we favour a new mid-harbour crossing in the vicinity of the Co-operative Wholesale Society factory. To the north of the river, the bridge will connect with the northern spine road which is to be built as a joint venture between private developers and Suffolk county council. To the south of the river, it will connect with the proposed South Lowestoft relief road.

We believe that this new north-south road will provide better communications for the town of Lowestoft, relieve congestion in the town centre, and provide opportunities to improve the surrounding environment.

My Department will begin public consultations in the spring of 1990.

LRT (Safety)

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is yet in a position to announce safety and quality of service objectives for London Regional Transport.

Mr. Parkinson: I have today written to the chairman of London Regional Transport in the following terms:

"My predecessor wrote to you on your appointment about the challenges facing London Regional Transport. He asked you to prepare a strategy for the coming years, which could be used as a basis for setting formal objectives for you and your board.

Your response takes the form of the 'Chairman's Planning Statement', which you are about to publish. In the light of that statement, I am writing to you about the safety and quality of service objectives I wish you to pursue. Before 1 April 1990 I shall settle with you the financial objectives for LRT covering the next three financial years.

Safety

LRT and its subsidiaries are responsible for the safe operation of the services they provide. The Fennell Report on the Kings Cross fire underlined the need to give the highest priority to safety and to address safety matters explicitly in all LRT's activities. You have undertaken with vigour the task of implementing the Fennell Report's recommendations. You have already fully implemented 73 of the 127 recommendations addressed to LRT or London Underground, and have in hand action on the remaining 54.

You have also now established a clear framework for collecting statistics on safety performance, setting safety objectives and monitoring and auditing safety performance at every level of the organisation. This should ensure the progressive improvement in the safety of all the services you provide or secure. I welcome the steps you have taken. I hereby endorse the safety objectives set out in annex A to this letter.

Quality of service on the Underground

Demand for Underground services has grown by more than 70 per cent. since 1982. This has put the Underground under strain and we are all agreed that the quality of service for passengers is not as good as it should be.

Much of passengers' dissatisfaction stems from overcrowding. The only way to deal adequately with the growth in demand is to invest in increasing the capacity of the system. This is why approval has been given for a massive investment programme, including the £900 million major upgrading programme and the extension of the Jubilee Line to service East London and Docklands. Urgent work is in progress on the options for another major new line to relieve congestion. In the shorter term, we must ensure that the most is made of the existing system. I am therefore setting objectives for improvement in such areas as peak capacity, reliability and the availability of lifts and escalators. I shall look to London Underground to meet these as soon as possible and, in any case, no later than 31 March 1992. These objectives are set out in full at annex B to the letter."

Copies of the annexes to this letter have been placed in the House Libraries.

Smoke Hoods

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to introduce legislation implementing the mandatory use of passenger protection smoke hoods for civil aircraft using airports in the United Kingdom.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Civil Aviation Authority is responsible for the regulation of air safety. The authority published a specification for smoke hoods in May 1988. I understand that no smoke hood has yet been shown to meet the specification. The authority has told me that when a suitable hood does exist it will review the arguments for and against the provision of smoke hoods and decide whether a mandatory requirement would be appropriate.

Heathrow Express Rail Link

Mr. Aspinwall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Heathrow express rail link in the Upper Waiting Hall, to commence on 12 February 1990.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 19 December 1989]: We have received an application from my hon. Friend himself and I will write to him.

SCOTLAND

Royal Scottish Academy

10. Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what response he has received to the announcement that £2·5 million is to be dedicated to the repair of the Royal Scottish Academy building in Edinburgh.

Mr. Lang: Both the chairman and the director of the National Galleries of Scotland have warmly welcomed the announcement that £2·5 million is to be dedicated to the repair of the Royal Scottish Academy building in Edinburgh.

Homelessness

18. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate how many people in Scotland will be homeless on 25 December.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is not possible to estimate from the information available the number of homeless on a single date in the future.

58. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the factors which have contributed to the increase in homelessnes over the last six years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The incidence of homelessness increased in the mid-1980s because of social, economic and demographic factors. Over the last three years, the number of households assessed by local authorities as homeless has remained reasonably stable.

Hospital Waiting Lists

19. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what decrease has been achieved in waiting lists in the Scottish Health Service over the last year.

34. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what decrease has been achieved in waiting lists in the Scottish Health Service over the last year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In the year to 31 March 1989 the in-patient waiting list in Scotland fell by 9·2 per cent.

University Students

20. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to increase the numbers of students from manual working class backgrounds gaining access to university education.

Mr. Lang: We have taken steps to improve participation in higher education among all groups. Recent changes in secondary education will increase the numbers of those staying on at school and our Scottish wider access programme will benefit those without standard entry qualifications.

Health Service Expenditure

21. Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the expenditure per capita in the National Health Service in Scotland; what was the total expenditure on the National Health Service in Scotland in 1979; and what will be the total expenditure in 1989.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Spending per head in the Health Service in Scotland this year was £550, an increase of 33·5 per cent. in real terms since 1979.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each health board the amount of money spent on press and publicity in each of the past three years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

67. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many health boards are currently placing unplanned restrictions on expenditure in order to reduce or eliminate any likely deficit at the end of this financial year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I know of no health boards which are placing unplanned restrictions on expenditure to reduce or eliminate deficits.

Student Loans

22. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what calculations he has made about the numbers applying to enter central institutions in Scotland after the introduction of a student loans scheme.

Mr. Lang: My Department does not try to estimate applications for places at central institutions, but I have no reason to believe that the introduction of the top-up loans scheme will discourage entry into higher education.

78. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received regarding the Government's plans to introduce top-up loans in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has received around 250 such representations covering a range of issues relating to the introduction of top-up student loans.

55. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the impact of student loans upon Scottish education.

Mr. Lang: Approximately one third of the representations on top-up loans received by my right hon. and learned Friend since the publication of the White Paper "Top-Up Loans for Students" (Cm. 520), referred specifically to the potential impact of the proposals on the Scottish education system.

Football Grounds

23. Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he is taking to improve public safety at football grounds.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have asked the football authorities, the police and other emergency services, as well as local authorities to implement the recommendations in Lord Justice Taylor's interim report in order to improve public safety at football grounds.

Health Service (Patients)

24. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients were treated in the Scottish Health Service in 1978-79; and how many were treated in 1988.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In 1978-79 6,024,165 patients were treated and in 1988-89 6,873,112—an increase of 848,947.

Legal Profession

25. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received about the proposals for the reform of the legal profession in Scotland since the publication of the White Paper.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Four.

Police Morale

26. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about morale in the police force in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has received some representations about the effect on police morale of the removal of the rates element of rent allowance. He has taken these representations into account in bringing forward regulations which will restore to officers whose circumstances have not changed the level of rent allowance, including the rates element, which they were receiving on 31 March. The regulations will come into effect on 22 December. I hope that police authorities will be able to make payments backdated to 1 April as soon as possible.

Agricultural Education

27. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Williams report on the future of agricultural education in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement made by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland on 15 December 1989.

Self-employment

28. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current level of self-employment in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: It is estimated that there were 224,000 self-employed in Scotland in June 1989, the latest date for which a figure is available.

Housing Policy

29. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will undertake a review of housing policy priorities with special reference to meeting the needs of the homeless and those in damp housing.

38. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will undertake a review of housing policy priorities with specific reference to meeting the needs of the homeless and those in damp housing.

44. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will undertake a review of housing policy priorities with specific reference to meeting the needs of the homeless and those in damp housing.

47. Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will undertake a review of housing policy priorities with specific reference to meeting the needs of the homeless and those in damp housing.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government policy priorities for housing in Scotland already take full account of the needs of the homeless and of those in damp housing.

British Steel

30. Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, what is the latest communication he has had from the chairman of British Steel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend received a private letter from Sir Robert Scholey on 11 December. The letter, inter alia, confirmed that the statement which Sir Robert made on 3 December 1987 concerning the Scottish steel plants still stands.

Whisky Industry

31. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the current state of the Scotch whisky industry.

Mr. Lang: The industry is enjoying a period of growth in both volume and value terms, and looks set for further growth.

56. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the numbers employed and the export performance of the Scottish whisky industry.

Mr. Lang: The total number of employees engaged in spirit distilling and compounding in Scotland in 1987 was 15,300, according to the census of employment conducted in September that year.

The table gives an indication of the industry's recent export performance.

Exports of Scotch Whisky

	1987	1988	Percentage change 1987-88
Volume (mlpa)	240,174	245,973	+2·4

In the year to September 1989 it is estimated that the value of whisky exports was 15 per cent. higher than in the year to September 1988.

Export prospects should be further improved by the tax reforms, presently under way in Japan and North Korea, which will ease the discrimination against Scotch whisky.

43. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people are estimated to be working in the whisky trade in Scotland; what was the comparable figure 10 years ago; what are the capacities in which they are employed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The latest available information on employment in the industry in Scotland comes from the 1987 census of employment. The table shows the total number of employees in employment in the industry in September 1987 and September 1981, the nearest year to 1979 for which comparable estimates exist.

1987 Census of Employment.

Although no official statistics exist, a recent survey undertaken by the Scotch Whisky Association found that in September 1988 around one quarter of the total work force was engaged in the primary production of Scotch whisky, a further 40 per cent. worked directly in the blending and bottling plants, and the remaining third in administration and other support work.

Local Government Finance

32. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of those liable to pay domestic rates had not paid their rates by December 1988; and what percentage of those eligible to pay the community charge have not now done so.

52. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of those liable to pay domestic rates had not paid their rates by December 1988; and what percentage of those eligible to pay the community charge have not now done so.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Comparison between the collection of the community charge and domestic rates cannot be precise because of significant differences in the administration of the two systems. The general flow of income from community charges does not appear very different from the flow from domestic rates, when allowance is made for these differences, including the much larger number of people liable for the community charge.

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the cost to local authorities and central Government of the collection of (a) domestic rates and (b) the poll tax for 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The costs to local authorities of the collection of rates in 1987-88 was £12·1 million and in 1988-89, £17·3 million. No separate figures are held centrally on the collection costs for domestic rates only. The cost to local authorities of collecting the community charge in 1989-90 is estimated by authorities at £31·8 million. This figure includes the cost of registration work, but excludes the costs of operating the rebate scheme. For 1987-88 and 1988-89 no separately identified figures are available for any preparatory costs authorities may have incurred in respect of the collection of the community charge.

There are no direct costs falling on central Government for the collection of either domestic rates or the community charge, although provision was made for such costs falling on authorities in the RSG settlements for the years concerned.

74. Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance has been issued on the collection of the community charge debts through arrestment orders.

Mr. Rifkind: None. It is for local authorities to decide the most effective means of collecting arrears. Authorities will be familiar with the debt collection procedures available to them since they are broadly the same as were available under domestic rates.

59. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place a copy of the speech on the poll tax which he made in Glasgow on 4 December in the Library.

Mr. Rifkind: I made no speech in Glasgow on 4 December. In my speech to the Edinburgh city business club on 4 December I referred to a number of aspects of the community charge as well as to a number of other matters. There is no copy of that speech. I will, however, send the hon. Member a copy of the press release which reported my main comments on the community charge.

57. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hon. Members have made representations to him regarding non-payment of the community charge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of such representations.

54. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the number of people who are in arrears with their poll tax payments.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information about the number of people in arrears is not available for Scotland as a whole. Figures for the number of people who have made some community charge payments vary from region to region but are typically in the range of 85 per cent. to 95 per cent. of chargepayers, with a figure of 98 per cent. in one area.

39. Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many summary warrants were granted in respect of rate arrears for the financial year 1988-89; and how may summary warrants have been granted in respect of community charge arrears.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of summary warrants granted for rate arrears in calendar year 1988 was 468. A warrant may apply to a number of debtors. The figures for calendar year 1989 for rates and community charge arrears will be available in 1990.

35. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what effect non-payment of the community charge will have on the level of the community charge for the next financial year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Local authorities made allowances, in setting their community charges for 1989-90, for non-payment by a small percentage of persons liable to the charge. I do not have any reason to suppose that these allowances will be exceeded and, therefore, no reason to suppose that there will be any effect on community charges for 1990-91.

General Practitioners

33. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from general practitioners in Tayside about general practitioner budgets and from hospitals about self-governing status.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Three GP practices in Tayside are interested in becoming budget holders and establishing a self-governing hospital.

36. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has made to the doctors and dentists review body with regard to the remuneration of general practitioners in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The DDRB has been told that a special fund will protect the income of rural GPs who fulfil all their obligations under the new contract.

Nuclear Power

37. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what reports he has received on the economic and environmental benefits to Scotland of nuclear power.

Mr. Lang: None.

Violence

41. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the numbers of convictions recorded last year for violent crime in Scotland where alcohol was directly or indirectly involved; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not available in that form, but alcohol has been generally known to be a factor in many cases involving crimes of violence.

Housing Stock (Sales)

42. Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of Scottish Homes stock has been sold; and what proportion of local authority housing stock has been sold.

73. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of Scottish Homes stock has been sold; and what proportion of local authority housing stock has been sold.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In the period 1 April 1979 to 30 September 1989, the proportion of houses sold by Scottish Homes and its predecessor the Scottish Special Housing Association was 32·6 per cent. the comparable figure for Scottish local authorities was 14·7 per cent.

Scottish Homes alone has sold 6·7 per cent. of the stock it inherited from the SSHA on 1 April 1989.

69. Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many houses and flats owned previously by local authorities in Scotland have been sold to their former tenants; and what further proposals he has to encourage the spread of home ownership in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Since April 1979, over 124,000 houses and flats have been sold by Scottish local authorities to sitting tenants.

The position on home ownership is reviewed constantly. A number of detailed changes to the right-to-buy legislation will be brought into force by the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

Roads

45. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many miles of new motorway, dual-carriageway and other trunk roads have been completed in Scotland since 1979; at what cost; and if he will give details of other road projects in the pipeline.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: One hundred and two schemes, each costing over £1 million, have been completed since May 1979. These have provided 282 miles of new trunk road, comprising 24 miles of new motorway, 108 miles of dual carriageway and 150 miles of single carriageway. So far as details of future road projects are concerned I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) on 15 May 1989, c. 31-37.

75. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further expenditure is planned on primary roads in south east Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Future spending on trunk primary roads in south-east scotland will depend on the decisions to be taken following the recent consultation on the routes south of Edinburgh study. The position within the trunk road programme of any scheme proposals that result from these decisions will then have to be considered in the light of the resources likely to be available and the competing priorities of projects already in the programme.

Priorities for expenditure on non-trunk primary roads are a matter for the relevant local roads authorities in the context of their tansport policies and programmes and available capital allocations.

Job Announcements

46. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many major job announcements have been made in the past 12 months.

Mr. Lang: Through my Department's monitoring of press reports, I am aware of some 33 announcements, involving over 10,500 jobs to be created or relocated in Scotland.

65. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many major job announcements have been made in the past three months.

Mr. Lang: Through my Department's monitoring of press reports, I am aware of some four announcements, involving nearly 1,200 jobs to be created or relocated in Scotland.

Health Service (Tendering)

48. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made within the Scottish Health Service in respect of putting contracts out to competitive tendering.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Health boards continue to make significant progress. By the end of November, 155 contracts had been awarded and these are expected to release savings of more than £60 million over the periods of the contracts. These savings are available to boards for reinvestment in direct patient care. Of the 155 contracts awarded, 119 (over 75 per cent.) have been won by in-house teams. The total savings released could buy over 5,500 renal dialysis machines or pay for over 20,000 hip replacement operations or around 9,500 heart bypass operations.

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what evidence he has on the effect on the standards of cleaning and catering in hospitals in Scotland of competitive tendering.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: An independent company has recently carried out a snapshot survey of cleaning and catering contracts both in-house and private in Scotland. The report of the survey indicates that with respect to domestic services, cleaning standards overall were good. In 14 out of 24 hospitals visited, the standard of cleanliness was rated as very good, nine hospitals were rated as adequate, and only one (a geriatric hospital with problems related to incontinence) was rated poor/not clean. With regard to catering, 29 hospital contracts were assessed, of which 25 were reported as producing food which was good or very good and served at an acceptable temperature. Four were rated either as adequate or poor, with in four cases less than acceptable temperature (not hot) being the main complaint. Where shortcomings have been found, these are being drawn to the attention of the board general manager. In light of this survey I am satisfied that standards are at the very least being maintained and that steps will be taken to put right such shortcomings as were found.

60. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will instruct health boards to make public the details of all contracts with private companies for the provision of services to health board patients.

Mr. Forsyth No such instruction is required: health boards normally issue news releases giving information on important contracts awarded. Additionally, boards have in the past given detailed information in response to requests from hon. Members.

CBI Scotland

49. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the Confederation of British Industry, Scotland, and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend met the chairman and director-designate of the Confederation of British Industry, Scotland informally on 24 November. Matters of mutual interest were discussed.

STUC

50. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the Scottish Trade Union Congress; what was was discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend met the general council of the Scottish Trade Union Congress on 10 November to discuss a range of matters affecting the Scottish economy and industry. He drew attention to the sustained improvement in the Scottish economy over the past year as reflected in falling unemployment; record levels of employment and output; and continuing strong performance in manufacturing productivity and exports.

Fishing Industry

51. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received on the Scottish fishing industry.

Mr. Lang: A number of representations have been received. My noble Friend the Minister of State has had several meetings with the industry recently to discuss the approach to be taken in negotiations on EC fisheries arrangements with third countries, and the level of total allowable catches and quotas for 1990. He also met the hon. Member for Western Isles (Mr. Macdonald), along with industry representatives, on 14 December. In addition, fisheries departments are in regular contact with the industry.

Federal Express

53. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the chairman of Federal Express about consideration of Prestwick as a base for their European operations.

Mr. Lang: The Secretary of State has had a number of discussions with representatives of Federal Express, the details of which cannot be disclosed as such discussions are held on a commercial in confidence basis.

Scottish National Farmers Union

61. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the Scottish National Farmers Union; and what was discussed.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend and my noble Friend the Minister of State have regular meetings with the union. My noble Friend last met representatives on 25 October when issues concerning farming in the hills and uplands were discussed.

Law Centres

62. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to establish more law centres in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No.

Universities

63. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the principals of Scottish universities; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend last met the principals in May 1989 to discuss various matters of mutual interest privately.

British Rail

64. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chairman of British Rail; and what matters were discussed.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend discussed various topics relating to rail transport when he met the chairman of British Rail, Sir Robert Reid, on 31 October 1989.

Self-governing Hospitals

66. Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received any representations from the British Medical Association on the evaluation of self-governing hospitals.

77. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received any representations from the British Medical Association on the evaluation of self-governing hospitals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett).

Warrant Sales

68. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to bring forward legislation to abolish warrant sales in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall) today.

Water Industry

70. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received any representations from the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities in favour of the privatisation of the water industry.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No.

Bed and Breakfast

71. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the number of people who live in bed and breakfast accommodation for more than six months per year; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information available on the numbers of households placed in bed and breakfast accommodation by local authorities under the homelessness provisions of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 does not enable estimates to be made in the form requested.

The code of guidance issued to local authorities on the exercise of their homelessness functions makes it clear that bed and breakfast accommodation should be used only as a last resort and then only for as short a period as possible.

Electricity Industry

72. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next proposes to meet the heads of the electricity supply industry in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: No such meeting is planned for the immediate future, but my right hon. and learned Friend does meet the chairmen of the Scottish electricity boards from time to time to discuss a wide range of issues affecting the industry.

Natural Heritage

76. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest progress towards the establishment in Scotland of a unified and autonomous natural heritage agency.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend, announced on 28 November (Official Report, vol. 162, cols 188-89) that he will consult early next year on the detailed aspects of his proposals to create a natural heritage agency. Its establishment will follow the creation of a Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland provided for in the Environmental Protection Bill which will shortly come before Parliament.

Electricity Board Reports

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (i) the statutory requirements governing the publication of reports of the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board and the South of Scotland Electricity Board, (ii) the dates on which such reports have been published in each year since nationalisation, either for existing or predecessor corporation, and (iii) indicate when the reports for 1988-89 will be published.

Mr. Rifkind: The statutory provision for the making of annual reports to the Secretary of State by the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board and the South of Scotland Electricity Board is contained in section 42(1) of the Electricity (Scotland) Act 1979. The annual report requirements applying to each board have effect as though made under that section of the Act. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) on 17 October at column 75.

Annual reports published by the boards in previous years are available in the Library of the House.

I am expecting the boards to make their reports for 1988-89 to me by the end of the year.

Greater Glasgow Health Board

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make additional funds available to Greater Glasgow health board for paediatric cardiac surgery.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This year, Greater Glasgow health board was allocated £8·764 million for cardiac surgery as a whole. The actual amount given to each unit in Glasgow, including the paediatric unit, is for the board to decide.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current number of unfilled medical posts in the family planning service for Greater Glasgow health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I understand from the board that there are no unfilled posts.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of requests for medical locum posts in the family planning service which have been refused in the past three months for Greater Glasgow health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I understand from the board that no requests have been refused.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many travel-to-work areas in Scotland had an unemployment rate (a) over 10 per cent., (b) between 5 per cent. and 10 per cent. and (c) below 5 per cent. in October 1989.

Mr. Lang: In October 1989, 13 Scottish travel-to-work areas had a work force unemployment rate of more than 10 per cent., 36 had a rate of between 5 and 10 per cent., and 11 had work force rates of below 5 per cent.

Cardiac Surgery

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the amount of central funding allocated to Greater Glasgow health board for cardiac surgery for the past three years; and how much was spent in (a) the Royal Hospital for Sick Children, Glasgow, (b) Glasgow Royal Infirmary and (c) Glasgow Western Infirmary.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The funding allocation to Greater Glasgow health board for the provision of cardiac surgery for each of the three years, 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90, was £7·556 million, £7·896 million and £8·764 million respectively.

It is for Greater Glasgow health board to decide the distribution of funds among individual cardiac units.

Nature Conservancy

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro), of 28 November, Official Report, columns 188-89, if he will list the 98 respondents which are in favour of the merger between the proposed Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland and the existing Countryside Commission for Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Of the 159 respondents to the consultation paper "Scotland's Natural Heritage" expressing an opinion, 98 supported in principle the Government's proposal to bring forward legislation to merge the Countryside Commission for Scotland and the proposed Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland. They are listed in the table except for those who submitted comments in confidence.

Almost all respondents commented on a range of issues or sought assurances that the Government would address particular issues before finalising their proposals. These views will be taken into account and further consultation will be undertaken early next year.

Nurses

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each year since 1959 the number of nurses employed by the National Health Service, with each year also expressed as a percentage change on the previous year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is contained in successive volumes of Scottish health statistics published annually by the information and statistics division of the Common Services Agency, copies of which are in the Library. The latest volume published on 20 December 1989 contains information as at 31 March 1989. The provisional figure for 30 September 1989, not yet published, is 42,350.

Nursery Classes

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the proportion of under five-year-olds in Scotland who currently attend nursery classes provided by local education authorities in each island and local authority region; and what the figure was in each of the last five years.

Mr. Lang: The figures for nursery schools and departments at each September for the last five years for which information is available is set out in the table.

Tourism

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he now proposes to take to promote increased tourism from countries in eastern Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The British Tourist Authority and the Scottish Tourist Board, as the statutory bodies with responsibility for attracting overseas visitors to Scotland, are fully aware of the potential of the eastern European market. Both bodies will take account of recent developments in considering their future marketing plans.

House Building

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of houses completed, by tenure, in each district council and islands council for each year from 1979 to 1989 or to the latest available date.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Tables giving the details requested on house completions from 1979 to 1988 have been placed in the House Library.

Speech-impaired Children

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many speech therapists are employed in each region and islands area to provide for the needs of speech-impaired children.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Speech therapy services are provided almost exclusively by health boards and it is unusual for staff to be employed specifically for work with children. The table shows the whole-time equivalent numbers of speech therapists (provisional figures) employed by health boards at 30 September 1989.

Rural Practices (New Technology)

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what additional funds he is making available to health boards to enable the structural changes to small practice surgeries in rural areas to accommodate new technology required under the new contract.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The White paper "Promoting Better Health" announced that, in furtherance of our policy of improving practice premises, we shall be increasing the assistance to doctors available through health boards in improvement grants and under the cost rent scheme. Detailed expenditure plans within the totals announced by my right hon. and learned Friend on 6 December have still to be determined and health boards will be informed of their individual allocations by early March 1990.

Crosshouse Hospital, Kilmarnock

Mr. Lambie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if settlement has been made of the contractual disputes arising from the construction of Crosshouse hospital, Kilmarnock.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Following negotiations between representatives of Ayrshire and Arran health board and the main contractors, the architects and the consulting mechanical and electrical engineers, relating to claims arising from delays in the completion of Crosshouse hospital, the following settlements have been agreed:—

The health board has accepted an offer of payment by Boissevain and Osmond, architects, of £470,000 together with the abandonment of the architects' claim for outstanding professional fees;

The heald board has accepted an offer of payment by Ruck, Willcox & Partners, consulting mechanical and engineers, of £250,000.

Melville, Dundas & Whitson, the main contractors, have accepted an offer of payment by the health board of £1·25 million.

In each case, the settlement of the claim is on the basis that each side should meet its own costs.

I am satisfied that this settlement represents a reasonable and acceptable conclusion to this dispute, taking into account the substantial costs that would have been required to pursue these actions to a conclusion.

Child Abuse

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how he intends to promote greater collaboration among agencies in Scotland which are concerned with protecting children from abuse.

Mr. Lang: Protecting children from abuse calls for concerted efforts from a wide range of services and professions. We have today issued Scottish Office guidance aimed at boosting efforts to work together, in the best interests of children. The guidance is part of an integrated approach by the Scottish Office to dealing with child abuse. Copies of the guidance document have been placed in the Library.

Training Schemes

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what action the Training Agency takes to prevent job substitution on employment training schemes;

(2) what safeguards there are against employment training schemes taking on trainees in firms which would otherwise have recruited a worker in the normal way;

(3) what action he intends to take to ensure that there is no unfair competition between firms using Government-funded employment trainees and schemes.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 14 December]: The employment training programme imposes a substantial training requirement upon placement providers. This makes it financially unattractive to use trainees as substitutes for qualified workers and the use of trainees should not convey competitive advantages. However, where an abuse is attempted normal monitoring procedures should detect it. Furthermore, anyone uncovering evidence of abuse should report his or her suspicions to the Training Agency. All complaints will be investigated fully.

GPs' Contracts

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sum he is giving to compensate rural general practitioners for losses incurred by the implementation of the general practitioner contract, expressed as a percentage of the current Scottish rural practice fund.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 18 December 1989]: The recommendations of the doctors and dentists review body on the pricing of the new GP contract will be considered when its report is received.

ERDF Aid, Strathclyde

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his best estimate of the total level of European regional development fund aid commitments to all eligible public bodies in Strathclyde in each of the years 1984 to 1988.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 19 December 1989]: The total level of regional fund commitment is estimated as follows:

	£ million
1984	58·6
1985	37·2
1986	48·6
1987	50·5
[1]1988	45·4

[1] Figures exclude some commitment in those parts of Strathclyde within the Highlands and Islands Development Board area.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his most up-to-date estimate of the total of European regional development fund aid commitments to all eligible public bodies in Strathclyde in 1989 and in 1990.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 19 December 1989]: The total level of regional fund commitment[1] in 1989 is estimated at £46·4 million and in 1990 is estimated at £49 million.

[1] Figures exclude commitment in those parts of Strathclyde within the Highlands and Islands Development Board area.

NHS Reform

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the proposed level of expenditure allocated to matters concerned with the implementation of the National Health Service reforms articulated in the National Health Service and Community Care Bill in 1990-91.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 19 December 1989]: My right hon. and learned Friend announced on 6 December that the provision for spending on health in Scotland in 1990-91 is planned to increase by £220 million compared with the current year. This will bring the provision to over £3 billion (£3,041 million) for the first time. In accordance with normal practice, allocations to health boards—including recognition of White Paper initiatives—will be determined and notified to boards in the early part of the next year. It will be for boards to decide, in the light of local circumstances, the spending that will be needed to implement the NHS reforms contained in the National Health Service and Community Care Bill. We fully expect that the initial costs will be outweighed in the longer term by improvements in the operation of services and the better management of resources.

Health Service (Doctors)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each year since 1959 the number of doctors employed by the National Health Service, with each year also expressed as a percentage change on the previous year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The numbers of doctors employed by the NHS in the years 1975 to 1988 inclusive are shown in the table together with the percentage change from year to year. The construction of an equivalent time series of 1959 to 1974 would incur disproportionate expenditure and lack consistency because of changes in recording practice.

Year	Number	Percentage change on previous year
1975	9,075
1976	9,267	2·1
1977	9,512	2·6
1978	9,641	1·4
1979	9,839	2·1
1980	9,923	0·9
1981	10,167	2·5
1982	10,229	0·6
1983	10,410	1·8
1984	10,499	0·9
1985	10,509	0·1
1986	10,480	−0·3
1987	10,476	0·0
1988	10,833	3·4

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Fund

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many local offices are now operating a different policy with regard to applications for grants from the social fund than the one operating at the start of the financial year.

Mr. Scott: Applications for awards from the social fund are decided locally by independent social fund officers. In making decisions, social fund officers are required to follow the law and the Secretary of State's directions and take into account guidance contained in the social fund manual. A copy of the social fund manual is available in the Library.

Guidance as to the general level of priority that may be met is given by the area social fund officer (normally the local office manager). This ensures that, as far as possible, applications of similar priority receive similar consideration throughout the year. Nevertheless, each application is considered on its individual circumstances. Levels of applications will vary during the year and thus the levels of priority being met in each local office will be adjusted from time to time.

Benefits

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the value in real terms and in relation to average male earnings of (a) retirement pensions, (b) unemployment benefit, (c) sickness benefit, (d) industrial disablement benefit, (e) industrial death benefit, (f) maternity allowance, (g) non-contributory retirement pension, (h) war disablement pension, (i) war widows' pension, (j) attendance allowance, (k) invalid care allowance, (l) severe disablement allowance, (m) mobility allowance, (n) child benefit and (o) one-parent benefit, giving in each case the single and couple rate where applicable and the higher and lower rate in the case of attendance allowance, paid in November 1979 and April 1989; and if he will give the cash figure for each benefit in each year.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Comparisons over the period in question are complicated by the change in 1983 from uprating partly based on forecasts of future inflation to upratings based on known movements in the retail prices index to the latest available date. Moreover, in November 1979 long-term benefit rates were increased by 2 per cent. more than forecast inflation to make up for the fact that the forecast underlying the 1978 uprating had proved 2 per cent. lower than the actual growth in earnings of 13·3 per cent. between November 1977 and November 1978. The table gives the figures requested in relation both to November 1978 and November 1979. It also shows the change in the average real value of benefit in the uprating years November 1978 to November 1979, and between April 1988 and April 1989.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he plans to make a statement on the future of the independent living fund.

Mr. Scott: As explained in the White Paper "Caring for People" (Cm. 849), there will clearly be an overlap between the Independent Living Fund and the intended responsibilities of local authorities which will need to be reviewed. Announcements will be made as appropriate in due course.

Students (Invalidity Benefit)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take steps to ensure that students on invalidity benefit do not have their housing benefit reduced by the student grant notional element for accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To avoid double provision by the taxpayer, the majority of full time students are expected to meet their rent to the level intended for accommodation costs within the student maintenance grant before they have recourse to housing benefit. However this rule does not apply to students on invalidity benefit whose income would fall below income support levels if the reduction was made. These students are able to claim housing benefit for the whole of their eligible rent.

Foster Parents

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether short-term foster parents are exempt from the (a) availability for work and (b) actively seeking work requirements for income support and unemployment benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: For income support purposes, foster parents and natural parents are treated similarly. To receive income support, single parents fostering children do not have to be either available for, or actively seeking, work. Where there are two parents, one of them has to be both available for and actively seeking work, unless exempted from the requirements for some other reason. To receive unemployment benefit, all claimants normally have to be both available for, and actively seeking, work.

Helios Programme

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the participation of the United Kingdom in the Helios programme.

Mr. Scott: The Government are committed to ensuring that the United Kingdom plays a full and active role in the European Community's second action programme in favour of disabled people, called HELIOS. The main purpose of the programme is to promote good practice through links between local projects in the field of disability services, covering vocational training and rehabilitation, and economic, social and educational integration. We encourage United Kingdom projects to meet regularly with each other and with their counterparts in other member states. The programme also includes the development of a project to link national data bases on disability, initially for equipment only. We have designated the Disabled Living Foundation as the first United Kingdom centre to participate in the system, called HANDYAIDS, which is ecpected to come into operation in the course of next year. We are also cooperating with the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation in the organisation of a conference early next year to disseminate information about the programme to a wide range of interested parties.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list any changes to regulations since the invalid care allowance was introduced in 1976 which may affect the entitlement to benefit of someone who has ceased to receive the allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: There have been no changes in regulations specifically directed at former invalid care allowance recipients. If the right hon. Member has a particular problem in mind, perhaps he would write to me.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to what benefits a person of working age may be entitled after ceasing to be in receipt of invalid care allowance, assuming that he or she satisfies the first contribution condition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: On ceasing to receive ICA, a person may be entitled to any benefit depending on his or her circumstances at the time of the claim. Prior receipt of ICA does not confer automatic title to any benefit, however, credits awarded during periods of ICA do count towards the satisfaction of the second condition for contributory benefits.

National Insurance (Staff)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report for the latest available year (a) the number of whole-time equivalent staff engaged on national insurance contribution work within his Department, (b) the proportion of their time spent on each class of contribution and (c) the amount of contributions, by class, recovered as a result of their investigations.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The total number of posts currently allocated by the Department of Social Security to national insurance contribution work is 7,449. However, many of those staff do not spend their time solely on this work and the exact ratio could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Similarly, no information is held on the amount of time spent on each class of contribution.

The value of contributions collected by the Department for the year ending 1988-89 is as follows:

Class 1	1,559,099,000
Class 2	323,685,000
Class 3	25,034,000
Class 4	2,536,000

Family Credit

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate how many families receiving family credit have (a) single earner and (b) two earners.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: At the end of July there were 17,000 families where there were two earners at the time the award of family credit was made and 296,000 with one earner.

National Insurance

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate (a) the cost of changing the national insurance threshold into a tax allowance in 1990-91 and (b) the savings of abolishing the national insurance ceiling in 1990-91.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Using the rates expected to apply in the 1990-91 year it is estimated that removing employees' liability for national insurance contributions on the first £46 of weekly earnings (that is earnings up to the lower earnings limit) would cost about £0·9 billion in a full year. If the upper earnings limit for employees' contributions were to be abolished, the additional income would be about £2·3 billion.

Share Fishermen

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will consider restoring the special status of share fishermen in respect of their entitlement to unemployment benefit during regular non-working periods.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Conditions of entitlement to unemployment benefit have always been the same for share fishermen as for all other claimants except insofar as share fishermen have certain additional conditions to satisfy. We have not altered this position. However, we will be monitoring the effect of the recent earnings rule changes on all claimants.

Pension Schemes

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received about the effect of his proposals concerning the investment of small self-administered pension scheme funds in the company to which they relate; and what response he has made.

Mr. Newton: In the case of pension schemes covering employees, the proposal to restrict to 5 per cent. investment by the scheme in the company to which it relates has been generally well received. It is widely agreed that it must be right to avoid the risk of "double jeopardy" to both jobs and pensions if a company should get into difficulties.

We have however received numerous strong representations that different considerations apply to small self-administered pension schemes (SSAPs), which cater mainly and often exclusively for shareholding directors, who are themselves normally the trustees, and whose investment decisions therefore can only create that double risk for their own jobs and pension prospects rather than those of other people.

We accept the force of this argument, and have therefore decided that the proposed restrictions will not apply to SSAPs in cases where all members are trustees, each member is a "20 per cent director" as defined for Inland Revenue purposes, and trustee decisions require a "nem con" vote.

Restrictions on SSAP's investments for tax purposes will, of course, continue.

Computerisation

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress is being made with his Department's computerisation programme; and what are the next steps in its implementation.

Mr. Newton: The computerisation programme, known as the operational strategy, is proceeding well. The three main systems in the plan are in place—those that administer the income support and retirement pensions, and the departmental central index, which links the various systems. Two of the four area computer centres are now in operation, at Washington managed "in house" by the Information Technology Services Directorate and at Livingston managed on contract by Electronic Data Systems. Forty-two local social security offices are now fully linked with the systems through these centres, and the number is currently increasing by two per week. This progress is beginning to be reflected in significant improvements in the speed and accuracy of the service we can provide to our customers, and I am grateful to the many staff throughout the Department who have contributed to this success.

The next step is to complete the network of area computer centres, in order that the benefits of the new systems can be steadily extended to all social security offices and thus to everyone who depends on the service they provide. As has already been announced, these will be at Norcross and at Swindon.

Work is now nearing completion to enable the centre at Norcross to begin operation in January 1990. Following consideration of a tender from Electronic Data Systems, I have decided that this centre will be managed on contract by that company. The contract will be on the same basic terms as their existing management contract at Livingston. As at Livingston civil servants in the area will be free to apply for the new jobs being generated.

The Swindon centre is planned to commence operation towards the end of 1990. The management of the centre will be subject to the outcome of a competitive tendering exercise which I intend to initiate shortly. A formal request for information will be issued.

Pensions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the gross and net cost of reducing the pensionable age for men to 60 years (a) at the present pension rates and (b) with a minimum pension, including guaranteed minimum pension from occupational schemes, for both men and women, regardless of marital status and past contributions, of 80 per cent. of average national earnings.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 6 December 1989]: I regret that information is not available in the form requested. The latest estimates, based on 1985-86 benefit rates, of the gross and net costs to public funds of reducing state pension age for men to age 60 are £4,200 million and £3,000 million respectively.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which local authorities have received and processed the most applications for transitional payments.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 14 December 1989]: Applications for housing benefit transitional payments were sent direct to the Department's transitional payments unit in Glasgow where they were processed. The 10 local authority areas which have generated the largest number of applications processed to date are as follows:

	Numbers
Glasgow	39,153
Sheffield	13,424
Liverpool	12,598
Birmingham	10,401
Manchester	10,241
Edinburgh	9,037
Newcastle-on-Tyne	8,720
Waltham Forest	8,131
South Tyneside	7,839
Newham	7,127

Research Projects

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what research projects are currently being carried out under total or partial sponsorship of his Department; whom they are being carried out by; and when they will be completed and published.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [pursuant to her answer, 15 December 1989]: I regret that the following projects were omitted:

Project, contractor and completion date

Survey of retirement and retirement plans—Social survey division, OPCS—Late 1990.

Study of maternity benefits[1]—Policy Studies Institute—Mid 1990.

[1] This study is partially sponsored by the Department.

ENERGY

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the progress of his electricity privatisation proposals.

Mr. Michael Spicer The Government remain on target to complete the privatisation of the industry within this Parliament.

Electricity Price Increases

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his most up-to-date estimate of the level of (a) domestic and (b) industrial electricity price increases from April 1990.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Prices to consumers will depend on the outcome of negotiations between generators, suppliers and customers, subject to any relevant statutory and licence requirements.

Coal Industry (Productivity)

Mr. John Marshall To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on trends in productivity in the coal industry since 1984.

Mr. Michael Spicer: British Coal's productivity has increased by more than 75 per cent. from pre-strike levels.

Nuclear Electric plc

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman-designate of the new Nuclear Electric plc; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend has met the chairman-designate of Nuclear Electric on a number of occasions to discuss aspects of the nuclear industry.

Private Mines

Dr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will direct British Coal not to seek to contract to purchase any additional production from private deep mines and opencast sites.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. However, the British Coal Corporation's statement on licensing policy and practice, placed in the House of Commons Library on 29 June (Official Report columns 509-10 refers), makes it clear that they would support the efforts of licensees to secure contracts with third parties. It also emphasises that it is for the licensee to determine whether to sell coal to third parties or to British Coal, and that the licence is issued free from any delivery requirement (para 15 and annex B of the statement). The Government welcome this freedom for licensed operators, and consider it important that it should apply equally to the larger licensed mines proposed in the Coal Industry Bill.

Dr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will review the royalty paid by private mine operators to British Coal on each tonne of coal produced.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Royalties are a matter for the British Coal Corporation, as owner and licensee of coal reserves. In its recent statement of licensing policy and practice, a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House on 29 June, British Coal has reaffirmed its intention to set royalties at levels which will permit efficiently-managed operators to develop their businesses profitably, and to continue to review standard levels of royalty from time to time in accordance with this principle. It has assured me that in setting the standard levels of royalties it will include the general health of the licensed sector in the matters taken into account. I am continuing to discuss with British Coal methods of monitoring the profitability of the licensed sector.

British Coal has also undertaken to reduce royalties for new licences in any case where accounting evidence is provided which demonstrates that profit expectations would otherwise be cut to unreasonably low levels. I do not believe that it is in the national interest that otherwise economic small coal deposits capable of competing with imports should be left unworked because of a high royalty.

National Fuel Distributors

Dr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will direct British Coal to ensure that any sale of National Fuel Distributors by British Coal will be on the open market and that all interested parties will have opportunities to submit bids.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a commercial matter for British Coal. However, I expect the Corporation to seek to maximise the proceeds from any asset disposals, consistent with the need to ensure that the purchaser does not acquire an unduly dominant position in the coal distribution sector.

Concessionary Coal

Dr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will direct British Coal to put the distribution of concessionary fuel out to open tender.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government expects the British Coal Corporation to organise, whether through its subsidiary, National Fuel Distributors Ltd, or through other channels, the distribution of concessionary fuel in as cost-effective manner as possible. Where the distribution is handled by British Coal and its subsidiaries, it is for them to decide what degree of competitive tendering is appropriate to achieve this, in the light of competition legislation.

Coal Distributive Trades

Dr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will refer the relationship between British Coal and the coal distributive trades to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Michael Spicer: References to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, or the Director General of Fair Trading.

Solid Fuel

Dr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will take steps to increase competition in the distribution of solid fuel.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Although I monitor developments in the solid fuel distribution sector, questions relating to competition are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and the European Commission.

We have, however, made it clear that further acquisitions by British Coal, or its wholly owned subsidiaries, of businesses valued at over £0·5 million, where my approval is required, are likely to gain my consent only in exceptional circumstances. British Coal have also given assurances that trading between them and British Fuels Ltd. will continue to be on an arm's length basis.

British Coal (Loyalty Agreements)

Dr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will direct British Coal to bring its loyalty agreements into line with general agreement on tariffs and trade regulations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I believe that restricting competition from coal imports by discriminatory pricing arrangements is not in the best interests of the consumer. Questions relating to the GATT are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Piper Alpha

Mr. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will place in the Library a list of all accidents to personnel on oil rigs since the Piper Alpha tragedy.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have today placed in the Library a list of fatal and serious accidents on offshore installations which were notified to my Department under the Offshore Installations (Inspectors and Casualties) Regulations 1973 during the period from 6 July 1988 to 3 December 1989. A further 774 incidents involving less serious injuries resulting in an absence from work for a continuous period of three days were also notified to my Department.

On 3 December 1989 there were 141 fixed and 71 mobile installations operating on the United Kingdom continental shelf. The latest figures for the number of persons emplpoyed offshore are those for June 1988 when the Inland Revenue estimated that the total workforce was 29,300. The serious accident rate per 1,000 employees was 2·9 in 1988 and is 2·3 for the period from 1 January to 3 December 1989.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply of 4 December, Official Report, column 30, to the hon. Member for Devon, North (Mr. Speller), what assessment has he made of the reasons for the decline in the demand for domestic energy efficiency equipment during the past year.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Building Energy Efficiency Confederation wrote on 13 November to say that there was a decline in the sales of domestic energy efficiency equipment of between 6 per cent. and 20 per cent. during the first six months of 1989.

I replied recognising the concern of members of the confederation, but explaining that they should be aware that the Government's economic policies aimed at bringing down inflation have similarly affected other market sectors and that the confederation was not, therefore, in a unique situation.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the Energy Efficiency Office's findings about the alleged unproven cost-effectiveness of energy efficiency promotional activities directed at householders.

Mr. Wakeham: Surveys and other information have shown that the EEO's television and press advertising has had a good initial impact as regards bringing energy efficiency to the attention of householders, but that in many cases they have not gone on to implement energy efficiency measures. Market research has confirmed that those moving and improving their homes are significantly more likely to implement energy efficiency measures, and hence the EEO is targeting these groups, as well as low income households, as part of its total strategy of improving energy efficiency.

Opencast Mining (Exhibition)

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to opencast coal mining to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand that under procedures agreed by the Services Committee arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall starting on 29 January for four days.

Home Insulation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many low-income homes will be insulated in the current financial year.

Mr. Wakeham: For the current financial year as a whole I would expect to see not less than 140,000 homes benefit from the services provided by community insulation projects.

Energy Audits

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will introduce legislation to require building societies to undertake energy audits for mortgage applicants.

Mr. Wakeham: No. The Government believe that a voluntary approach to energy audits is the right way forward, and has already taken an initiative with the building societies to that end.

Standing Charges

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will withdraw the legal powers available to the new electricity companies to charge standing charges to pensioners on income support and families in receipt of family credit;

(2) if he will now commission an independent review of electricity standing charges and poor consumers;

(3) if he will now seek the necessary legislative changes to abolish standing charges for the supply of domestic electricity for pensioners and claimants of family credit;

(4) what percentage of electricity sales revenue is currently derived from standing charges to domestic consumers; and what estimate has been made of any change to the proportion of sales revenue so devised in future;

(5) whether any research has been undertaken to study the financial impact of standing charges for electricity to pensioners and claimants on low incomes and benefit.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The question of standing charges has been considered by successive Governments. They have consistently taken the view that standing charges are the fairest means of recovering the costs attributable to each consumer. The social security system provides effective means of targeting assistance on those in need.

The percentage of revenue represented by standing charges in 1988 was 6·5 per cent. of total sales revenue from domestic, industrial and other users. Forward estimating of revenue is a matter for the electricity industry.

Powers to include standing charges in electricity tariffs are set out in Section 18 of the Electricity Act 1989. I have no intention of seeking to change these powers.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Secure Office Automation Project

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what system he proposes to instal by way of the secure office automation project in the diplomatic wing by way of replacement for FOLIOS.

Mr. Sainsbury: An independent review of the FOLIOS project is underway to determine the reasons for its failure. No replacement secure office automation system for the diplomatic wing will be proposed until the review report has been considered.

The diplomatic wing of the FCO is currently reviewing its strategy for the delivery of information systems.

Berlin

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the conference held between ambassadors of the four occupying powers of Berlin on 11 December 1989.

Mr. Maude: At Soviet suggestion, the three western ambassadors met the Soviet ambassador on 11 December. Discussion focussed on western proposals, originally presented to the Russians in 1987, for a package of improvements for Berlin. The Soviet ambassador made some more general remarks about developments in Europe. All parties agreed on the importance of stability.

Poland

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current United Kingdom relations with Poland.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have close and friendly relations with Poland. We were delighted to welcome Mr. Lech Walesa, chairman of Solidarity, to the United Kingdom recently. We admire the courage with which the Polish Government are tackling their economic problems and will continue to give substantial help to ease the transition to democracy and a market-based economy.

South Africa

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent communications he has had with the Government of South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We maintain regular contact with the South African authorities on a wide range of issues, both here and via Her Majesty's ambassador.

Vietnamese Boat People

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Vietnamese authorities on the circumstances in which jobs and education can be obtained without identity papers in Vietnam.

Mr. Maude: No representation has been made to the Vietnamese on this subject.

United Nations General Assembly

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what resolutions on (a) arms control and disarmament, (b) environmental improvement and protection and (c) energy security and resources have been tabled at the latest general assembly of the United Nations in New York; how the United Kingdom voted on each resolution; and if he will set out the reason for the vote in each case.

Mr. Sainsbury: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what resolutions on arms control and disarmament were tabled by the United Kingdom at the latest United Nations General Assembly in New York; and what support they received.

Mr. Waldegrave: The United Kingdom tabled two resolutions on arms control and disarmament at the First Committee of the United Nations General Assembly in 1989:

(i) On "Objective Information on Military Matters" (designed to encourage the disclosure of more information about military capabilities and budgets). This resolution was supported by 132 countries; no countries voted against; and 13 abstained.

(ii) On "Bilateral negotiations" (welcoming progress made in bilateral arms control talks in 1989 and calling for sustained progress in the year ahead); 91 countries voted for the resolution; no countries voted against; and 61 abstained.

Hong Kong

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people have been refused entry to Hong Kong from the Chinese land border annually for each of the past five years; and what was the daily average figure.

Mr. Maude: The number of people refused entry into Hong Kong from the Chinese land border for each of the past five years is as follows:

Year	Total	Daily average
1984	9,653	26·5
1985	13,882	38
1986	18,045	49·4
1987	23,969	65·7
1988	15,935	43·7
1989[1]	7,096	21·2

[1] January-November.

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people were resident in Hong Kong in (a) 1960 and (b) 1989, or the latest available date.

Mr. Maude: The estimated population of Hong Kong in mid-1960 was 3,075,300. In mid-1989 it was 5,713,700.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the rate of unemployment benefit in St. Helena, what is its purchasing power; and what are the equivalent figures for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury: The weekly rates of unemployment benefit in St. Helena are £14·60 for a married couple and £10·90 for a single person. In addition, claimants receive 75 per cent. rent rebate and a weekly allowance in respect of each dependent child; the rates are £1·55 for a child aged 10 or less, and £1·95 for a child aged 11 or over. The basic weekly income of a labourer in the public sector is £36·95.

The weekly rate of unemployment benefit in the United Kingdom for a single person is £34·70. A married person, who also claims successfully for their spouse, receives an additional £21·40 per week. The average gross weekly income of all adults in full-time employment is £239·70.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many persons above the age of (a) 60, (b) 65 and (c) 70 years he has appointed to public bodies in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Sainsbury [pursuant to the reply, 6 December 1989, c. 233]: I am unable to provide the full information requested by the hon. Member, as the figures are not held centrally and could not be assembled without disproportionate cost. I can state, however, that we are aware of 38 persons over the age of 60 having been appointed by my right hon. Friend.

WALES

Health and Personal Social Services (Expenditure)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for Wales for each year since 1974-75 (i) total National Health Service expenditure, (ii) current expenditure on the hospital and community health services, (iii) capital expenditure on the hospital and community health services, (iv) expenditure on the family practitioner services, (v) expenditure on centrally funded National Health Service services and (vi) expenditure on personal social services, giving each in (a) cash terms, (b) adjusted using the relevant pay and prices index and (c) adjusted using the gross domestic product deflator; and if he will place in the Library details of the methods used to make these adjustments.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is set out in the tables.

Separate pay and prices indices for Wales are not avaivable, and the information shown has thus been constructed by reference to indices maintained by the Department of Health from English data.

[2] The 1990-91 revenue support grant entitlements of county councils have been attributed to districts within each area in proportion to numbers of community charge payers on registers at 1 December 1989.

Natural Heritage

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales why he decided not to issue a consultation document in respect of his proposed merger of the Nature Conservancy Council and Countryside Commission in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The requirement to introduce legislation at the earliest opportunity to give effect to Ministers' announced intentions precluded the possibility of formal consultation. Nevertheless, interested parties have been encouraged to submit their views on how the changes might be implemented and these are being considered.

Grants

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide estimates showing for each financial year from 1987-88 to 1990-91 the amount of actual or planned expenditure on (a) derelict land grant, (b) regional selective assistance, (c) the Welsh Development Agency, (d) the Cardiff Bay Development Agency and (e) the urban programme.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is shown in the following table:

Teachers

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many teachers are employed by each local authority in Wales; how many teachers are in receipt of an incentive allowance for each local authority in Wales; what percentage this is of the total employed by each local authority; and how many teachers in receipt of an incentive allowance in each local authority in Wales hold allowances that are (a) incentive A, (b) incentive B, (c) incentive C, (d) incentive D and (e) incentive E.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The latest information, based on the position at March 1988 is shown in the table:

	Number of teachers[1]	Incentive Allowances A	B	C	D	E	Total (number)	Total (per cent.)

School Premises

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what action he has taken to ensure that all schools in Wales will meet the standards laid down in the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981 by September 1991; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what assessment he has made of the cost of bringing (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools up to the standards laid down in the Education (School Premises) Reglations 1981 in (i) Wales and (ii) by local education authority; whether he is making any special arrangements to meet those costs; and if he will make a statement on progress in meeting the provisional arrangements required by the regulations.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The duty of ensuring that school premises conform to the standards prescribed by the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981 rests with local education authorities. Information about the extent of their compliance with the regulations is not held centrally, but we are aware that not all schools yet meet the standards. Local authorities have been aware since 1981 of the requirements of the regulations. It is for them to meet their obligations from within existing resources.

Salmonella

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to make a statement concerning his inquiry into the Clwyd salmonella outbreak; if he will publish his inquiry; if he will meet the Clwyd health authority to discuss his findings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: As I announced in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Delyn (Mr. Raffan) on 6 November at col. 669 the Department is undertaking an internal review to establish any lessons that could be learned for the future. Any such lessons will be conveyed to the authorities concerned and, if appropriate, will be made available more widely.

The review is now under way and will be concluded as soon as is consistent with completing the task properly.

The question of a meeting with Clwyd health authority and the other statutory authorities who were involved in the handling of this outbreak can be considered when the review has been concluded.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will assess the number of households in Wales which, on the basis of his assessment of levels of community charge as outlined in his statement of 18 December, will incur (a) an increase of over 50 per cent., (b) an increase of between 25 per cent. and 50 per cent. and (c) an increase of up to 25 per cent. in the total community charge to be paid by each such household in 1990-91 as against the total rate payment of such a household in 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Walker: This information is not available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made, in each local authority in Wales, in compiling the community charge register for 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have now received estimates of the registered population as at 1 December 1989 from each community charge registration officer in Wales. A very high rate of registration has been achieved. The following table shows that estimates of adult population based on the registers are very close for all authorities to the equivalent estimates based on data provided by the registrar general.

Water (Charging)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make it his policy to place limits on charges in any new system of charging for water and allied services to replace the water rates in Wales in such a way as to take account of ability to pay;

(2) if he will make it his policy to take steps to ensure that any new system of charging for water and allied services to replace the water rates in Wales shall not involve: (a) a water poll tax or (b) compulsory metering.

Mr. Grist: Initial limits on charges are specified in the instruments of appointment of water and sewerage undertakers. Future regulation of charges will fall to the Director General of Water Services. In doing so the director general will be under a duty to ensure that the interests of customers are protected and that no undue preference or discrimination is shown by the scheme of charges which is principally a matter for Welsh Water plc to determine. Their future charging policy is outlined in their prospectus, a copy of which is in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT

Environmentally Friendly Products

Mr Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many environmentally friendly products were purchased for each year since 1979, by year, and by the following categories: (a) aerosols, (b) recycled paper, (c) organic produce, (d) recycled tin cans and (e) recycled bottles/glass; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We do not have this information.

Nature Conservancy

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the joint committee of successor bodies to the Nature Conservancy Council will have a duty to agree common standards for the selection, designation, management and monitoring of national nature reserves, sites of special scientific interest and other categories of land.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the joint committee of successor bodies to the Nature Conservancy Council will have a duty to assemble and disseminate compatible statistics for nature conservation on a Great Britain or United Kingdom basis.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff in which disciplines he envisages will need to be allocated to support the work of the joint committee of successor bodies of the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the joint committee of successor bodies to the Nature Conservancy Council will have a duty to agree common priorities and methodologies for research on nature conservation issues.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the joint committee of successor bodies to the Nature Conservancy Council will have management responsibility for ensuring the operation of agreed standards and programmes.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the joint committee of successor bodies to the Nature Conservancy Council will have a duty to agree common criteria for the provision of management agreements, land purchase grants and grants for posts and projects, including those to voluntary conservation agencies operating throughout Britain.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The main duties and responsibilities of the joint committee were set out in the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) on 23 November (Official Report, cols 17-18). Initial proposals for the detailed programme of work to be overseen by the Committee, and the resources required to carry it out, will be drawn up in consultation with the Nature Conservancy Council and other relevant bodies. The Government will also wish to consider any recommendations of the Select Committee on Science and Technology in another place, which is currently considering future arrangements for the NCC's science base.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the duty of the joint committee of successor bodies to the Nature Conservancy Council to provide advice on nature conservation matters will be based on (a) nature conservation considerations, (b) recreation, (c) access and (d) landscape considerations.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Pontypridd (Dr. Howells). The responsibilities which the successor bodies will be required to remit to the joint committee for consideration will relate to nature conservation.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the joint committee of successor bodies to the Nature Conservancy Council will have a duty to agree common procedures and timetables for the implementation of European Community and international agreements and conventions.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Implementation of European Community and international agreements and conventions is, and will remain, primarily a matter for Government.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what mechanisms the proposed joint committee of successor bodies to the Nature Conservancy Council will employ to ensure that its decisions are reflected by all the individual bodies; and whether it will have any authority over them.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Pontypridd (Dr. Howells). The individual country bodies will be bound by a statutory requirement to deal with certain matters (to be specified in legislation) through the joint committee.

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how such disagreements will be resolved and by whom, in the event of disagreement among individual bodies on the joint committee of successor bodies to the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The successor bodies will have a statutory duty to agree the advice to be tendered or the action to be taken on the matters within the remit of the joint committee. Reserve provisions will be included in the legislation to be brought before the House shortly to enable the Secretary of State to direct that matters within the remit of the joint committee should be dealt with by one or more of the country bodies. It is expected that such directions will be needed on only very rare occasions.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the joint committee of successor bodies to the Nature Conservancy Council will have sole responsibility for providing advice at Great Britain level on (a) ecological issues, (b) agricultural and forestry issues, (c) air and waterborne pollution, (d) marine and migratory species conservation, (e) international representation and (f) education and publicity.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Government draw on many sources of advice on these issues and will continue to do so, but the joint committee may wish to consider the relationship between these matters and nature conservation in a Great Britain context.

Mortgage Interest Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will bring up to date the information on average interest rates on building society mortgage advances given in his letter to the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) of 3 August 1983 in pursuance of his written reply of 29 July 1983, Official Report, column 705.

Mr. Chope: The information is as follows:

Year	Average building society mortgage interest rate (gross) per cent.
1982	13·30
1983	11·03
1984	11·84
1985	13·47
1986	12·07
1987	11·61
1988	11·05
1989[1]	13·46
1989[2]	13·43

[1] Quarter 1.
[2] Quarter 2.

Monthly figures on average building society mortgage interest rates are published in Financial Statistics, which is available in the Library.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward proposals to allow for the reduction of personal community charges on environmental grounds along the lines of the present arrangements for reduction in rateable values.

Mr. Chope: The reductions in rateable values to which my hon. Friend refers are an automatic concomitant of a system which links payment for local services to the rental value of property. Most local authority services, such as education, public transport and social services are people-related rather than property-related, and the cost of providing those services is not affected by environmental factors. There is therefore no logical reason for varying the community charge to reflect such factors.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether each occupant of a household's application for a rebate on the personal community charge will be assessed of their own personal income and savings; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have been asked to reply.

The assessment of community charge benefit will be based on the personal and financial circumstances (both income and capital) of the claimant and any partner. The personal and financial circumstances of adults in the household, other than any partner of the claimant, are immaterial to the assessment of the claimant's community charge benefit.

Direct Labour Organisations

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide statistics for 1987-88 showing (a) the total value of construction work carried out by direct labour organisations as a proportion of local authority expenditure on construction, (b) the 10 local authorities where the value of work carried out by direct labour organisations as a proportion of the authorities' construction expenditure was highest and (c) the 10 local authorities where the value of the work carried out by direct labour organisations as a proportion of the authorities' construction expenditure was lowest.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The 1987-88 statitics requested are as follows:

(a) In the 333 English authorites required to report to the Secretary of State the total reported expenditure on construction work carried out by direct labour organisations was £178 million, representing 23 per cent. of the total.

(b) The 10 local authorities where the value of the work carried out by the direct labour organisations as a proportion of the construction expenditure was the highest were: Walsall; Ellesmere Port and Neston; Durham; Barrow-in-Furness; Scunthorpe; Hackney; Waltham Forest; Chesterfield; Stafford and Colchester.

(c) The 10 local authorities where the value of the work carried out by the direct labour organisations as a proportion of the construction expenditure was the lowest were: Carrick; Tameside; Doncaster; Kingston; Thanet; Westminster; Liverpool; Nottingham; Bolsover; and Mansfield.

Rates Bills, Bolton

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households in the Bolton Metropolitan borough area are currently paying rates bills of below £350.

Mr Chope: The information requested is not available centrally.

Pollution Inspectorate

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the basis on which the decision was taken to reduce the number of G4 posts in Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution from two to one.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There has been no reduction in the number of grade 4 posts on the staff complement of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Local Government Finance

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what would be the loss of revenue if all contributions to the safety net were limited to (a) £40 and (b) £20.

Mr. Chope: Limiting the contributions to the safety net shown in the provisional figures which were placed in the Library on 6 November to £40 per adult would reduce contributions by £125 million. If contributions were limited to £20 per adult the reduction in contributions would be £316 million.

Departmental Circulars

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the circulars and consultation papers issued to (a) county councils, (b) metropolitan district councils and (c) non-metropolitan district councils since 1 January, together with dates they were despatched.

Mr. Patten: I wrote to the hon. Member on 30 November enclosing the information requested, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Gas Emissions (Domestic Properties)

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what commercially co-sponsored research into domestic property green labelling and greenhouse gas emissions from homes is being conducted by (a) the Building Research Establishment or (b) consultants to the Building Research Establishment; and what is the total current departmental investment into this programme.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 20 December 1989]: The Building Research Establishment is not currently engaged in any commercially co-sponsored research into domestic property green labelling or greenhouse gas emissions from homes, either directly or through consultants.

BRE is engaged in the following activities which are of relevance:

(1) work on the emission of greenhouse gases from buildings, as part of the research programme of the environmental protection directorate of DOE;

(2) the development of energy labels for housing, with commercial interests;

(3) the management of a project for a group of companies looking into the long-term future development of housing, which is expected to cover "green" issues;

(4) the development of "green" labels, initially for non-domestic buildings, with commercial interests.

The total current departmental investment in this general area at BRE amounts to some £400,000.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give for each year since 1978 the spending by local authorities on heating and other energy efficiency measures consistent with the 1986 figure of £900 million given in paragraph 3.40 of the National Audit Office's "National Energy Efficiency."

Mr. Chope: The figure given in paragraph 3.40 of the National Audit Office's report was based on analysis of the 1986 English house condition survey. Comparable figures for earlier years are not available.

Departmental Guidelines

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines his Department has issued which advise local authorities on when to be ready to defend their decisions on papers which have been lodged with his Department.

Mr. Moynihan: Guidelines to local planning authorities on procedures for the conduct of planning appeals are set out in Department of the Environment circulars 18/86, 11/87 and 10/88, copies of which are in the Library.

Churston Galmpton Golf Course

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date the inspector completed hearing the evidence on the public inquiry appeal regarding the planning matter concerning Churston Galmpton golf club, Torbay; what progress has been made since his answer to the hon. Member for South Hams of 4 April, Official Report, column 144; what are the outstanding causes of delay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The appeal is being dealt with by an exchange of written representations and no public inquiry was held. An inspector visited the site on 22 August 1988 and his report was submitted to my right hon. Friend on 12 September 1988. On 6 April 1989 my right hon. Friend indicated that he was minded to allow the appeal, subject to comments from the parties about amended highway proposals, submitted by the developer. The reason for delay since then has been the need to consider and exchange further representations about the effect of the development on access to neighbouring properties and about land ownership which must be resolved before the appeal can be determined. I expect the decision to be issued early in the new year.

Housing Corporation

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will give details of the Housing Corporation's approved development programme for 1990-91.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend announced on 15 November that provision for the Housing Corporation's gross capital expenditure will double over the next three years, rising from £818 million this year to £1,736 million in 1992-93, demonstrating the Government's commitment to the housing association movement as the main providers of new subsidised homes. The Housing Corporation will also receive £73 million over the next two years under our special homelessness initiative. Altogether, gross provision in 1990-91 at £1,220·5 million will be nearly 50 per cent. higher than this year's level of expenditure.

The programme that we have now approved for 1990-91 with provisional plans for the following two years should enable the Housing Corporation to approve nearly 43,000 new homes for rent and low-cost home ownership in 1992-93. Over 38,500 homes should be completed with Housing Corporation funds in 1992-93, well over twice last year's total.

These very significant increases in housing associations' output will be archieved partly through greater use of private investment to supplement public subsidy. During the next three years we expect over 13,000 more homes to be provided than would have been possible without the use of private finance. We shall set the Housing Corporation and the housing association movement a cash target for the amount of private finance to be drawn in by schemes approved by the corporation in 1990-91. This will be based on our expectation that 75 per cent. of new schemes can be approved on a mixed funded basis, combining grant with private loans. In the light of this new target, there will be no need for a national average grant rate for mixed funded schemes of the kind that the corporation operated this year. Grant rates for schemes individually will be similar to those currently in force; the corporation will announce details nearer the start of the new financial year.

The distribution of the corporation's programme is guided by the housing needs indicator (HNI), which has been reviewed this year. I have accepted the technical recommendations of the review group, whose report I am placing in the Library. I have decided, however, to phase in the distributional pattern implied by the new HNI over two years so as to ensure that all regions see an increase in funds next year and can approve more units. I have also given a degree of protection to all regions affected by the move to the revised HNI. I have decided to increase the allocations of the 57 local authority areas with urban programme status by a total of £100 million in recognition of the special needs of inner-city areas. The funds allocated to the corporation's regions will be cost-compensated so that planned unit output is not distorted by varying costs of provision in different parts of the country.

This is an exciting and challenging time for the Housing Corporation and the housing association movement. The plans that I have set out for the corporation's programme over the next three years should enable resources to be targeted on the areas that need it most and in particular to allow the corporation to help meet the needs of the homeless. I have confidence that housing associations, through the Housing Corporation, will make the maximum impact on housing needs with the massive levels of public subsidy we are now entrusting to them.

The breakdown of the approved development programme for 1990-91 and provisional plans for the following two years is as follows:

Planning Permission

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy with regard to the use of his powers under section 276 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 to revoke planning permission granted by local planning authories; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Section 276 is a default power. Among other things, it enables the Secretary of State to take action to revoke a planning permission, after following specified procedures. There is provision for compensation to be paid.

My right hon. Friend's practice has been to use this power only rarely. He has taken the view that the power should be used only if the original decision is judged to be grossly wrong, so that damage is likely to be done to the wider public interest.

Recently, however, a particular kind of case has come to the attention of my right hon. Friend in which he may be prepared to exercise his power to revoke a planning permission. This is where he considers that consistency is needed between a local planning authority's decisions in different cases, to ensure that similar circumstances give rise to similar decisions and that the provisions of the development plan, so far as it is material, and other material considerations have been fully taken into account.

My right hon. Friend wishes to remind planning authorities of the importance of behaving equitably as between applicants, and being seen to do so. Where applicants for similar permissions in similar circumstances have been treated differently, it can seem capricious and unfair. Although there is a place in the planning system for consideration of personal circumstances, my right hon. Friend thinks that these have to be very marked indeed to justify treating similar applications differently. He also wishes to remind all members of planning committees that their decisions should be governed by material planning considerations alone. They should be most careful to avoid even the appearance that they may have been influenced by immaterial considerations.

My right hon. Friend will continue to consider each case on its merits bearing in mind this policy.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy in relation to special shares in water public limited companies.

Mr. Chris Patten: The existing articles of association of the English water plcs seek for a period of five years to prevent the ownership or control by any one person of 15 per cent. or more of the voting rights. My consent as special shareholder is required before any change to this provision. The privatised water companies are embarking on a major capital investment programme to achieve a number of environmental objectives and it is important that there is a period of stability and ownership of management through the protection of the special share. It is not my intention, therefore, either to redeem my special share before 31 December 1994 or to consent to a change to the provision on ownership or control.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the level of the uniform business rate in England in 1990-91; and what will be the effect on rate bills of the uniform business rate and of the non-domestic revaluation.

Mr. Chris Patten: I intend to specify in the revenue support grant report, which will be laid before the House in the new year, a non-domestic rate of 34·8p in the pound for England for the year 1990-91. This is lower than the provisional figure which I announced in November because the results of the non-domestic revaluation indicate that, on average, rateable values will increase by eight times, slightly more than earlier forecasts. By fixing the poundage at this level we are meeting our undertaking to raise from private business and the nationalised industries in real terms broadly the same amount in rates as in 1989-90. This poundage takes account of inflation, measured by the annual rate of increase of 7·6 per cent. in the retail prices index for September 1989.

The valuation office is sending to local authorities today drafts of the new rating lists. Authorities are required to deposit these at their principal offices as soon as practicable. Some authorities may not be able to make them available for public inspection until 2 January. The lists will also be available for inspection at local valuation offices from that date. The draft lists take effect on 1 April 1990. Some of the values which they contain may change before that date in the light of later information.

I am placing in the Library an anlysis of the combined effects of the introduction of the uniform business rate and of the revaluation. In general this confirms the results of the Inland Revenue survey published in July, subject to the slight increase in the average revaluation factor which I have mentioned.

Factories and warehouses will on average see reductions in rate bills everywhere except in inner London. Shops and offices, on the other hand, will on average attract higher bills, except in the north and midlands where average rate bills for properties of this type will fall. Overall, once the transition is complete, the rate burden on businesses in the north and midlands will be reduced by about £930 million in real terms.

The analysis also shows the effects of the uniform business rate and of revaluation in Wales, where the rate will be 36·8p in 1990-91, as announced by my right hon. Friend on 18 December.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the rules under which urban development corporations carry out the process of tendering or seek contracts for the disposal of land or property or the provision of services; and how those rules differ from those applying to (a) local authorities and (b) central Government.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 12 December 1989]: Like local authorities and Government Departments urban development corporations are required to secure best price when disposing of assets, and value for money when letting contracts. They are advised that these objectives are normally best achieved by competitive tendering.

Urban development corporations are also subject to the competition provisions of the Local Government Planning and Land Act 1980 in respect of construction and maintenance work and of the Local Government Act 1988 in respect of certain defind services. Part II of the 1988 Act, concerning public supply and works contracts, also applies to urban development corporations.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, further to his reply of 11 December, he will list the precise details of the numbers of those shares not yet available when they become available; and if he will write to the hon. Member for Nottingham North.

Mr. Howard: Once precise details of the Government's residual shareholdings in the 10 water companies are available, I will write to the hon. Gentleman listing them.

Homelessness

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest available figure for homelessness; and what was the figure in 1979.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 4 December 1989]: In the 12 months to September 1989 English local authorities accepted responsibility for 122,280 households; in 1979 the figure was 57,200. However, because of a change in the reporting system between 1980 and 1982, the figure for 1979 is not strictly comparable with those for later years.

For Welsh figures I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Rent Officers

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he is expecting to announce that the 1989 pay award to rent officers in England and Wales will be fully implemented.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 14 December 1989]: Rent officer pay is set by reference to a Civil Service analogue, at present HEO. Rent officers have received the 4 per cent. increase awarded to HEOs from 1 April 1989, and negotiations are still proceeding on the application of other aspects of the 1989 HEO award.

Works of Art (Restitution)

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Government intend to sign the international convention for the restitution of works of art which have been stolen or removed from their country of origin; and if he has established whether an earlier signature to this convention would have guaranteed the return of the Icklingham finds which were illegally taken to America.

Mr. Luce: I have been asked to reply.

Signature of the UNESCO convention would not have guaranteed the return of the alleged Icklingham finds. The Government are not convinced that the convention is the most suitable instrument for dealing with such issues.

Sheltered Accommodation

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest available figures for the numbers of sheltered dwellings for the elderly; and what were the figures in 1979.

Mr. Chope: Preliminary estimates for April 1989 derived from English local authorities' housing investment programme returns (HIP1) show that the number of sheltered housing units has risen by 70 per cent. since 1979. During this same period the total stock of housing has risen by 10 per cent.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the proposed reorganisation of the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his answer, 23 November, 1989, Official Report, Vol. 162, columns 16-17]: The Government have re-examined their proposals for the constitution of the joint committee of the proposed country bodies which I announced on 23 November was to be established to deal with questions with a Great Britain or international dimension and certain scientific issues. In that statement I said that the Government had not been persuaded by the nature Conservancy Council's argument that the Committee should have an independent chairman appointed by the Government. That was the only major point on which the Government dissented from the advice submitted by the council.

Having considered further representations from the council and others we have reached the conclusion that an independent chairmanship would have advantages in maintaining the confidence of the wider scientific community about the standards to be set for the new country bodies, and ensuring that matters of national and international importance for nature conservation are viewed from the correct perspective. The Government will therefore bring forward the necessary amendments to the Environmental Protection Bill at Committee stage to alow for the chairman of the joint committee to be directly appointed by the Secretary of State.

HEALTH

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many outside accountancy firms are employed by his Department; whether such employment is subject to any guidelines; and whether he takes steps before employing an accountancy firm to discover whether that firm has been censured by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors in their inquiries under the Companies Act.

Mr. Freeman: The number of accountancy firms currently employed by the Department of Health is five. Accountancy firms are invited to tender for the provision of advisory services to Departments on the basis of their suitability to provide the relevant advice. In making such appointments, consultations are carried out as necessary and where appropriate in the light of advice given by the Treasury on consultancy appointments.

Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many contracts over £92,500 have been let by his Department in the 1988-89 financial year and the current financial year to date; and how many of these were (a) automatically renewed and (b) advertised throughout the European Community.

Mr. Freeman: The figures for 1988-89 relate to the Department of Health and Social Security. It is not possible to apportion expenditure to each Department separately.

The number of contracts awarded by the then Department of Health and Social Security and covered by the provisions of the EC Supplies Directive, for which the current threshold is £92,000, was 40 in the 1988-89 financial year. Of these, 37 were awarded following advertisement in the EC Journal and one was considered to be exempt from advertising and may have been awarded to the previous supplier.

The number of contracts awarded by the Department of Health, and covered by the provisions of the EC Supplies Directive, for which the current threshold is £92,000, was four in the current financial year to date. All of these were awarded following advertisement in the EC Journal. None was considered to be exempt from advertising.

National Physiotherapy Week

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to national physiotherapy week to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 19 to 23 March 1990.

Medicines

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the proposed increase in fees relating to the Medicinal Products for Human Use Regulations 1989 (S.I., 1989, No. 418) by the Medicines Control Agency.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: On 24 November 1989 the Medicines Control Agency, in accordance with Section 129(6) of the Medicines Act 1968, wrote to all licence holders and interested organisations to consult them about proposed amendments to the Medicines (Fees Relating to Medicinal Products for Human Use) Regulations 1989 (SI 1989 No 418).

The letter contains a statement by the joint consultative group comprising senior representatives of the Department of Health (including the Medicines Control Agency) and of the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry (ABPI) and the Pharmaceutical Association of Great Britain (PAGB). In that statement the group recognise that the deficit in the agency's fee income for 1989-90 will need to be carried forward into the calculation of fees for 1990-91. Also in 1990-91 the agency may require additional resources to improve its performance further and to eliminate the substantial backlog of applications. The group has concluded that, subject to statutory consultation, fee levels will have to be increased by 70 per cent. from 1 February. They go on to say that this may not be enough to put the agency into a sound financial position in 1990-91 to enable it to carry out its function effectively. They will, therefore, consider the matter further in the new year in the light of additional information which will become available. This will include better information on the likely volume of different types of licence applications and more precise costing information. It is hoped that this information will enable the group to consider a fee structure that will provide stable funding and will place the agency on a sound financial basis.

Subject to the results of the consultation exercise amending regulations will be laid before the House in January.

A copy of the consultation letter (MLX 178) has been placed in the Library. The letter contains examples of the fee increases and explains the reasons behind these. Comments on the fee proposals have been requested by 22 December 1989.

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if the new formularies set up under the new proposals will be established on a local and voluntary basis; and whether new medicines will be included;

(2) if there will be any disincentive on the use of new medicines by general practitioners and hospitals under the reorganisation proposals.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The aim of indicative prescribing budgets which will apply to general medical practitioners and not to hospitals, is to encourage more cost-effective prescribing to the advantage of patients individually and the NHS overall. General practioners will remain free to prescribe the medicines which are clinically necessary for their patients including of course new medicines.

The development of formularies at local level represents a further initiative to improve the quality of prescribing. It will be for each formulary's authors to decide which drugs to include. There should be no disincentive to the adoption of new medicines which have therapeutic advantages over existing drugs. It will be for individuals GPs to decide whether they wish to adopt a formulary. The fact that a new drug does not appear on a particular practice's formulary would not prevent a GP from prescribing it, since the use of formularies is voluntary.

Dental Services

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) complete and (b) partial sets of dentures were supplied by the National Health Service (i) in 1988 and (ii) in 1989; how many (i) fillings, (ii) teeth capped and (iii) extractions were completed in (x) 1988 and (y) 1989; and if he will make a statement concerning the future of dentistry in the National Health Service.

Mr. Freeman: The National Health Service has made a considerable contribution to the marked improvement over recent years in the dental health of both adults and children. The Government are confident that this contribution will continue, strengthened by the proposals for a new contract for general dental practitioners.

The detailed information requested on treatment is set out in the table for the general dental service and for the community dental service. No comparable figures are available for dental treatment provided within the hospital service.

Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale DHA

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have had eye tests since April in Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale district health authority area; and what was the figure for the comparable period in 1988.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Statistics relating to Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale district health authority are collected by Lancashire family practitioner committee and are not separately available. Information on the number of general ophthalmic services sight tests carried out since April 1989 is not yet available centrally.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average time for patients waiting to receive radiotherapy from the time of results of breast screen tests and treatment in the Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale district health authority area.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Breast screening is performed on "well women" aged 50 and over to allow early detection of cancer. Fewer than 10 per cent. of women screened are expected to be recalled either to have a repeat mammogram performed for technical reasons or to have a screen-detected abnormality further investigated. Only 1·5 per cent. of women screened should require further referral for biopsy and of these fewer than 1 in 3 are expected to have breast cancer. The decision on whether or not to use radiotherapy in the treatment of these women and, if so, at what stage in their treatment is a matter for clinical judgement. Information on the waiting time for radiotherapy is not collected centrally.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average waiting time from testing and screening of women for (a) cervical cancer and (b) breast cancer until the results are notified in the Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale district health authority area.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: As I explained in my reply to the hon. Member for Easington (Mr. Cummings) on 12 December at columns 619-20, information on the processing of cervical screening tests is not available in the form requested. Our guidance to health authorities states that laboratories should aim to send results to the doctor who submitted a smear within one month of receiving it. Laboratory processing times are monitored by the Department on a quarterly basis. The information collected relates only to those district health authorities (DHAs) which are failing to meet this one month target time. As at September 1989 (the latest data available) over 75 per cent. of DHAs were meeting this target. No backlogs were reported in respect of the laboratories in the Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale DHA.

Information on the average time taken to notify women of the result of their screening test under the breast screening programme is not collected centrally.

Mammogram Screening, North-West

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which health authorities in the North West regional health authority area provide a full scale mass mammogram screening service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The national breast screening programme for women aged 50 years and over is being set up over the three years to 1990. As at 13 November 1989 North Western RHA had three breast screening programmes operational: Manchester, Bolton and Wigan, which provide a screening service to the districts of North Manchester, Central Manchester and South Manchester; and Bolton and Wigan. Plans to extend these programmes to cover the districts of Stockport, Tameside and Glossop, Oldham, Salford and Trafford (Manchester); Bury and Rochdale (Bolton); and West Lancashire, Chorley and South Ribble (Wigan) are well advanced. Mobile units will be used to deliver the screening service in some areas. The RHA plans to establish two further programmes to cover the Lancashire districts of Blackburn, Hyndburn and Ribble Valley; Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale; Preston; Blackpool, Wyre and Fylde; and Lancaster.

Schizophrenia

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people suffering from schizophrenia have been convicted by the courts and sentenced to prison for offences committed when released from mental institutions (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in the Greater Manchester area, during each of the last five years.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not centrally collected.

Airports (Public Health)

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what examination he has undertaken of the proposals to upgrade the port health control unit at Heathrow airport into a health information centre for travellers.

Mr. Freeman: The port health control units at Heathrow airport are sited to deal with incoming passengers and are not accessible to those taking outgoing flights. Proposals for a health information centre for travellers at Heathrow will however, be discussed early in the new year at a meeting between officials from the Department and the London borough of Hillingdon which is responsible for the provision of port health at the airport.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what tropical insects have been found on incoming aircraft at or near British international airports; and if he will make a statement about the health risks to the public.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not collected centrally.

Local authorities in whose areas airports are situated are responsible for enforcing the Public Health (Aircraft) Regulations. Under these the environmental health department of the local authority concerned has the power to check that disinsection has been carried out and, if not, to ensure that it is done. There has been only one instance in the United Kingdom in the last 20 years in which someone living close to an airport has been bitten by a malarious mosquito. The temperate climate of the United Kingdom makes it most unlikely that tropical insects released from incoming aircraft will survive for more than a few hours.

Service Increment for Teaching

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the sums expended in each National Health Service region and in total on the service increment for teaching in each year since 1980; and if he will express those figures in current and standard April 1989 prices.

Mr. Freeman: Allocations to regional health authorities for the service increment for teaching between 1980-81 to 1990-91, are shown in the tables, at current cash levels and at 1989-90 cash levels using GDP deflator.

Disabled People

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to promote and encourage independent case management schemes for disabled people.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to paragraphs 3.3.2 to 3.3.6 of our recent White Paper "Caring for People" (Cm. 849) which sets out our views on the value of case management in targetting resources and planning services to meet specific needs of individual clients.

Embryo Research and Abortion

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received for each of the past 10 years concerning (a) embryo research and (b) abortion; of each of these categories how many representations where (i) for and (ii) against; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has received a very large volume of correspondence representing a wide range of views on these subjects during this period. I regret that the information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Porton Down

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the consultants' reports from PA and Shearman Lehman and Hutton on the future for the centre for applied biology and research at Porton Down; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: It is not our normal practice to publish reports by consultants. I also refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 12 December at column 632.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what agreement was made in 1985 between the Secretary of State and Porton International regarding the construction by the latter of a fermentation plant at the centre for applied microbiology and research at Porton Down; and when he expects it to be built.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by what date the Government's contract with Porton International stipulates the fermentation unit at the centre for applied microbiology and research should be built.

Mr. Freeman: The construction by the Porton International Group of a fermentation plant at the centre for applied microbiology and research was one of the provisions of an agreement between the company and the Public Health Laboratory Service Board in 1985. Construction of the plant will be conditional upon the completion of a lease the terms of which are still under discussion.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of the centre for applied microbiology and research; and if he will list the companies he is considering as possible purchasers.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 12 December at column 632.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what payments have been made to the Government by Porton International under its contract to commercialise inventions from the centre for applied microbiology and research.

Mr. Freeman: There is no contract between the Government and Porton International Group in respect of the centre for applied microbiology and research; the contents of the agreements between the group and the Public Health Laboratory Service Board, and any associated transactions, are commercially confidential.

Long-Stay Mental Hospitals

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give by region for each of the last five years the amount of money paid to regions for resettlement of discharged patients from long-say mental hospitals.

Mr. Freeman: These sums are not identified separately by the Department in the resource allocation process. Regional health authorities make provision for the resettlement of patients discharged from long stay mental hospitals from within their main allocations, together with any resources which are made available from the planned rundown and closure of these hospitals.

Clinical Grading

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has with regard to clinical grading on the cost of subsequent appeals to district health authorities in the north-west; and what money has been provided to health authorities towards this cost.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The extra funds which the Government made available in 1988 to meet the costs of the nurses' and midwives' 1988 pay award were intended to cover the full costs of the clinical regrading exercise. Information on appeals to district health authorities is not collected centrally.

Professional Association of Nursery Nurses

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will now recognise the Professional Association of Nursery Nurses.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: NHS management is free to extend local recognition to organisations such as the Professional Associaton of Nursery Nurses when they have a significant level of membership locally. Membership of the staff side of the Nursing and Midwifery Staffs Negotiating Council is for the staff side to determine.

West Lambeth Health Authority

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will establish a full independent inquiry into allegations of financial mismanagement in West Lambeth health authority.

Mr. Freeman: No. The South East Thames regional health authority is already taking appropriate action with the district health authority, and Ministers have asked the chief executive to keep Ministers informed of the outcome.

Helios Programme

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy towards the increase proposed by the European Parliament in Budget line 6450, the Helios programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that several proposals to increase the budget for the Helios programme relating to disabled people, were put forward in the European Parliament but that none of them was adopted by the Budgets Committee.

Erythropoietin

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department has now completed its assessment of the likely need for erythropoietin and its expenditure implications, on the basis of information supplied by health authorities; if he has now determined the best way forward as referred to in the Official Report, column 316-17, of 23 October; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Erythropoietin has still not received a product licence. Information from health authorities has revealed significant variations in assumptions about the usage of the product after licensing. Discussions are taking place with the medical profession on the clinical indications for the prescription of the product.

Cochlear Implants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects his review of future national funding for a cochlear implant programme to be completed; when he will make an announcement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We hope to complete the review shortly.

Unit General Managers

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many National Health Service unit general managers are (a) men and (b) women.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Nurse Prescribing

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends publishing the report of the advisory group on nurse prescribing; and when he intends to implement it.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: As we have made clear on many occasions, we support the idea of prescribing by certain community nursing staff. Various issues need to be sorted out before a scheme can be introduced. The advisory group on nurse prescribing was set up last year to look at these issues, and the group has now submitted its report. We welcome the report, which is being published today and are grateful to the advisory group for its excellent work.

The group's major recommendation is that nurses with a district nurse or health visitor qualification should be allowed to prescribe items necessary for the care of those conditions for which they take independent clinical responsibility.

The report will be sent to interested bodies for their comments. In the meantime, officials are carrying forward work on some of the outstanding issues. A copy of the report will be placed in the Library.

First European Conference on Environment and Health

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the first European conference on environment and health.

Mr. Freeman: I attended the first European Conference on Environment and Health, held in Frankfurt on 7-8 December 1989, on behalf of Her Majesty's Government. The conference, which was organised by the European Region of the World Health Organisation and attended by Ministers and representatives of 29 of the 32 states in the region, endorsed a charter on environment and health. In my address to the conference I drew attention to the United Kingdom's positive record both in relation to global environmental issues and to the protection of its citizens against environmental health risks, and to its commitment to provide a healthy environment for its population. I made it clear that the United Kingdom accepts the charter as a statement of general principles on environmental health protection but without prejudice to the development of international law in this area. I have placed copies of the charter and of my address in the Library.

NHS Reform

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether, under his proposals for National Health Service hospitals, he anticipates that general practitioners will be able to obtain without charge telephone advice from such hospitals outside their own catchment area concerning the treatment of patients not being considered for hospital admission.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 18 December 1989]: Yes. We have no reason to believe that the present informal arrangements between individual GPs and hospital doctors will not continue.

Benzodiazepines

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost to the National Health Service of the prescriptions for benzodiazepines issued by community pharmacists during 1988.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 19 December 1989]: The total basic price (net ingredient cost) of the prescriptions for benzodiazepines dispensed by community pharamacists in Great Britain during 1988 was £23·6 million.

ARGICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Aggregate Dredging

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will carry out a full survey, to be paid for by the aggregate dredging industry, of inshore fishing resources in any area scheduled for possible aggregate dredging, before the issuing of licences is considered.

Mr. Curry: The revised procedures for consideration of applications to dredge marine aggregate make provision for an environmental assessment where effects on the environment are likely to be significant. In deciding whether to require such an assessment, the Crown estate and the Department of the Environment must consider certain criteria including whether a commercial fishery, nursery area or spawning ground is involved. My Department will also make its own assessment of the potential effects, if any, of any dredging application on fishing and fisheries.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will undertake to consult the inshore fishing industry before he discusses the granting of licences for aggregate dredging with, and by, the Crown Commissioners.

Mr. Curry: Under new arrangements recently agreed between the Crown Estate Commission and Government Departments, informal consultation between the Crown Estate Commission and the fishing industry is the first step in consideration of application for licences to extract aggregate from the seabed. Subsequently, formal consultation is held with all interested parties, including the fishing industry. This is a continuation of arrangements which have existed for many years.

Fish Producers

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives of the fish producers' organisations; and what items were discussed.

Mr. Curry: I have visited a number of fishing ports recently and on each occasion met representatives of the local fish producers organisations. I met representatives of the Fleetwood FPO on 21 September 1989, the Grimsby FPO on 5 October, the Yorkshire and Anglia FPO on 2 November, the Fish Producers Organisation (Hull) on 17 November and the Cornish FPO and the South Western FPO on 22-23 November.

A wide range of fisheries issues were discussed including fleet rationalisation, vessel licensing and quota management, and the forthcoming Community measures on fish hygiene.

Beer and Bakery Products (Safety)

Mr. Favell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what initiatives he has taken in the last three months to improve the quality of beer and bakery products.

Mr. Maclean: I announced on 8 November (Offical Report,) column 676 my acceptance of the Food Advisory Committee's recommendation that approval for potassium bromate as a flour improver should be withdrawn. On the same day, draft regulations which would prohibit this use from 1 April 1990 were circulated for public comment. The brewing industry has also been asked as a matter of priority to carry out the studies requested by the Committee in order to confirm the absence of residues of bromate in malt and beer and I understand the results of this work will be available shortly.

Milk Production

Mr. French: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to pay compensation to farmers whose milk production was made subject to restriction orders but was subsequently found to have been safe.

Mr. Curry: No.

Food Safety Directorate

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food pursuant to his answer of 4 December, Official Report, column 108 to the hon. Member for Billericay if he will list the names of the organisations and individuals whose views he took into account when deciding to establish the food safety directorate.

Mr. Maclean: The views expressed to me to which I referred in my reply of 4 December were put to me on an informal basis and it would not therefore be appropriate to list the individuals and organisations concerned. In coming to my conclusions about the establishment of the Food Safety Directorate I did, however, take particular note of the Report dated June 1989 of the National Consumer Council entitled "The Future of Food Regulations—a discussion document."

Antibiotics

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those antibiotics approved by his Department for prophylactic use, indicating the appropriate animal specimen in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The following antibiotic substances are approved for prophylactic use in acordance with product licences issued under the Medicines Act:

Name of substance and animal species

Amoxycillin
Cats, cattle, dogs, pigs, sheep

Ampicillin
Cats, cattle, dogs, horses, pigs, poultry, sheep

Apramycin
Pigs

Aureomycin
Cattle, horses, pigs, poultry

Cloxacillin
Cattle, sheep

Framycetin
Cattle, pigs, poultry

Fumagillin
Honey bees

Lincomycin
Pigs, poultry

Maduramicin
Chickens

Monensin
Chickens, turkeys

Neomycin
Cattle, chickens, pigs, turkeys

Novobiocin
Cattle

Penicillin
Cats, cattle, dogs, goats, horses, pigs, poultry, sheep

Salinomycin
Cattle, chickens

Spectinomycin
Cattle, chickens, pigs, sheep, turkeys

Streptomycin
Cattle, pigs, poultry

Tiamulin
Pigs

Tylosin
Chickens, pigs, turkeys

Organic Produce

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will be conducting an investigation into the current price differences between organically and non-organically grown produce; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I have no plans for such a survey. Prices are set by market forces. I have been encouraging British farmers to respond to the strong demand for organic produce.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, any recent guidance concerning the release of agricultural land for afforestation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I recognise the important role that forestry can play as an alternative use of agricultural land and this is reflected in the woodland grant scheme and in the farm woodland scheme which we introduced last year. I have not, however, issued any recent guidance on the subject.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of confirmed cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy for each county of England and Wales for the four-week period ending 16 December.

Mr. Maclean: The information is as follows:

County	Number
Bedfordshire	2
Cambridge	2
Essex	10
Hertfordshire	2

Hexham

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will visit the Hexham constituency.

Mr. Gummer: I hope to visit Newcastle university early next summer and to make a tour of the surrounding area, which may include a visit to my hon. Friend's constituency.

Food Colouring

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what policies he is pursuing to control the use of colouring materials in food.

Mr. Maclean: I refer my hon. Friend to my Ministry's press release number 493/89 of 29 November 1989, a copy of which I have sent to him direct.

Eggs

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether imported eggs are subject to the same standards as those now applied to domestically produced eggs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: All eggs marketed in the United Kingdom must meet the standards prescribed in Council Regulation (EEC) 2772/75 and Commission Regulation (EEC) 95/69 (both amended).

As regards monitoring for salmonella I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) on 11 December (Official Report, column 522.)

Brogdale Experimental Horticulture Station

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement concerning the future ownership and access to breeding material and alternative varieties of fruit at the Brogdale experimental horticulture station.

Mr. Gummer: As my noble Friend announced on 14 December, the national fruit collection is to be moved from Brogdale experimental horticulture station to Wye college. The Government will continue to provide financial support for the collection, so the collection will remain in public ownership. Detailed arrangements have yet to be finalised, but we intend that the present level of access to the collection will be maintained. This will include the provision of breeding material to, and access for, bona fide plant breeders. In addition, we expect the collection's proximity to Wye college will result in improved access for scientific and educational purposes.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many different plant species are currently held at the Brogdale experimental horticulture station; who has access to this material; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Some 16 species of fruit are featured at Brogdale experimental horticultural station. In total they comprise 3,800 varieties in the heritage collections, 750-800 varieties in new fruit variety trials and 75 in plant variety rights trials. Access to the material in the collections is available to the public for a small handling charge.

New variety trial information is available to growers via charged—ADAS advice.

Plant variety rights trials are confidential to the Plant Variety Rights Office and the plant breeders entering them.

Plant material from breeders at home and abroad is protected by agreements which prevent wider distribution without reference to owners.

Microwaves

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the findings of the study on amino acid isomerisation and microwave exposure by G. Lubec Cle. Wolf and B. Barbosch of the university of Vienna, as published in a letter in the Lancet on 9 December, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) on 13 December at column 698.

Fish Diseases

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he proposes to take to prevent the introduction of the fish disease, infectious salmon anaemia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Infectious salmon anaemia (or infectious laxanaemia) is a viral disease of salmon which causes high mortalities in farmed fish and for which there is no known effective treatment. It may be spread by the movement of live fish and can be carried in the viscera of salmon carcasses. It has been found only in Norway where a number of farms are now infected.

We already prohibit imports into Great Britain of all live fish of the salmon family. The importation of dead, ungutted fish is also generally prohibited save, under an exemption licence, from the Irish Republic, Northern Ireland, the Isle of Man and Norway.

As a further safeguard, and in view of the serious nature of infectious salmon anaemia and its establishment in Norway, we have decided to modify the exemption licence so that ungutted salmon and trout may not be imported from Norway. This prohibition will take effect on 25 December and will be until further notice.

As an additional precautionary measure, we have decided that infectious salmon anaemia will be made a notifiable disease throughout Great Britain in accordance with the terms of the Diseases of Fish Act 1937.

Fisheries Council

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Brussels Fisheries Council held on 18 and 19 December.

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement that I made earlier today.

Cook-chill Foods

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the reheating of cook-chill foods from retail outlets is required for safety reasons prior to consumption; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 18 December 1989]: In any food, the possibility cannot be ruled out that microbiological contamination may occur at some stage before the consumer eats it. With food that is to be heated, therefore, as a matter of prudence consumers should ensure that it is heated until piping hot right through.

Animals and Birds (Transport)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to bring the live export of domestic animals by sea under the regulations governing farm animals.

Mr. Maclean: The Transit of Animals (General) Order 1973, as amended, will continue to apply to such animals until new EC measures are agreed on the protection of all animals during transport.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take urgent steps to improve the conditions under which live animals and birds are transported.

Mr. Maclean: Extensive national legislation is already in place to protect animals and birds in transit. The Commission has submitted proposals for Community measures and we will be seeking to ensure that these lay down high standards of welfare and that the measures are effectively enforced.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library a copy of the United Kingdom rules which currently provide minimum values designed to prevent the export of horses for slaughter, indicating which rules, if any, would continue under the draft European Community regulation on protection of animals during transportation.

Mr. Maclean: Sections 40 and 41 of the Animal Health Act 1981 provide for minimum values for exports of ponies and certain types of horses. These arrangements cannot be maintained if the proposed EC regulation is adopted as drafted.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what figures are easily available regarding the importation both of pet birds and captive birds for 1988; and how many birds in each category (a) were dead on arrival and (b) died in quarantine.

Mr. Maclean [pursuant to his reply 18 December 1989, c. 31]: I have placed in the Library of the House today copies of the results of a survey by my Department into mortalities of imported birds during 1988. The figures cover deaths on arrival at quarantine premises and during the statutory quarantine period. Broadly, the study shows that of 185,000 birds, 5,000 were dead on arrival and a further 21,000 died during post-import quarantine. The average mortality was 13·7 per cent. These losses are in addition to unquantified deaths during capture in the country of origin and subsequent handling and transport.

This study, the first of its kind in Europe, provides a basis for considering what further measures need to be taken. I share the widespread concern about the high level of mortality in this trade.

Our existing arrangements relating to the import of captive birds have been strikingly successful in dealing with the disease risks which such imports would otherwise constitute, but in the light of the results of the survey I will be taking further steps to ensure that our requirements are being fulfilled. My officials will be visiting major exporting countries to determine how effectively they fulfil our certification requirements and impress upon them the importance of following IATA standards for shipment to the United Kingdom. These visits will enable us to decide whether it is necessary to impose additional conditions and whether there are any countries from which imports should no longer be accepted on health grounds. They are an essential prerequisite because action must be seen to be securely founded on proven risk if it is to be compatible with our international obligations regulations.

I will also review the conditions that are imposed after birds reach the United Kingdom, including stocking rates in quarantine premises (which my officials are already examining) and the possibility of requiring post-import prophylactic treatment for certain important diseases. Officials will be meeting representatives of the bird trade to discuss the implications of the results of the survey and the possibility of a code of practice which could for example tackle the question of restricting imports to less vulnerable species. I will be contacting the airlines to emphasise how much importance I attach to compliance with satisfactory practice in transporting birds and will be considering whether any further welfare safeguards are needed.

Measures to deal with the high mortality found among imported birds will not, however, be effective on a national level. I therefore propose to raise this issue in Community discussion at an early opportunity and intend that the United Kingdom should ensure that the Community fully recognises the seriousness of this welfare issue.

ENERGY

Power Stations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether West Burton, Rugeley, Staythorpe and Aberthow power stations are to be transferred from National Power to PowerGen.

Mr. Wakeham: The Government do not intend to reopen the existing non-nuclear split of assets between National Power and PowerGen.

Arts and Design

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what expenditure was made by his Department on (a) the arts and (b) design in the last financial year.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department has made no expenditure on the arts during the last financial year. However, my Department has commissioned original design and artwork for publications, exhibitions and advertisements. The amount spent on this work cannot be separately identified.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Capital Allocations

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he provide estimates showing for each financial year from 1978-79 to 1989-90 the capital spending allocations for (a) local education authorities and (b) voluntary aided and special schools.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Total capital allocations for LEAs, which may be topped up from capital receipts and other sources, from 1981-82 to 1989-90 were as follows, together with figures for actual gross expenditure financed by allocations, capital receipts, and other sources.

	£ million Allocations	£ million Gross expenditure
1981-82	355	406·1
1982-83	338	456·1
1983-84	295	469·2
1984-85	300	501·2
1985-86	315	530·2
1986-87	297	574·9
1987-88	306	592·8
1988-89	387	702·0
1989-90	352	n/a

Details of initial allocations to individual LEAs for these years were provided in the reply given to the hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw) by my right hon. Friend on 7 November 1989, at columns 588-636, and gave the information requested in respect of local education authorities from 1981-82 to 1989-90. Comparable information is not available prior to 1981-82, as local education authorities did not receive block allocations, but were notified annually in the context of a rolling programme of the limit of the value of building starts in the following year.

Payments of grants to voluntary aided and special agreement schools for capital expenditure were as follows:

	£ million
1978-79	16·4
1979-80	20·3
1980-81	22·1
1981-82	24·0
1982-83	26·1
1983-84	22·4
1984-85	29·1
1985-86	36·5
1986-87	31·8
1987-88	37·2
1988-89	50·4
1989-90	65·3

Notes:

1. Grant represents 85 per cent. of gross expenditure, 15 per cent. of which is met by governing bodies.
2. Capital grant figures for 1978-79 to 1981-82 are not separately identified from a single building grant figure which included repairs and maintenance. The capital figures shown for this period are based on an apportionment of the building grant figure using the average ratio between capital and repairs during 1982-83 and 1985-86.

Children (HIV)

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidelines have been issued to local education authorities about the admission to schools of children who are HIV positive.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Bulk copies of the booklet "Children at School and Problems Related to AIDS" were issued to all chief education officers in England and Wales in June 1986, sufficient in number for copies to be sent to all maintained schools. The booklet advises that the fact of HIV infection should not be a factor taken into account by LEAs, governing bodies or headteachers in discharging their duties concerning school admissions, transfer and attendance, or exclusion from school. The booklet also provides guidance on safety measures to be taken by schools to avoid any risk of transmission of HIV infection. There are no known cases in the United Kingdom of transmission of HIV infection in the school setting.

Arts and Design

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what expenditure was made by his Department on (a) the arts and (b) design in the last financial year.

Mrs. Rumbold: In 1988-89 the Department made direct grants totalling some £15·7 million to individual bodies primarily concerned with the arts and design education. In addition, central grants to universities and other directly funded institutions of higher education were used to cover expenditure on arts and design education. However, information on the amounts involved is not held centrally.

Religious Education

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science to what extent local education authorities in Tyne and Wear and Northumberland have complied with the requirement to establish statutory advisory councils on religious education.

Mrs. Rumbold: I understand that all local education authorities in Tyne and Wear and Northumberland have established standing advisory councils on religious education.

Research Equipment (Survey)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will be publishing the ABRC survey of academic research equipment.

Mr. Jackson: I understand that the ABRC will be publishing the report of this survey very shortly.

Teacher Shortages

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secreatry of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the likely level of teacher shortages in January 1990.

Mr. MacGregor: The Department carries out a survey of teacher vacancies in January each year. I will report the results in the usual way.

Teacher Vacancies

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what estimate he makes of the number of teacher vacancies in schools at 31 October or the latest available date.

Mr MacGregor: The most recent comprehensive survey of teacher vacancies was conducted by my Department in January 1989. Numbers of vacancies for full-time permanent teachers in maintained schools in England are given in the table.

Greenhouse Effect

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all projects funded by (a) the European Community and (b) Her Majesty's Government regarding global climate changes and all the environmental factors associated with the greenhouse effect.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 13 December 1989]: The provision of information in respect of projects funded by both the European Community and Her Majesty's Government is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Details of work relevant to global climate change undertaken by the research councils are as follows:

Natural Environment Research Council:

- Application of weather radar to the alleviation of climatic hazards.
- Development of deep ocean pH instrument.
- Contribution to the world ocean circulation experiment.
- Fine resolution Antarctic modelling.
- Biogeochemical ocean flux study.
- Automatic submersible development programme.
- North sea project.
- Marine laboratories programme.
- Atmospheric sciences programme.
- United Kingdom universities global atmospheric modelling programme.
- Palaeoclimatology.
- BGS data collection for climatology.
- Pattern and change in Antarctic physical environment.
- Geological evolution of west Antarctica.
- Dynamics of the Antarctica terrestrial and freshwater ecosystem.
- Structure and dynamics of the South ocean ecosystem.
- Terrestrial and freshwater science programmes and support of research in universities and higher education institutions.

Agricultural and Food Research Council:

- The absorbtion or release of carbon dioxide by plants in photosynthesis and respiration and the effects of carbon dioxide on growth, production and development.
- The fate of nitrogen in plants and soil and the release of gases such as nitrous oxide to the atmosphere.
- Predictive mathematical modelling of the response of plants and plant communities to the interacting effects of carbon dioxide, light, photoperiod, temperature, desiccation, water logging, pH and nutrition.
- Effects of temperature of growth and development and the tolerance to extremes.
- Plant water relations and adaption to water shortage.
- The effects of changing environmental factors on pests and diseases.
- A significant part of the AFRC programme, especially in the plants and environment research area, bears on environmental aspects.

Science and Engineering Research Council:

- The stratospheric and mesospheric sounder (SAMS) instrument for the NASA Nimbus 7 satellite.
- The improved stratospheric and mesospheric sounder (ISAMS) and the microwave limb sounder (MLS) instruments for the NASA upper atmosphere research satellite.
- The along track radiometer (ATSR) instrument for the ESA earth resources satellite (ERS-1).
- The geophysical data facility at the Rutherford Appleton laboratory.
- A mesosphere-stratosphere-troposphere (MST) radar facility is being constructed by University College of Wales, Aberystwyth, in collaboration with the Rutherford Appleton Laboratory.
- In addition, SERC supports some research on chemical reactions relevant to the atmosphere, on improved combustion processes, on renewable energy sources, on the effects of environmental changes on civil engineering structures, projects on lower atmosphere and climate research and provides supporting computer facilities.

In addition to the specific projects listed, other work of the councils has a relevance to factors associated with the greenhouse effect.

Student Maintenance Award

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what was the average level of net student maintenance award and parental contribution for each year since 1979, at 1990-91 prices.

(2) if he will give figures for the levels of student maintenance award, loan and parental contribution for students with average levels of maintenance award and parental contribution, at 1990-91 prices, from 1989-90 to 2007-8.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 18 December 1989]: The table shows average grant (including average supplementary allowances), contribution (including any contribution assessed against a spouse's or the student's own income), and, for the relevant years, loan, in constant 1990 prices. The figures take into account the recently announced main rates of student grant for 1990-91, and assume an inflation rate of 3 per cent. per annum from that year onwards.

Academic year	Average main tenance payment[1,2]	Average contribu-tions[1,2]	Average loan	Total average resources

Notes: [1] Figures for 1987-88 and previous years are outturn recorded by local authorities; for 1988-89 estimated; and for 1990-91 and later years compatible with the latest government spending plans.

[2] Assuming a cash freeze on maintenance grant rates and average contributions from 1990; and average total resources constant in real terms from 1990, at an annual inflation rate of 3 per cent.

[3] If supplementary allowances are excluded the sum of the remaining maintenance element and contribution equals the average loan by 2008-09.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Estate of Mr. Freddie Andrews

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made to date by the Royal Ulster Constabulary in their investigations into the handling of the estate of Mr. Freddie Andrews (1976 No. 516); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The Chief Constable has informed me that the RUC fraud section has carried out a thorough investigation of this complex matter. As a result one person was prosecuted and convicted for theft and deception. Any further information which may come to light will be carefully examined.

Food Safety

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received concerning difficulties experienced by public health officers in enforcing existing regulations in relation to the display and sale of cooked and uncooked meats in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The Department of Health and Social Services has from time to time received representations from organisations representing enforcement interests about difficulties in enforcing these regulations. Similar representations have been received on the Government's recently published proposals for amending the existing law on food hygiene matters generally.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he proposes to strengthen the legislation governing the recommendations relating to hygiene regulations applying to the display and sale of cooked and uncooked meats in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: As part of a United Kingdom exercise, the Department of Health and Social Services recently completed consultations with interested parties on proposals for new legislation to tighten food hygiene law generally. Comments are now being considered and the Government intend that new regulations should be made as soon as practicable.

RUC

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the cost to date of the Stevens inquiry into the Royal Ulster Constabulary and security; and when the inquiry will be in a position to make its findings available.

Mr. Cope: Precise costs for the investigations now being conducted by the deputy chief constable of Cambridgeshire, Mr. John Stevens, and his inquiry team are not yet available. However, it is estimated that they will be in the region of £100,000 to £125,000 per month, for the duration of the inquiry team's secondment to Northern Ireland.

I understand that Mr. Stevens hopes to be able to report to the Chief Constable early in the new year.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the expenditure of operating the Anglo-Irish Agreement, the running of the conference and the operation of the secretariat in Maryfield, Belfast, in 1989; and what was the comparable expenditure for previous years.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 18 December 1989]: Details of expenditure are available only on a financial year basis. Between 1 April 1989 and 31 October 1989 identified expenditure by the British Government in holding meetings of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference and operating the secretariat amounted to £529,000. Comparable expenditure in previous years is as follows: Expenditure by the Irish Government on conferences and the secretariat is a matter for them.

	£ million
1985-86	[1]0·53
1986-87	[1]1·09
1987-88	[1]0·96
1988-89	0·93

[1] Includes estimated expenditure on additional policing.

Harbour

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by category the number of (a) yachts, (b) fishing boats, (c) pleasure boats and (d) other sea-going vessels registered at Portrush, Ballycastle, Bangor, Ardglass, Donaghadee and Portstewart harbours.

Mr. Major [holding answer 18 December 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

I regret that this information is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

TRANSPORT

London Assessment Studies

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the estimate of the number of homes likely to be lost as a result of the decisions relating to stage 2B report of the London assessment studies;

(2) what levels of public transport fares increases and fuel cost increases were assumed in assessing the options in the London assessment studies;

(3) what would be the estimated cost of implementation of each of the preferred options for each of the London assessment studies.

Mr. Atkins: The consultants assumed that public transport fares would rise in line with expected growth in gross domestic product, and that fuel costs would rise midway between the Department of Transport's high and low forecast. Forecast increases for the period from 1986 until 2001 are 46·3 per cent. and 13·7 per cent., respectively.

Information on the cost and effects of the consultants' options is set out in their stage two reports, which have been placed in the Library.

Learner Drivers

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list those European Community countries in which it is unlawful to give private driving tuition to learner drivers;

(2) what studies have been undertaken by his Department of the practices employed in other European Community countries in the supervision of learner drivers.

Mr. Atkins: The Department is a member of the Commission Internationale Des Examens de Conduite Automobile (CIECA) which exists to exchange information and experience about driver testing and training throughout Europe. We are participating in its latest update of national requirements. The value of these requirements needs to be assessed in the context of the accident records and problems of the countries concerned. CIECA data at present available indicate that Denmark, West Germany, Luxembourg, Netherlands and Portugal do not allow learners to obtain practical driving experience other than through paid professional tuition.

Aircraft Safety

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to implement the aircraft safety recommendations set out in the Civil Aviation Authority's report on aircraft evacuations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Civil Aviation Authority has the statutory responsibility for regulating safety in civil aviation. Consequently it is for the CAA to consider the results of the Cranfield trials, which were commissioned, funded and published by the CAA.

British Rail (Investment)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will bring forward an amendment to the Railways Act 1968 to permit British Rail to invest speculatively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail's duties and powers, which are defined mainly by the Transport Act 1962, enable British Rail to carry out any investment required for the purpose of its business. If my hon. Friend has a particular point in mind, I should be grateful if he would write to me.

Penalty Points

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will report the results of the monitoring by his Department of the effects of the Penalty Points (Alteration) Order 1988;

(2) what consultation he has had with the Magistrates Association concerning the effects of the Penalty Points (Alteration) Order 1988.

Mr. Atkins: We have invited the Magistrates Association to participate in monitoring the effects of the penalty points alterations which came into force on 1 March this year. No problems have been drawn to our attention so far.

Traffic Area Organisation

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he has taken on the Palmer report on traffic area organisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr Parkinson: A number of interested organisations were invited to comment on the recommendations contained in the Palmer report. These are being considered. I expect to reach decisions on the main recommendations early in the new year.

Gatwick Airport

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to when the TNA security equipment being installed at Gatwick airport will become operational.

Mr. McLoughlin: The machine, which will be only the third of six production machines to be installed, will be loaned by the FAA for a 12-month trial and evaluation in a United Kingdom airport. We are in close touch with the FAA and Gatwick Airport Ltd. about the arrangements for its installation and operation. Many questions have had to be resolved and other agencies have had to be consulted. Negotiations and consultations are nearing completion. Before the machine can be delivered modifications requested by Gatwick Airport Ltd. will need to be completed by the American manufacturer. It will not become operational as part of the national aviation security programme until initial tests have been satisfactorily carried out.

Lowlands Airports Policy

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce his decision on the Scottish lowland airports policy review.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend expects to be in a position to announce his decision in the new year.

British Rail

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss the disposal of British Rail land in Nottingham;

(2) what rate of return he requires from British Rail on the sale of derelict land holdings;

(3) what rules apply to the sale of British Rail land and the putting out to tender of such land.

Mr. Portillo: The disposal of British Rail land is the responsibility of the British Rail Property Board (BRPB). The board's objectives require it to manage its operational property in accordance with best commercial practice, and to identify and divest itself of all underused or surplus land and property as rapidly as possible, at a proper commercial price.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss the electrification of the midlands main line.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend meets the chairman of British Rail regularly. We welcome worthwhile proposals for electrification schemes. I understand that British Rail has no plans to electrify the midland main lines at present.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what correspondence he has had with British Rail regarding the sale of land in Nottingham;

(2) what fiduciary duties apply to the sale of British Rail land.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend has had no such correspondence. The objectives for the British Rail Property Board require it to secure a proper commercial price when disposing of underused or surplus land.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will place in the Library a copy of the exchange of letters between British Rail and Eurorail referred to in his reply to the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling of 27 November, Official Report, column 81.

Mr. Portillo: No. The letters deal with commercially confidential matters.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what points he will require to be satisfied before giving his approval to the detailed shareholders' agreement for the joint venture between British Rail and Eurorail.

Mr. Portillo: I shall wish to be satisfied that the proposed joint venture offers value for money for British Rail, for the public and for the taxpayer. The details will depend on the ground to be covered by the agreement.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much direct funding has been provided by Her Majesty's Government to British Rail for (a) capital investment and (b) revenue subsidy in each year from 1980-81 to 1989-90 and projected for 1990-91, all expressed at constant prices.

Mr. Portillo: Her Majesty's Government do not usually provide direct funding for British Rail's capital investment programme, but the public service obligation grants meets the difference between costs and revenues for grant supported services. Eligible costs include depreciation, a supplement to fund capital renewals, and interest. Grant therefore provides support for capital investment, but grant is not allocated to particular categories of expenditure. The figures for "rail" investment and for revenue subsidy (PSO and level crossings grants paid in each financial year) are as follows, in £ million and at constant 1989-90 prices:

Year	Rail investment	Revenue subsidy
1979	526	1,040
1980	537	1,035
1981	439	1,262
1982	357	1,222
1983	352	1,202
1984	[1]374	1,110
1985-86	498	1,060
1986-87	482	912
1987-88	604	915
1988-89	609	[2]590
1989-90	[2]691	[3]517
[4]1990-91	962	462

[1] 1984-85 was a 15 month financial period. The figure shown for 1984 is the 12 month equivalent.
[2] Current forecast.
[3] PSO cash ceiling plus estimate for level crossings grant.
[4] Estimates.

Arts and Design

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what expenditure was made by his Department on (a) the arts and (b) design in the last financial year.

Mr. Atkins: In the last financial year the Department made no expenditure on the arts. The Department is involved in many aspects of design across a wide range of activities, with work undertaken both in-house and commissioned from outside bodies. It is not possible to establish the level of expenditure on design, except at disproportionate cost.

C. Maine Company

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement concerning his Department's inspection of the C. Maine Company, Milford Haven, under the terms of the Merchant Shipping Act 1988; in the light of the European Court judgment in the Jaderow case delivered on 13 December.

Mr. McLoughlin: This judgment has no bearing on the registration of fishing vessels under the Merchant Shipping Act 1988.

Pacer 142 Trains

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will call for a report from the chairman of British Rail on the safety of doors on Pacer 142 trains; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail is required under the statutory accident reporting procedure to notify the Department of a failure on any part of a train which causes, or is likely to cause, an accident. The railway inspectorate is discussing the problems with power doors with the British Railways Board.

Oil Discharges

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the flag states of eight non-United Kingdom ships alleged to have been responsible for illegal oil discharges in United Kingdom waters since 1984; and when were these cases passed on the competent authorities in the relevant flag states for investigation.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is as follows:

Flag state	Date case passed to competent authority
Liberia	13 August 1986
Liberia	7 April 1988
Liberia	27 July 1988
Bahamas	10 December 1988
Turkey	27 June 1989
Cyprus	3 November 1989
Brazil	9 November 1989
Antigua	11 December 1989

Stratford Station

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if there have been any changes in the plans to refurbish Stratford station, London E.15.

Mr. Portillo: The planning of station improvements is entirely a matter for the British Railways Board.

Traffic, (London)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has regarding the total cost per annum arising from traffic congestion in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Department does not make estimates of the annual cost of traffic congestion in London. Congestion causes major problems and the Government have just announced further proposals for dealing with them.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he takes to consider the implications for London traffic flows arising from various building developments in the capital.

Mr. Atkins: The traffic implications of most new development in London is for the boroughs to consider as part of their development control and planning responsibilities under the Town and Country Planning Acts. The Government consider the traffic implications of new development affecting trunk roads on a case-by-case basis. It has established special liaison arrangements with the boroughs and the London Docklands development corporation over developments in docklands.

Newbury Bypass

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce his decision about the proposed route for the Newbury bypass; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Transport are carefully considering all the objections and representations made together with the report and recommendations of the independent inspector who held the public inquiry. They hope to be able to announce their joint decisions very early in the new year.

Road Excavations

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all those authorities and organisations, both public and private, having a statutory right to dig up roads in London in (a) 1980 and (b) the current year.

Mr. Atkins: Information is not available in the form requested. All highway authorities have statutory rights to carry out roadworks. The main public utilities have statutory rights of long standing to place and maintain their apparatus in the public highway. In addition various organisations have powers under public and private legislation or specific authority under licence to carry out excavation in the highway.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what efforts are made to co-ordinate road repairs and road excavation in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Individual highway authorities co-ordinate those roadworks in London for which they are responsible. The Department attaches particular importance to the careful programming and traffic management arrangements of works on its own roads. The Department also encourages highway authorities to promote co-operation between organisations having statutory rights to excavate roads and to co-ordinate these works with their own. The Goverment have proposed, as part of the legislation they intend to bring forward to implement the recommendations of the Horne report, that in future highway authorities will be given a positive duty to co-ordinate all excavations in the highway with a view to minimising the disruption to road users.

Greater Manchester Northern Relief Road

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who were the consulting engineers for the centre section of the Greater Manchester northern relief road M6 to M66.

Mr. Atkins: Allot and Lomax with G. Maunsell and Partners (in consortium) are looking at options for the M56-M62 section of the Greater Manchester western and northern relief road.

Planning, (London)

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what organisation he has established in his Department to deal with the strategic planning of London's transport; what is its name; what is its staffing; and at what ranks and grades.

Mr. Atkins: Work on the strategic planning of London's transport is undertaken by a number of directorates within the Department, in particular highways, railways, public transport. The heads of these directorates, and colleagues from the Department of the Environment's London regional office, meet regularly to discuss London's transport problems and to co-ordinate action. In this they are supported by a secretariat from the transport policy unit. The unit is headed by a grade 5 and is at present made up of four grade 7s, a senior economic assistant and a personal secretary.

Driver Testing and Training Division

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the annual report and accounts for driver testing and training division are available.

Mr. Atkins: The driver testing and training division's annual report and accounts for 1988-89 have now been issued. I am placing copies in the Library.

Accounting Procedures

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether in the last 10 years he or his predecessors, either by direction or informally, secured changes in the accounting conventions followed by the British Transport Docks Board, Associated British Ports, the British Airports Authority or British Airways, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 18 December 1989]: British Transport Docks Board accounts were prepared under the historic cost convention during the period up to privatisation, adding current cost accounts as supplementary from 1980. British Airways accounts were produced under the historic cost convention with current cost accounts as supplementary for the whole period up to privatisation. British Airports Authority accounts were changed from modified historic cost convention to current cost convention in 1980-81 and produced on that basis up to privatisation. The change of convention was decided by the authority and agreed by the Government.

PRIME MINISTER

Homelessness

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister what plans she has to visit a shelter for the homeless in London or other major city in the United Kingdom during the Christmas period.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Meetings (Mr. David Hart)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Prime Minister (1) when Mr. David Hart last met Mr. Charles Powell; in what capacity; and for what purpose;

(2) when Mr. David Hart last met Sir Percy Cradock; and for what purpose;

(3) when Mr. David Hart last visited Downing street; in what capacity; and for what purpose;

(4) when Mr. David Hart last visited the Cabinet Office; in what capacity; and for what purpose;

(5) when she or her officials last met Mr. David Hart; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) at column 1169. Mr. Hart is not employed by me or by 10 Downing street in any capacity.

My normal practice is and will continue to be neither to confirm nor deny that meetings with private individuals have taken place even in those cases where no such meeting has occurred.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will visit the proposed relocation site for the Inland Revenue in Nottingham.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Relocation

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what co-ordination exists between the Treasury and the Department of Transport on the use of British Rail land for the relocation of Government Departments.

The Prime Minister: The use of British Rail land is a matter for the British Railways Board, which is free to deal with Government Departments.

Official Historian

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to establish an official historian's office for the Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister: No.

Arts and Design

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Prime Minister what expenditure was made by her office on (a) the arts and (b) design in the last financial year.

The Prime Minister: The total expenditure incurred by my office on the arts and design in 1988-89 was £9,794.

Methodist Church

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received in the last two years asking her to meet leaders of the Methodist Church; when she last met them; and when she next proposes to meet them.

The Prime Minister: I receive a considerable number of requests for official meetings each year. I have at present no plans to meet leaders of the Methodist Church.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Select Committees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will bring forward a substantive motion to give effect to the recommendations of the Liaison Committee report of Session 1984-85, HC 363, in respect of the automatic nomination of Select Committees after a general election.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Government's view of the recommendations of the 1984-85 Liaison Committee was given on 23 November 1987 by my right hon. Friend the Member for Colchester, South and Maldon (Mr. Wakeham) who stated that he did not consider that the existence of a Standing Order providing for nominations for these Committees to be put forward within a prescribed period would necessarily have expedited their establishment in this Parliament.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what was the expenditure on full-time specialist staff appointed to service departmental Select Committees in each year since 1979.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The grade of temporary assistant (later to become specialist assistant) to Select Committees was introduced to the Clerk's Department in October 1980. The table sets out the numbers of specialist assistants in post at 1 April 1981 to 1 April 1989 and their total annual gross salaries payable at that date. All specialist assistants work for departmental Committees.

1 April	Numbers in post	Total annual gross salary (£)
1981	5	49,730
1982	6	66,168
1983	6	72,646

1 April	Numbers in post	Total annual gross salary (£)
1984	5	64,892
1985	4	53,756
1986	5	69,909
1987	5	75,862
1988	4	61,128
1989	7	117,691

Voting Records (Press Fee)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Lord President of the Council under what arrangements newspapers and broadcasting stations are being asked to pay a fee to publish details of the Division voting records of hon. Members; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have no knowledge of any such arrangements.

CIVIL SERVICE

Staff (Pay Scheme)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will make a statement about the discretionary pay scheme for grades 2 and 3 staff in the home Civil Service.

Mr. Luce: In the third round of awards made under the arrangements announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 23 April 1987, awards have been made to 18 grade 2s and 77 grade 3s. The total number of staff currently granted awards following the first three rounds of the scheme is 36 grade 2s and 149 grade 3s, respectively 26 per cent. and 30 per cent. of each grade. This is within the ceiling of 35 per cent. of each grade recommended by the Top Salaries Review Body earlier this year.

The full year cost of these awards is £463,400 or about 1·8 per cent. of the annual pay bill for the grades concerned.

Next Steps

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will set out in the Official Report a table of bodies announced as candidates for Next Steps executive agency status, showing the date of announcement of candidature, date of establishment as agency (where appropriate) and the number of staff and expenditure-turnover for each candidate-agency at latest convenient date.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 20 December 1989]: The information requested is as follows:

NATIONAL FINANCE

Mortgage Tax Relief

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the number of tax units receiving mortgage interest relief in each income band in 1988-89 and the number with investment income; and if he will provided a forecast for 1989-90.

Mr. Lilley: The information requested is in the tables. These estimates are subject to revision.

Tax units receiving mortgage interest relief by range of total income 1988-89

Estimates of the numbers of tax units receiving mortgage interest relief are based on information from the 1987-88 survey of personal incomes. In the projections to 1988-89 and 1989-90, it is assumed that the proportions of mortgagors in each income range with investment income are the same as those for 1988-89 provided in previous reply to the hon. Member on 29 July 1988 at columns 732-34.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the next revaluation of the exchange rate mechanism; and whether he will be making representations to that revaluation meeting.

Mr. Ryder: Any future realignment of the currencies in the exchange rate mechanism will take place in accordance with the resolution of the European Council of 5 December 1978 on the establishment of the European monetary system and related matters.

Tax Evasion

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list each type of tax currently levied on companies and the number of prosecutions for tax evasion in each category for the latest year in which figures are available.

Mr. Lilley: The four main taxes on companies and the number of completed prosecutions for evasion involving these taxes in the year to 31 March 1989 are:

Tax	Prosecutions
Corporation Tax	6
Petroleum Revenue Tax	0
VAT	33
Rates	[1]

[1] Being a tax on property rates cannot be "evaded" in the sense that the term is normally understood. It follows there can be no prosecution in respect of rates although there are many civil actions for non-payment.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the change in retail prices over the period June 1979 to October 1989, or the most recent month for which figures are available, measured against the retail prices index, of gas, electricity, bread, beer, four star/premium (97-99 RON) petrol net of duty and taxes and of four star/premium (97-99 RON) petrol including duty and taxes.

Mr. Ryder: The following table shows the percentage increase in the retail prices index (RPI) between June 1979 and November 1989, together with the equivalent increases for gas, electricity, bread, beer and petrol and oil (inclusive of duty and taxes).

	Percentage increase in the RPI between June 1979 and November 1989
All items	112·9
Gas	144·2
Electricity	122·3
Bread	86·7
Beer	176·7
Petrol and oil	88·8

The RPI does not measure net prices; nor is a comparison for four-star petrol available separately from the RPI. However, using other sources, it is estimated that the price of four-star petrol increased by some 25 per cent. over approximately the same period net of duty and taxes, and by some 95 per cent. including duty and taxes.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what revenues he receives from the value added tax levied upon the sale of insulation, double glazing and heating control equipment; and whether he will make an estimate regarding the proportion of that tax which is reclaimed by value added tax registered traders.

Mr. Ryder: Details of the VAT charged on the supply of insulation, double glazing and heating control equipment are not available separately from other VAT revenue. Neither is it possible to determine the amount of such tax which is recovered by registered traders as part of their normal input tax deductions. When these products are incorporated in new domestic dwellings there is no burden of tax because the supply of new housing is zero rated to the consumer.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the conditions under which value added tax may be recovered from privatised contracts for ancillary services within the National Health Service; and when these conditions were first made known.

Mr. Ryder: The conditions under which VAT may be recovered in respect of these contracted out services are set out in the Treasury directions made under the provisions of section 11 of the Finance Act 1984. The first such direction was made in 1984 and the latest direction was published in the Edinburgh Gazette in the issue dated 7 April 1989. A copy is in the House Library.

Tobacco

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would have been the effect on the retail prices index had tobacco excise duty, inclusive of value added tax, been index linked for 1989-90.

Mr. Ryder: It is estimated that the impact effect on the retail prices index of an indexation of tobacco excise duty in 1989-90 would have been to increase the index by 0·15 per cent.

Cash Limits

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it Government policy to increase the appropriate cash limits in the Autumn Statement in line with inflation.

Mr. Lamont: No. Public expenditure is planned and managed in cash.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the exchange rate of the pound on the date of the publication of the Chancellor's Autumn Statement in terms of (a) the dollar, (b) the deutschmark, (c) the Japanese yen and (d) the sterling index; what are the latest available exchange rates for these categories; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: At the close of business on 15 November and 19 December, the exchange rates against sterling for the specified currencies were as follows:

	$/£	DM/£	Yen/£	£ERI
15 November	1·5825	2·9113	227·2	88·7
19 December	1·6030	2·7764	230·4	86·6

Green Pound

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the National Farmers Union concerning a realignment of the green pound and other proposals; and what response he has made.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend receives a large number of representations on a wide variety of subjects.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to ensure the successful relocation of the Inland Revenue in Nottingham.

Mr. Lilley: The Inland Revenue remains committed to its plans to relocate some 2,000 headquarters posts to Nottingham. However, it has always made it clear that its decision is conditional on obtaining a suitable site reasonably quickly on satisactory terms. I very much hope that, with the continuing support of the city and county councils, the department will be able to obtain a site in the near future.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last discussed the relocation of the Inland Revenue.

Mr. Lilley: I keep fully up to date with developments on the Inland Revenue's proposals to relocate some 2,000 headquarters posts to Nottingham.

HMSO

Mr. Wood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what financial target he has set Her Majesty's Stationery Office for 1990.

Mr. Ryder: I have today laid a further Treasury minute setting HMSO the financial target for 1990 of achieving a profit after interest in current cost accounting terms of £2·9 million. This compares with the target for 1989 of a profit after interest in current cost accounting terms of £1·7 million.

Public Servants

Mr. Wood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement about the Government's policy of abating the pensions of retired public servants who are re-employed in the public service.

Mr. Ryder: The Government have been reviewing the current abatement policy and has decided upon a change. In future, the pay or pension of retired public servants will no longer generally be subject to abatement if they are re-employed in a different public service after retirement. However, those who retire early may continue to be subject to abatement until they reach the normal retirement age in the public service from which they first retired. The administrative arrangements to give effect to the change will be made as soon as possible.

Abatement will continue to apply for those who are re-employed in the same public service from which they draw pension. The review of this arrangement is not yet complete. I will make a further statement in due course.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Wood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of staff in post in central Government Departments at 1 October.

Mr. Norman Lamont: On 1 October 1989 there were 565,075 staff in post in central Government Departments. Of these 497,294 were non-industrials and 67,781 were industrials. The figures for 1 April 1990 will be published next, when available.

Non-domestic Construction (VAT)

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue has been raised to date due to the ending of zero-rating on non-domestic construction.

Mr. Ryder: Details of the revenue raised in the year to date as a result of the ending of zero rating on non-domestic construction are not available.

Charities

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to legislate for the removal of taxation on charitable fund raising by appeals like that for Children In Need or to make compensatory ex-gratia payments to such appeals of equivalent amounts to any taxation deducted.

Mr. Major [holding answer 20 December 1989]: Donations to charitable appeals are not liable to income tax, corporation tax or VAT, provided the donors receive no benefit in return. One-off fund-raising events held by charities are exempt from VAT, and non-charitable bodies can also obtain VAT exemption when organising one-off events as agents of an appeal fund which has charitable status. Income tax or corporation tax may be payable where the fund-raising activities amount to trading but, by concession, the Inland Revenue does not charge tax on the profits where certain conditions are satisfied. Full details of the concession (C4) are contained in the Inland Revenue leaflet IR1 1988.

Building Societies

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what action the Building Societies Commission has taken with regard to full distribution by the Guardian building society to its members;

(2) what advice the Building Societies Commission gave to the Guardian building society and the Cheltenham and Gloucester building society in respect of prudential matters relating to the proposed merger of the two societies;

(3) why the Building Societies Commission's advice to the Guardian building society in regard to the proposed merger with the Cheltenham and Gloucester building society had excluded the need for the Guardian building society to obtain an up-to-date valuation of its gross assets, including freehold property.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 19 December 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to two previous questions on this matter on 11 December 1989 at column 448.

The discussions between the building societies concerned and the Building Societies Commission are confidential. Interested parties will have an opportunity to put their representations to the hearing now scheduled by the Commission for 15 February 1990, if the special investors' and borrowers' resolutions are passed.

Cigarettes

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much the burden of excise duty and value-added tax on cigarettes has outstripped the all items retail prices index since 1979.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 20 December 1989]: The combined excise duty and value added tax levied on a typical packet of 20 king-size cigarettes increased by 32 per cent. more than the retail prices index in the 10 years between October 1979 and October 1989.

HEALTH

"Working for Patients"

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Heath (1) what is the distribution by National Health Service region, by spending head, and by spending head within each National Health Service region of the sums so far announced for the implementation of the proposals in "Working for Patients" for the financial year 1989-90;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the distribution between functions and National Health Service regions of the extra resources to implement "Working for Patients" including sums available for medical audit and information technology training.

Mr. Freeman: The £73 million available to the hospital and community health services in 1989-90 has been distributed as shown in the table.

Sight Tests

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in the Durham area have had eye tests since April 1989; and what was the figure for the same period in 1988.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Statistics relating to private sight tests have not been gathered since April 1989. It is not therefore possible to supply directly comparable figures for the periods in question.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to monitor the volume of private sight tests.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State is instituting a survey covering Great Britain which will begin next month. The results should be available in the early spring.

Miscarriages

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has concerning the number of miscarriages caused by pregnant women coming into contact with chlorydiosis infected sheep.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have assumed that the question was intended to refer to sheep infected with chlamydia psittaci. The information available for the years since 1984 is shown in the table:

Chlamydia B/Chlamydia Psittaci 1984-88

[2] Evidence for ovine origin is difficult to determine.

HIV-positive Children

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines have been issued to establishments under his control about the admission of children who are HIV positive.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department manages two youth treatment centres which look after adolescent boys and girls. Testing for HIV antibodies is not carried out routinely.

The centres have been advised that a young person infected with HIV antibodies could be managed satisfactorily and in the normal way until or unless the need for specialised medical treatment or nursing care became necessary. They have been further advised that the best protection for people working and living there is to adhere scrupulously to sensible and basic standards of hygiene, to ensure the close supervision of the young residents and to provide them with planned sex education curricula within their broader health education. In addition, the centres have been asked to provide staff training directed towards the understanding of infections such as AIDS and hepatitis B and their prevention.

Adoptions

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children from overseas countries have been adopted by British citizens during each of the last five years; and, of this number, how many were from countries which do not operate similar adoption procedures to the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not available.

Airports (Public Health)

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Heath what steps are being taken to strengthen public health regulations at Britain's international airports to reduce the risk of diseases being brought into the United Kingdom on aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Public Health (Aircraft) Regulations 1979 relate to incoming and outgoing aircraft and authorise measures to be taken to prevent danger to public health and the spread of infection. They are being considered within the review of the law on infectious disease control in England and Wales currently being conducted by the Department as I announced on 24 October 1989 in a reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) at columns 411-12.

Doctors

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Heath if he will give for each year since 1959 the number of doctors employed by the National Health Service, with each year also expressed as a percentage change of the previous year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Comparable data are not available prior to 1971. Informtion from 1971 is as shown in the table. Prior to 1975 comparable community health service medical staff figures are not available and are therefore not included.

[1] Includes permanent paid and honorary staff; excludes locum staff, hospital practitioners and clinical assistants in the hospital and community health services. Includes general medical practitioners.
[2] Includes 129 additional posts not shown in the main census, which have been returned late by regions.

Abortion

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received from (a) men and (b) women regarding abortion, in the past six months; how many of each of those categories were (i) for and (ii) against; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is not always possible to tell from a signature who wrote the letters or to distinguish between those in favour of a lower time limit or against abortion.

Research Data

Mr. John Townend: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will make an assessment as to the ownership of anonymised data for research purposes produced by general practitioners on computers provided by third parties.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Miss Nicholson) on 13 December at column 681.

Amniocentesis Tests

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to the rate of miscarriage in pregnant women as a result of receiving an amniocentesis; and if he will give the source of his information.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A recent report from the Royal College of Physicians states that the best studies suggest a 1 per cent. excess risk of spontaneous abortion following amniocentesis. (Source: Prenatal diagnosis and genetic screening. Royal College of Physicians, September 1989, paragraphs 2.33-2.35.)

Conductive Education

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money the Government have put into Peto clinic-style rehabilitation in each of the years since 1979 at constant prices; and what additional funding his Department has put aside for local authorities to assist such treatment over the same period.

Mr. Freeman: Information is not available in the form requested. Health authorities provide a wide range of treatment and rehabilitation services for disabled children. It is for individual authorities to allocate resources to these services in the light of their own circumstances.

Hospices

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will obtain a copy of the proceedings of the annual conference of "Help the Hospices" regarding current funding for his departmental library.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Yes.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding his Department gives to the Nottingham hospice of 384 Woodborough road, Nottingham NG3 4JF.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None. I understand that the project is funded by a trust and a contribution from local finance.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to bring funding arrangements for hospices in England into line with those in Scotland.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) on 15 December at columns 846-47.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has had from (a) the Nottingham hospice and (b) the Nottingham district health authority regarding the funding of the hospice; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received no representations from the Nottingham hospice and the district health authority regarding funding of the hospice. I understand that the health authority provides some 25 hospice beds and has given the Nottinghamshire hospice some funds until April 1990.

Midwives

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the grading of those post-registration midwives whose courses began prior to 1 April 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received a number of representations since the staff and management sides of the Nursing and Midwifery Staffs Negotiating Council agreed in October 1988 on a new provision for staff who entered training after 1 April 1988.

The Government have made their position clear in their response to the fourth report from the Social Services Committee 1988-89 "Resourcing the National Health Service: Midwives' Regrading 1988-89".

Elderly People

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is available to him on services currently being provided under section 45 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 which could not be provided under other legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We do not collect information in this form.

Ambulance Dispute

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost of (a) board and lodgings for military personnel, (b) use of military petrol and vehicles, (c) police overtime, (d) payments to St. John Ambulance and (e) payments to the Red Cross Society so far incurred in the ambulance dispute.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information is not available centrally of the costs of police overtime or of payments to St. John Ambulance and the Red Cross Society incurred so far in the ambulance dispute. It is understood that extra costs have been incurred by the armed forces of £0·792 million up to 30 November 1989.

Arts and Design

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what expenditure was made by his Department on (a) the arts and (b) design in the last financial year.

Mr. Freeman: Information is not available in the form requested.

Emergency Calls

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many ambulance personnel have been (a) killed, (b) seriously injured and (c) slightly injured in each of the past 10 years (i) in accidents while proceeding to an emergency call and (ii) while at the scene of an emergency call.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Vaccination Leaflet

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health why the Health Education Authority has withdrawn the leaflet MMR (Measles, Mumps and Rubella) vaccination reference 1D19 ISBNI 85448 050 2 printed by Graphoprint 8/88 and replaced it with an edition which is identical save for the photograph of the child on the cover; how many copies were printed of the 1988 edition; how many remained in stock at the time of its replacement by the 1989 edition; how many copies of the 1989 edition have been printed; what was the reason for the replacement of the original photograph by the new one on the front of the 1989 edition; what was the cost of the 1988 and 1989 editions; and what was the cost of changing the photograph.

Mr. Freeman: A new edition of the MMR (Measles, Mumps and Rubella) vaccination leaflet (ID19) was produced only after all stocks of the original leaflet were used. A new photograph was used after Health Education Authority research indicated that the original had limited appeal.

The original leaflet cost £16,198 for 1,279,000 copies, and a reprint cost £6,095 for a further 400,000 leaflets. The new printing cost £9,785 for 850,000 leaflets, plus £400 for the new photograph.

Self-governing Hospitals

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what central funding is being made available for feasibility studies by hospitals considering self-governing status.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No central funds have been allocated specifically for work on feasibility studies by hospitals which have expressed an interest in NHS trust status.

AIDS

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (i) the numbers of HIV positive persons, (ii) the numbers of AIDS patients and (iii) the number of deaths from AIDS, in each standard region and in the United Kingdom since the AIDS epidemic began; and if he will show (a) the numbers of haemophiliacs so affected and (b) the numbers of non-haemophiliacs so affected as a consequence of infected blood products.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 29 November 1989]: The table shows the total numbers of HIV positive reports, AIDS cases and deaths of people with AIDS reported to the communicable disease surveillance centre and the communicable diseases (Scotland) unit to the end of September 1989, the numbers of those who were haemophiliacs, and the numbers of non-haemophiliacs thought to have been infected through receipt of blood or blood products in the United Kingdom or abroad.

The regional breakdown is by regional health authority rather than standard regions as requested. All numbers in the tables which are fewer than 10 are represented by an asterisk to safeguard confidentiality, in line with the procedure followed in reports under the AIDS (Control) Act.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the independent experts which have been called in to advise at the Department of Health—National Health Service manpower planning advisory group on the recruitment and retention of speech therapists;

(2) on what dates discussions have taken place on recruitment and retention rates of speech therapists at the Department of Health—National Health Service manpower planning advisory group;

(3) over what period and in which authorities area data collection took place to inform the Department of Health —National Health Service manpower planning advisory group on recruitment and retention rates of speech therapists;

(4) when the Department of Health—National Health Service manpower planning advisory group decided to study recruitment and retention rates of speech therapists;

(5) which areas of speech therapy have been examined in the Department of Health—National Health Service manpower planning advisory group on recruitment and retention patterns of speech therapists.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 29 November 1989]: Work on the recruitment and retention of speech therapists is being undertaken as part of the national professional manpower initiative. This is a joint initiative launched in December 1987 between the Departments of Health, the manpower planning advisory group and the professional bodies concerned. The aim is to improve the quality and flow of information between the service, the professions and the Health Departments. This will enable the more informed analysis of, for example, recruitment and retention issues. For those staff groups covered by the pay review body for the professions allied to medicine, the aim is also to provide improved manpower information for the review body. The initiative covers all health authorities.

The initiative has been discussed with representatives of speech therapy including a nominee from the College of Speech Therapists acting as the formal link between the college and the Department.

Benzodiazepines

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to promote alternatives to treatment by benzodiazepine drugs in future.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 19 December 1989]: That some patients can become addicted to benzodiazepine drugs is well known in the medical profession. This is one of the factors that doctors bear in mind when considering alternative treatment possibilities for their patients, such as counselling. What form of treatment will be more effective for particular patients is a matter for the clinical judgment of their doctors. Ministers would not wish to seek to promote particular forms of treatment, either generally or for particular groups of patients.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received about providing compensation for ex-service personnel who took part in the nuclear testing programme.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A number of representations have been made by right hon. and hon. Members and by others regarding compensation for participants in the United Kingdom's nuclear weapons test programme. As the Government have made clear on many occasions, we would be ready to pay compensation wherever the Crown's legal liability was established and where there was firm evidence to show that, on a balance of probabilities, ex-service personnel had suffered ill health as a result of exposure to radiation during the course of their duties as members of the armed forces.

British Forces, Germany

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there are any proposals to change the level of British armed forces based in Germany.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Conventional arms control discussions underway in Vienna concern certain categories of equipment held by the British armed forces. It is too early, however, to assess the impact of a CFE agreement on British forces in the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current manpower of (a) the Berlin Brigade, (b) the Royal Air Force in Germany and (c) the British Army of the Rhine.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The current peacetime establishment figures are as follows:

(a) Berlin Brigade—a little under 3,000
(b) the Royal Air Force in Germany—12,182 and
(c) the British Army of the Rhine—55,200.

Low Flying

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will review the amount of low flying carried out by the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Defence Establishments (Security)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he is taking to improve security at his Department's establishments in West Germany; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It would not be appropriate to comment on individual security measures. However, a wide range of new security measures have been implemented recently in West Germany and further major measures are in prospect. Close liaison is also maintained with the Federal Republic of Germany authorities, which have primary responsibility for the prevention of terrorist crimes outside United Kingdom bases.

RAF Installation (Aird Uig)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the former Royal Air Force installation at Aird Uig, Isle of Lewis, was disposed of and to whom; and what was the price paid.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The NATO communications installation at Aird Uig, which is operated by the RAF, remains in use. Only the adjoining domestic accommodation area amounting to some 12 acres was sold to a private individual in March 1973, but it is known that the site has been resold several times since then. It is not our practice to disclose details of commercial transactions.

Amphibious Warfare

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to implement the Royal Navy's requirement for vessels to maintain its amphibian warfare capability.

Mr Neubert: The Government are committed to maintaining the Royal Navy amphibious capability in the longer term. To this end, we are currently examing the results of studies into replacing the capability offered by HMS Fearless and HMS Intrepid, either by extending their planned lives or by new build. A decision will be made in good time before these ships reach the end of their current useful lives. We are also evaluating the tenders we received earlier this year for the aviation support ship. We hope to be in a position to place an order during 1990. We will continue to maintain our force of landing ships logistic.

Crown Immunity

Mr Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many section 10 certificates have been issued since 1979 in respect of members of the services, excluding those who were nuclear test veterans.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend's responsibilities are limited to issuing certificates, under section 10(3) of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947, confirming the duty status of a member of the armed forces on any particular occasion. It is not possible to provide full details of all section 10(3) certificates issued since 1979, as these have not been kept. However, our records show that 11 such certificates have been issued in the four years from 1986 to date; of these, one related to a nuclear test veteran.

Pirbright Ranges

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why it is proposed to extend the danger area at Pirbright ranges; what land clearance has been undertaken in preparation; whether the Nature Conservancy Council has been consulted; why Pirbright parish council has not been notified of these proposals; and if he will now take steps to ensure that local residents are fully informed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no plans to extend the danger area of the Pirbright ranges in the foreseeable future.

Armed Forces (Fatalities)

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of Her Majesty's forces have been killed in each of the past five calendar years (a) as a result of terrorist action and (b) in other ways in the course of their duty; and what would have been the cost to the Exchequer if those killed, in each category, had been guaranteed a mimimum payment to their next of kin by the Ministry of Defence equivalent to one year's salary.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to my hon. Friend.

Tanks

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence further to his answer to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central of 14 December, Official Report, column 822, if he will list the matters relating to tanks discussed between General Dynamics and his officials.

Mr. Alan Clark: The details of meetings between General Dynamics and my officials to discuss possible future orders for tanks for the British Army are commercially confidential.

Arts and Design

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what expenditure was made by his Department on (a) the arts and (b) design in the last financial year.

Mr. Neubert: I am not aware of any expenditure made by my Department on either the arts or design as such during the last financial year. To research the matter fully would incur disproportionate costs.

Reservists

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the steps being taken in his Department towards expanding the size and role of reservists in British military capability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since 1979 the Ministry of Defence has set in hand measures to increase all volunteer reserve services. The Royal Naval Reserve has 11 new fleet minesweepers and has increased the numbers of communications and medical staffs. The role of the Royal Naval Auxiliary Service has been expanded to include participation in the defence of ports and anchorages. Two new detachments of the Royal Marines Reserve have been formed to enhance and support 3 Commando Brigade Royal Marines and to undertake home defence tasks. Measures affecting the TA have included the raising of six new TA infantry battalions, an air defence regiment and five batteries, and eight airfield damage repair units. The Home Service Force has been established and 43 companies have now been raised. Seven new auxiliary field squadrons of the Royal Auxiliary Air Force have been formed to defend airfields, together with an auxiliary air movements squadron and an auxiliary aeromedical evacuation squadron. Some additional small measures are also under consideration.

Action continues to recruit volunteers for these services and to improve retention. Response from employers to the campaign to provide support for the Volunteer Reserves has been most encouraging.

Home Defence

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the study of logistic sustainability of home defence being conducted by his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The logistic requirements of our military home defence plans are reviewed periodically. Such a review is currently in progress, but it is not our practice to comment in detail on matters of this kind.

Garrison Stables (Berlin)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military personnel are employed in the garrison stables in Berlin; how many horses are stabled there; how many of these horses are owned by his Department; and how many by private individuals.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The British garrison stables in Berlin have three horses owned by the Ministry of Defence, nine ponies and 10 horses of the saddle club and 10 horses at livery owned by private individuals. Four soldier grooms are employed there.

Sea Wolf

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans for further development of vertical launched Sea Wolf.

Mr. Neubert: Pre-feasibility studies have been completed and feasibility studies are expected to start shortly to examine the possibilities of updating all versions of the Sea Wolf point defence missile system.

FMC Company, USA

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has had any discussions about defence contracts with or involving the FMC company of the United States of America.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department has had some discussions with the FMC Company of the United States of America concerning the possible purchase of equipment for the MLRS programme. Our purchases, however, have been made through Prime Contractors, LTV and EPG.

The United Kingdom arm of the company, FMC Corporation UK, is on the defence contractors list. There is no record of any current contract with the company.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Race Relations

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide estimates showing for each financial year from 1987-88 to 1990-91 the amount of actual or planned expenditure on section 11 grant.

Mr. John Patten: The amount of grant paid, or estimated to be paid under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 for the years in question is set as follows. This represents the Home Office element (75 per cent.) of the total expenditure, the remainder being the local authority contribution.

Financial year	Grant £ million
1987-88	93
1988-89	89
1989-90	115
1990-91	110

The figure for the current year includes anticipated payments in respect of earlier years.

Sports Grounds

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he intends to amend the Public Order Act, section 5, in the light of recent reports on crowd safety and control at sports grounds.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no plans to do so.

Security

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the powers that regulate and control (a) non-Home Office police in the public sector and (b) private security firms performing a policing role; and if he will list all groups falling within category (a).

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The main non-Home Office police forces in the public sector are the British Transport police, the Ministry of Defence police, the Royal Parks constabulary and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority constabulary; statutory responsibility for these forces and for legislation or regulation governing them rests with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Transport, for Defence, for the Environment and for Energy.

There are also some small bodies of constables operating on private property which are established under private legislation, which are not directly answerable to a Minister, and on which information is not held centrally. We know of one case (at Parkeston quay) where members of a security force, sworn in as special constables under such legislation, were provided under contract to the harbour authority by a private security firm. The accountability of the members of such a force lies to the law and to the courts and to the statutory harbour authority.

Police officers in the main non-Home Office police forces and some of the smaller forces are required to comply with the provisions of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 and the codes of practice within the area of their jurisdiction, by agreements made under section 96 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984.

The Government look to the private security industry to provide self-regulation. Considerable progress has been made by trade associations and regulatory bodies within the industry. We are currently considering, in the light of the report of a Home Office working group, whether there is scope for further improvement in self-regulation.

Television Licence Fees

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions have been obtained concerning television licence fee evasion for each year of the past 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The following information has been supplied by the national television licence records office. Provision of details for earlier years would involve disproportionate cost.

Offenders found guilty of television licence fee evasion
United Kingdom

Financial year	Number of convictions
1984-85	110,042
1985-86	123,122
1986-87	174,509
1987-88	158,182
1988-89	172,604

The increase in recent years results from improvements in the detection rate.

People who find the licence fee hard to pay in one lump sum can now take advantage of the new budget payments scheme. This enables colour licence payers to obtain a licence on payment of the first of four quarterly direct debit instalments.

Prison Officers' Quarters

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison officers have been allocated a second quarter while still registered as having a quarter in each of the past five years.

Mr. Mellor: This information could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost. However, I am aware of only two cases where a second quarter has been allocated to a prison officer before surrender of the original quarter with vacant possession.

Police Disciplinary Codes

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the sections of police disciplinary codes that relate to giving misleading evidence in court.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Depending on the circumstances in which the offence takes place, such behaviour may fall within any one of a number of sections of the discipline code, including those relating to discreditable conduct (section 1), disobedience (section 3), falsehood or prevarication (section 5) or criminal conduct (section 16).

Game Licences

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total net product of the sale of game licences in each of the past 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The face value of game licences sold in England and Wales since 1981 is given in the table. Information on previous years is not readily to hand.

Year	£
1981-82	191,210
1982-83	199,354
1983-84	204,370
1984-85	201,154
1985-86	196,146
1986-87	192,940
1987-88	205,114
1988-89	210,310

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to his answer of 14 December, Official Report, columns 785-86, if he will specify the offence and the sentence of the only IRA member on category B, apart from the men convicted of the Birmingham bombings.

Mr. Mellor: The prisoner was convicted on 12 counts of murder and sentenced to life imprisonment on each count. Concurrent sentences of 20 years and five years imprisonment, together with a consecutive sentence of 10 years imprisonment, were also imposed for three convictions for causing explosions likely to endanger life and property.

Irish Foreign Minister

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Foreign Minister of Ireland; what was discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend has not yet met the Irish Foreign Minister. My right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) last met him as Home Secretary on 13 September 1989. They discussed matters of common concern to both Governments.

Immigration

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total number of immigrants from New Commonwealth, or previously New Commonwealth countries (a) admitted for settlement in the United Kingdom or (b) admitted on such a basis as may eventually entitle them to United Kingdom citizenship with right of abode.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of persons from the new commonwealth and Pakistan accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom in the years 1980-88 is published in table 22 of the annual Home Office volume "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom 1998" (Cm 726).

Under the British Nationality Act 1981 British dependent territory citizens, British nationals (overseas), British overseas citizens, British subjects and British protected persons who have been accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom, and fulfil the other conditions of section 4(2) of the Act are entitled to British citizenship. There is now no entitlement to citizenship for other adults, though those who have been accepted for settlement and fulfil the other relevant conditions of the Act may apply for citizenship by naturalisation, which is at the Home Secretary's discretion.

The numbers of British dependent territory citizens from Hong Kong (including British nationals (overseas)) and of British overseas citizens, accepted for settlement in recent years is also shown in the aforementioned table 22. The numbers of acceptances for settlement of British dependent territory citizens other than from Hong Kong, of British subjects and of British protected persons are not separately identified in the settlement figures. However, information on grants of British citizenship in 1988 for most of these categories is shown in table 4 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin Issue 9/89 "Citizenship Statistics, United Kingdom 1988"

Copies of both these publications are in the Library.

Gun Clubs

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representation he has received concerning his proposals for the control of gun clubs; and if he will ensure that his proposals do not prohibit the practice of day membership for visitors or novices.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have received a number of representations from right hon. and hon. Members, shooting organisations, individual clubs, and members of the public. We shall give careful consideration to the practice of day membership in the light of these and the advice of the firearms consultative committee.

Police Officers (Housing Allowance)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to alleviate the difficulties facing police officers who have moved or will move to other forces before 1 April 1990 who cannot sell their houses in the depressed housing market and who will lose personal protection under the proposed replacement of rent allowance by housing allowance; if he will make it his policy to continue protection whilst present conditions persist; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend has already made it clear that he does not wish to see any officer receiving less by way of allowance after 31 March 1990 than he or she was receiving by way of rent allowance on that date. He is not clear that more than this could be justified. He will, however, consider my hon. Friend's point before reaching any final decision.

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure that police officers continue to be motivated to apply for senior positions in forces other than the one in which they are now serving, in view of the loss of personal protection known as red circling under the proposed replacement of rent allowance by housing allowance.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to be receiving shortly the recommendations of the Police negotiating board on rent allowance. In coming to his decisions he will bear in mind the need to ensure that senior police officers continue to be motivated to apply for senior positions.

Emergency Calls

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many firemen have been (a) killed, (b) seriously injured and (c) slightly injured in the past 10 years (i) in accidents while proceeding to an emergency call and (ii) while at the scene of an emergency call.

Mr. John Patten: During 1979-1988 fire brigades in England and Wales reported firefighters killed and injured in the course of duty as follows:

	Killed in the course of operational duty
	as a result of firefighting or a special service call	as a result of a road accident	Injured at an incident causing prolonged absence from duty
1979	1	2	297
1980	3	1	341
1981	2	0	264
1982	4	2	270
1983	5	0	311
1984	3	0	249
1985	1	4	312
1986	0	1	303
1987	4	3	301
1988	0	0	327
Totals	23	13	2,975

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers have been (a) killed, (b) seriously injured and (c) slightly injured in each of the past 10 years in (i) accidents while proceeding to an emergency call and (ii) the execution of their duty.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is not available in the form requested. However, the following table sets out the number of deaths of police officers on duty during the years 1979 to 1988 inclusive, divided between homicides and other deaths, including accidental deaths.

	Homicides	Other deaths	Total
1979	1	9	10
1980	1	4	5
1981	1	9	10
1982	5	10	15
1983	4	12	16
1984	3	12	15
1985	1	6	7
1986	0	9	9
1987	2	9	11
1988	2	1	3

Details of the circumstances surrounding these deaths are not held centrally. It is therefore not possible to determine whether deaths occurred in response to an emergency call, or, in the case of deaths not due to homicide whether death was accidental or due to negligence on the part of a person involved in the incident. Details of officers injured on duty are not held centrally.

Elections (Candidates' Expenses)

Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress on the proposed review of the system of controls on candidates' expenses at elections, announced on 21 June, Official Report, columns 131-33.

Mr. Waddington: I have placed in the Library copies of a consultation paper on candidates' election expenses, which the Home Departments are issuing today to representatives of the main political parties and local authorities. The paper briefly sets out the main issues which arise and indicates possible ways forward. Views are invited from any interested individuals or organisations, and copies of the consultation paper can be obtained free of charge from D Division, room 739, Home Office, Queen Anne's gate, London SW1H 9AT; or Division IIA, room 227B, Scottish Home and Health Department, St. Andrew's house, Edinburgh EH1 3DE; or CPL Division, Northern Ireland Office, Whitehall, London SW1A 2AZ.

Radio Authority

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to establish the Radio Authority.

Mr. Waddington: I am setting up the Radio Authority in shadow form on 1 January 1990. The appointment of Lord Chalfont as chairman has already been announced. I have today appointed the following to become members on 1 January:

Mr. John Grant
Mr. Richard Hooper
Mrs. Jill McIvor
Mr. Ranjit Sondhi

One further appointment will be made in due course. Subject to parliamentary approval of the Broadcasting Bill, I intend to establish the authority with its full statutory powers on 1 January 1991.

Independent Television Commission

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to establish the Independent Television Commission.

Mr. Waddington: I am setting up the Independent Television Commission (ITC) in shadow form on 1 January 1990. The appointments of Mr. George Russell as chairman and Lord Chalfont as a member have already been announced. I have today appointed Lady Popplewell and Professor James Ring to become members on 1 January. Further appointments will be made in due course. Subject to parliamentary approval of the Broadcasting Bill, I intend to establish the ITC with its full statutory powers on 1 January 1991.

Visas (Indian Sub-Continent)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the refusal rate for queues 1, 2, 3 and 4 at each British post on the Indian sub-continent in 1989; and what were the comparable figures for 1988, 1987 and 1986.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 18 December 1989]: The information requested is not available centrally.

Perjury

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of people convicted of the offence of perjury in 1986, 1987, 1988 and in 1989; and what is the average length of the sentences.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 19 December 1989]: The information requested is given in the table. Data for 1989 are not yet available.

Offenders convicted of perjury and average sentence lengths England and Wales

	1986	1987	1988
Convictions	124	167	205
Numbers sentenced to immediate custody	61	52	77
Average sentence lengths (months)	9	11	8

Diplomatic Bags

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what discussions he has had with his counterparts in other European Community countries to ensure that diplomatic bags are subject to non-intrusive searches;

(2) what plans he has to require the non-intrusive searching of diplomatic bags entering and leaving the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have been asked to reply.

None.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether accountancy firms who enjoy a monopoly of the external audit function are required to publish their financial statements.

Mr. Redwood: Under section 389(6)(c) of the Companies Act 1985, a body corporate is not qualified for appointment as auditor of a company. Accountancy practices which undertake statutory audit of companies are established as sole traders or partnerships and, as such, are not required to publish accounts. The Companies Act 1989 removes the prohibition on the appointment of a body corporate as auditors and, once section 25 of the Act is brought into force, it will be open to accountants conducting statutory audits to incorporate if they so wish, in which case they will be subject to the statutory duties and responsibilities of companies.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will provide a list of the auditing firms which his Department has criticised since June 1979 that have been allowed to make auditing policy through their membership of the auditing practices committee and its working parties;

(2) whether any Arthur Andersen personnel have representatives on the accounting standards committee or its working parties, and on the auditing practices committee;

(3) whether since 1979 any individuals appointed to the auditing practices committee and its working parties have come from (a) firms criticised by his Department's inspectors and (b) firms sued for negligence by the Government.

Mr. Redwood: As I explained in the replies I gave on 27 November at columns 92-93, on 13 December at column 702 and on 18 December at column 22 to questions by the hon. Member, membership of the Accounting Standards Committee and the Auditing Practices Committee is a matter for the Consultative Committee of Accountancy Bodies, which has made clear that voting members of those committees are appointed on a personal basis and are not to regard themselves as delegates of sectional interests.

Auditors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the register of auditors which the recognised supervisory bodies are required to maintain under the Companies Act 1989 includes information relating to (a) criticisms of the firm by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors and (b) criticisms of firms by any disciplinary committee of the profession.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Corporate Insolvencies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the number of corporate insolvencies in 1988 and 1989, to date, in Britain; and in how many of those cases the companies in question received a going concern qualification in their last accounts prior to going into receivership.

Mr. Redwood: The chief executive of Companies house tells me that in Great Britain in the financial year 1988-89, and up to 30 November in the current year, 1,252 and 1,367 companies were placed in receivership, and 13,900 and 9,056 in liquidation respectively.

No information is available on the number of companies who, in their last accounts prior to receivership or liquidation, received a going concern qualification from their auditors.

Richards Shipbuilders Ltd.

Mr. Carttiss: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about an application from Richards Shipbuilders Ltd. for assistance from the shipbuilding intervention fund.

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about an application from Richards Shipbuilders Ltd. for assistance from the shipbuilding intervention fund.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am pleased to announce that I have approved in principle a grant from the shipbuilding intervention fund which will enable Richards Shipbuilders Ltd. confirm an order for a tug which will be constructed at its Great Yarmouth yard for the Alexandra Towing Co. Ltd. This order will maintain employment at this yard.

Credit Cards

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he intends to abolish the no discrimination rule imposed by credit card companies in the light of the Monopolies and Mergers report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: On 22 August, I published the report by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on the supply of credit card services in the United Kingdom. I announced that I would welcome the views of all interested parties on the MMC's recommendation to end the "no discrimination" rule in the United Kingdom. Under this rule, imposed by the credit card companies, traders are required to charge the same price for purchases made with Visa or Mastercard/Eurocard (which includes Access) credit cards as for those paid for by cash or other means.

I have received representations on this issue from a wide range of people including members of the credit card organisations, retailers and the general public. I have considered carefully, the views they expressed. In accordance with the advice of the Director General of Fair Trading, I have concluded that the no discrimination rule is anti-competitive. It restricts the freedom of retailers to set their own prices. This is a serious restriction on competition. Credit card purchases amounted to over £16 billion last year. Therefore I have decided that the rule should be brought to an end. I am asking the Director General of Fair Trading to seek the necessary undertakings. In the meantime, application of the rule remains a matter for the credit card companies.

The effect of ending the rule will be to give retailers the freedom to choose whether or not to charge the same whether payment is made by credit card or cash. It will be for retailers to decide whether to offer different prices. They will not be obliged to do so. I intend, subject to the statutory consultation procedures, to bring in regulations under the Consumer Protection Act 1987 to require that any price indication makes clear whether differential pricing applies.

Whether retailers find it attractive to take advantage of this new freedom will depend in part on the charges they themselves pay to the credit card companies. The MMC concluded that the level of profitability of five credit card companies accounting for some 80 per cent. of credit card lending last year was sufficiently above that which might have been expected in conditions of normal competition to be against the public interest. The MMC did not make any specific recommendations because of the prospect of increased competition. However, during the recent consultation period, considerable concern was expressed about the charges to retailers, including the interchange fee.

I have therefore decided to go further than the MMC recommended by taking steps to increase competition in this area. Credit card companies will have to provide the Director General of Fair Trading with information on the range of charges to retailers and the interchange fees which they have been making and to publish similar information on their current charges. As well as enabling the director general to keep the position under review, this should act as a spur to competition and should strengthen retailers' ability to negotiate the level of charges with them. I intend to discuss these additional remedies with the credit card organisations and their members before initiating the statutory consultation procedure that is required before making orders under the Fair Trading Act.

I announced last autumn that I was accepting the Commission's recommendation that the two credit card organisations, Visa and Mastercard-Eurocard should no longer restrict the freedom of issuers of their cards in the United Kingdom to act as merchant acquirers, recruiting traders to take credit cards and handling the subsequent transactions. The Director General of Fair Trading is seeking appropriate undertakings from these organisations. These measures in combination with increasing competition should remedy the adverse effects identified by the Commission in its report. Nevertheless, with the Director General of Fair Trading, I will watch developments closely. If necessary, I will consider taking further action.

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement indicating his preferred option for insurance cover connected with the use of credit cards in the retail sector.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 19 December 1989]: In August my Department issued a consultation document which proposed that where credit payment insurance and other ancillary services are offered as optional additions under a credit agreement, acceptance of the option should require a positive expression of acceptance by the borrower, such as the ticking of a box. A number of representations on this proposal have been received and are now under consideration.

Post Office (Procurement Activities)

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made by the Post Office in the implementation of the recommendations made in the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the Post Office's procurement activities.

Mr. Forth: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission reported on the Post Office's procurement activities in October 1986. The Post Office's initial response, produced in January 1987, partially rejected one and accepted the remainder of the report's 49 recommendations. A report on progress to October 1987 was placed in the Library in December 1987. Nearly half the MMC's recommendations had been implemented by that time.

I have now received the Post Office's report on progress to October 1989, which I am placing in the Libraries. It indicates that considerable further progress has been made and all but one of the recommendations (relating to the introduction of productivity schemes in supplies department depots) have now been implemented. My Department will continue to monitor the Post Office's progress in implementing this recommendation.

Telecommunications Council

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Telecommunications Council on 7 December.

Mr. Forth: The principal items for discussion were a proposed Commission directive under Article 90 of the treaty of Rome aimed at introducing competition into the Community market for telecommunication services and a related Council directive on a framework for open network provision (ONP) of telecommunication services.

The Council agreed the policy content of the Commission directive with a number of amendments designed to ensure that the introduction of competition would not interfere with the general availability of packet and circuit switched data services in each member state. The Council also agreed amendments on ONP which may be expected to lead to a common position on the proposed framework directive, probably before the end of this year.

The Government believe that this outcome was the best that could be achieved. In particular the essential market opening provisions of the article 90 directive have been retained. While the scope of the ONP directive will be more extensive than we had proposed, it should not impede our objective of enabling competition to develop without the constraint of unnecessary harmonisation.

Deregulation Reviews

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made under the rolling programme of deregulation reviews announced on 31 January by the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs.

Mr. Redwood: Of the 22 reviews announced in January all are complete or nearing completion. They have already resulted in a wide range of benefits to business. In some cases it has proved possible to eliminate requirements altogether, in others to update and streamline controls. Quantifiable savings to business from these completed reviews should exceed £10 million per annum. Government communications with business have also been improved through the consultations which have taken place, as has the service provided by Departments.

Our prime aim remains to remove the time loss and frustration caused to business by out-of-date or cumbersome requirements. We are therefore bringing forward consideration of a number of wider issues which have an impact particularly on the development of smaller businesses, together with reviews designed to identify regulatory barriers to building new businesses in various sectors.

The full list of new departmental reviews is as follows:

C & E—
- (i) Industrial oils reliefs; and
- (ii) Methylated spirits reliefs

  Review the burden placed on businesses by current administrative procedures, and consider whether the records required to be kept by users can be simplified.
- (iii) Production and dissemination of information to the trade and public

  Review will include the provision of VAT advice to business and the effectiveness of communications with new business.

DH—Review of CAPRICODE guidance

Review the procedures governing accountability in the NHS Building Programme (CAPRICODE) to ensure that no unnecessary restrictions are placed on the construction industry.

DSS—Service to business in the new National Insurance Contributions Unit

Review those areas of the Unit's work which provide a service to business and make recommendations on how these can be improved and burdens reduced.

DTI—
- (i) Company law exemptions for private companies

  Review the provisions for their impact on non-public companies.
- (ii) Regulations made under Part II of the Consumer Protection Act 1987

  Review the need for regulations in the light of the development of industry standards.
- (iii) CB radio licensing

  Review various options for improving the present system of CB licensing.
- (iv) Fixed-link radio user access system

  Introduce a user accessible database for radio fixed links.

DTp—Type approval procedures for equipment on merchant ships.

Review scope for changing procedures in order to reduce costs of UK ship-owners.

HO—Betting-shop hours of opening

Consider an extension of the permitted opening hours beyond the existing statutory closing time.

HSC—Strategy for negotiating EC health and safety Directives

Assess general lessons for present and future regulatory policy based on experience of negotiating EC health and safety Directives.

IR—PIID's

Review the PIID form and procedures with a view to reducing the burden they impose on employers.

MAFF—Export Refunds and Monetary Compensatory Amounts

Enquiry into product classification for which exports refunds and Monetary Compensatory Amounts are fixed, and the differentiation of refund rates by destination.

SO—

(i) The Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982.

Review the working of the Act, with particular reference to the scope for reducing inconsistencies in optional business licensing powers of local authorities.

(ii) Registration and inspection of independent schools in Scotland.

Review procedures to assess whether the system is burdensome for school proprietors and what scope exists for simplification.

EDU—Faster and simpler business licensing

Review feasibility of developing a cross-departmental public database to enable business to indentify quickly and clearly requirements to be met.

Arts and Design

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what expenditure was made by his Department on (a) the arts and (b) design in the last financial year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is as follows:

(a) nil,

(b) £13,874,000.

Grants

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will provide estimates showing for each financial year from 1987-88 to 1990-91 the amount of actual or planned expenditure on (a) regional selective assistance, (b) English Estates and (c) inner city task forces.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Actual expenditure in England on regional selective assistance, English Estates and inner city task forces for 1987-88 and 1988-89 and planned expenditure for 1989-90 is as follows:

£ million

	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90[1]
Regional Selective Assistance[2]	122·7	134·9	147·3
English Estates	47·0	45·5	50·0
Inner City Task Forces	[3]5·5	16·4	19·2

[1] Figures contained in the 1989-90 Supply Estimates.

[2] Regional Selective Assistance includes the Business Improvement Services and Exchange Risk Guarantee schemes as well as the main RSA project grants.

[3] DTI expenditure from November 1987 to end March 1988. Prior to November 1987 the Inner Cities Unit was located in the Department of Employment and therefore details of expenditure are not readily available to DTI.

Expenditure plans for 1990-91 will be published in the Public Expenditure White Paper in January.

Telephone Information Services

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what has been the level of funding of the independent committee for the supervision of standards of telephone information services in each year since its establishment;

(2) what have been the sources of the finding of the independent committee for the supervision of standards of telephone information services, in each year since its establishment;

(3) what is the total number of persons currently employed by the independent committee for the supervision of standards of telephone information services;

(4) what are the current funding arrangements for the independent committee for the supervision of standards of telephone information services.

Mr. Forth: These are matters for the independent committee for the supervision of standards of telephone information services (ICSTIS). No Governmnt funding has been provided to ICSTIS. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman, Louis Blom-Cooper, QC, ICSTIS, 67-69 Whitfield street, London W1P 5RL.

Export Credits Guarantee

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the countries with which trade is not supported by export credits guarantee.

Mr. Ridley: Libya and Zambia are the only countries for which ECGD export credit support is currently not available

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy that the introduction of private capital into the insurance services group of the Export Credits Guarantee Department will not precede the abolition of comparable state-owned agencies in France, Germany, Italy and Spain.

Mr. Ridley: I refer to the written answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood (Mr. Stewart) on 18 December 1989 at columns 23-24.

It is the Government's intention that private capital be introduced into the company created from ECGD's insurance services group quickly after its incorporation. The early completion of these changes is in the best interest of ECGD, insurance services, the staff of both organisations, their customers and United Kingdom exporters.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy that the headquarters of the insurance services group of the Export Credits Guarantee Department will remain in Cardiff subsequent to any introduction of private capital into the ownership of the agency.

Mr. Ridley: The location of the new company once privatised will be a matter for decision for the management and shareholder(s).

Mr Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what arrangements the Export Credits

Guarantee Department, insurance services group, Cardiff, have made with the Property Services Agency to occupy a new office building subsequent to ceasing to be a Government Department.

Mr. Ridley: Discussions have already been held with the Property Services Agency about possible future accommodation arrangements. No decisions have yet been taken.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of staff at the Export Credits Guarantee Department, insurance services group, Cardiff, have worked at projects group, London, during the past five years and vice versa.

Mr Ridley: The proportion of staff in the insurance services group, Cardiff, who have worked in the project group, London, during the last five years is about 0·15 per cent. and the proportion of staff in the project group who have worked in insurance services group is about 2 per cent.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of the work done by the Export Credits Guarantee Department computer centre at Llanishen arises from insurance services group, Cardiff, and how much arises from projects group, Cardiff.

Mr. Ridley: The Export Credits Guarantee Department computer centre at Llanishen currently provides services to the two business units in the following proportions:

Insurance Services Group—	75 per cent.
Project Group—	25 per cent.

It is expected that this will have changed by 1 April 1991 to give the following proportions:

Insurance Services Group—	80 per cent.
Project Group—	20 per cent.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make any future introduction of private capital into the insurance services group of Export Credits Guarantee Department conditional on satisfactory arrangements being made for future employment for the employees of the group.

Mr. Ridley: Any new employer will be bound by existing legislation which provides protection for the employees when the change of ownership takes place. Employment can best be safeguarded by growth in business. The changes I have announced will provide the best basis for such growth.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his written answer of 18 December to the hon. Member for Eastwood (Mr. Stewart), if he will make it his policy to give preference to the introduction of private capital into Export Credits Guarantee Department, insurance service group, only where due consideration has been given to the need to safeguard employment in the financial services industry in south-east Wales.

Mr. Ridley: Any new employer will be bound by existing legislation which provides protection for the employees when the change of ownership takes place. Employment can best be safeguarded by growth in business. The changes I have announced will provide the best basis for such growth.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the lease held by the Export Credits Guarantee Department, insurance services group, on the Crown buildings, Cathays park, Cardiff, precludes occupation by other than a Government Department or a charity.

Mr. Ridley: The lease on the Crown building land does include covenants about commercial activities and the implications of these are being examined by the Export Credits Guarantee Department and the Property Services Agency.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what is his most up-to-date estimate of the effect on employment at the Export Credits Guarantee Department, insurance group services, of the change of status and ownership announced by him in his written answer of 18 December to the hon. Member for Eastwood (Mr. Stewart);

(2) what is his most up-to-date estimate of the effect on total employment at Export Credits Guarantee Department in the Cardiff area of the change of status and ownership announced by him in a written answer to the hon. Member for Eastwood (Mr. Stewart) on 18 December.

Mr. Ridley: I see no reason why there should be any significant effect on employment. I believe the changes I have announced offer the best prospect of securing jobs for the future.

Toys

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what steps he will take to protect the viability of craft toymakers from the financial costs of adhering to the European Community toy safety regulations;

(2) what representations he has had from craft industries involved in toy making about the financial implications of the European Community toy safety regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I have received a number of representations from craft toy-makers about the financial implications of complying with the Toys (Safety) Regulations 1989. The new regulations will require toys to comply with common European safety standards and bear a CE mark as a declaration of conformity. However, where applicable they will replace regulations and requirements dealing with the safety of toys, including those produced by craft toymakers, that have been in force in the United Kingdom for some 15 years. I have explained that where a toy has been manufactured in accordance with the common standards the toymaker will be able to self-certify the toy as conforming and the toy will qualify to bear the CE mark.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals he has to seek to exempt craft toymakers from European community toy safety regulations.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 19 December 1989]: The EC directive on the safety of toys is a treaty obligation and we are required to implement it in full. Although the directive, and thus the United Kingdom implementing regulations, does include exemptions for certain products which might otherwise be thought of as toys, there are no exemptions for particular categories of toy manufacturer.

Regional Assistance

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list for each region, Scotland and Wales payments of regional development grants, regional selective assistance, regionalinvestment grants and regional innovation grants for this financial year and, where relevant, for 1988-89, and with his projections for 1990-91 and 1991-92; and if he will also express the figures in real terms at 1988-89 prices.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 18 December 1989]: The requested information, with regard to expenditure in 1988-89 and 1989-90 (to end November), in respect of the listed schemes of assistance is as follows:

	Regional Development Grants (£ million)	Regional Selective Assistance[1] (£ million)	Regional Investment Grants[2] (£ thousand)	Regional Innovation Grants[2] (£ thousand)
1988-89
East Midlands	7·9	1·0	10	nil
North East	78·7	33·5	234	32
North West	49·6	22·0	299	118
South West	6·6	4·9	61	13
West Midlands	nil	24·0	[3]n/a	[3]n/a
Yorkshire and Humberside	19·3	21·1	108	44
Scotland	76·6	37·7	231	51
Wales	58·6	36·2	182	36
1989-90[4]
East Midlands	6·9	0·5	117	50
North East	28·0	18·6	917	311
North West	17·9	14·9	762	99
South West	1·8	2·1	185	41
West Midlands	nil	13·5	[3]n/a	[3]n/a
Yorkshire and Humberside	8·0	7·0	629	120
Scotland	41·0	19·5	448	436
Wales	15·9	17·8	307	172

[1] Industrial and training grants only. Further payments of £2·9 million and £0·6 million which cannot be allocated to a specific region were made in 1988-89 and 1989-90 respectively.

[2] These grants, which make up the Regional Enterprise Grants scheme, are applicable only in Development Areas and the Intermediate Areas in South Yorkshire designated under the EC RESIDER programme.

[3] No designated areas in this region.

[4] To end November 1989.

Expenditure plans for 1990-91 and 1991-92 will be published in the public expenditure White Paper in January.

Deflators for part-years are not readily available. It would be inappropriate to use the deflator for 1989-90 as a whole to convert the outturn figures for the first eight months of the year only.

Accounting Procedures

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether in the last 10 years he or his predecessors, either by direction or informally, secured changes in the accounting conventions followed by British Telecom, Cable and Wireless, British Steel, Jaguar, Rover, Rolls-Royce or British Aerospace, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 18 December 1989]: When these companies were in the public sector, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry had powers to direct, with Treasury approval, the methods and principles according to which their statements of accounts were prepared. Details of when such directions were issued are not readily available and could be assembled only at disappropriate cost. Since privatisation, the accounting conventions used have been a matter for the chairman and board of each company in consultation with its auditors.

Product Labelling

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what level of resources his Department is currently committing to the promotion of multilingual product labelling in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 12 December 1989]: It is vital for products to be labelled in a language which the customer understands, and this message forms part of my Department's general single market campaign. However, there are no departmental resources devoted specifically to multilingual product labelling: the costs of such labelling should properly be borne by United Kingdom firms themselves.

ERDF Aid

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what is his best estimate of the level of European regional development fund aid commitments to all eligible public bodies in each of the last five years in (a) Bradford, (b) the west midlands and (c) South Yorkshire;

(2) what is his most up-to-date estimate of the total amounts of European regional development fund aid commitments to all eligible public bodies in 1989 and in 1990 in (a) Bradford, (b) the west midlands and (c) South Yorkshire.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 19 December 1989]: The information is as follows:

£ million

	Bradford	West Midlands	South Yorkshire
1984	4	18	21
1985	3	45	10
1986	10	43	19

Footwear Imports

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will list the reasons why the United Kingdom representative failed to give a firm response at the consultation meeting between the European Community Commission and member states in committee 288 on 5 December regarding the Commission's inquiry into footwear imports from South Korea and Taiwan; and what advice his Department subsequently gave to the Commission by the stated target date for comments of 15 December.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 18 December 1989]: My noble Friend the Minister for Trade had been carefully considering the views expressed by the industry and other member states before reaching a final decision on how the United Kingdom should respond to the Commission's report following its inquiry into imports of footwear from South Korea and Taiwan. He has concluded that the report does not make out an economic case for restrictions on imports of footwear from Taiwan and South Korea. The Commission has been told that consistently with our general approach on trade policy issues the United Kingdom Government are therefore opposed to such safeguard action on imports of footwear from South Korea and Taiwan. We have, however, suggested to the Commission that if they were to propose some form of surveillance licensing we would give this sympathetic consideration.

Babcock Fata

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what grants for research, development and investment in equipment were made to Babcock Fata or related companies from 1984 to date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 20 December 1989]: Payments totalling £61,795 have been made to Babcock Fata Ltd under the support for innovation scheme. This scheme closed in January 1988. No other grants have been made.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Unemployed People

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide estimates by sex for the number of claimants who will be removed from the unemployment count as a result of the introduction of the Social Security (Unemployment, Sickness and Invalidity Benefit) (Amendment) (No. 3) Regulations 1989; and if he will further break down these figures by sex into (a) part-time workers, (b) part-time and temporary workers and (c) short-time workers.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that figures are not available in the form requested; overall, we estimate that this measure will have no significant effect on the unemployment count.

Residential Care

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many boarders were paid by each Scottish local office in March for those in residential care on grounds of (a) old age, (b) very dependent elderly, (c) mental disorder, (d) drug or alcohol dependency, (e) mental handicap, (f) physical disability, under pension age, (g) physical disability over pension age and (h) others; and for those in nursing homes on the grounds of (i) mental disorder, (ii) drug or alcohol dependency, (iii) mental handicap, (iv) terminal illness, (v) physical disability under pension age, (vi) physical disability over pension age, and (vii) others;

(2) what is the number of boarders in nursing homes for Scotland, England and Wales by Department of Social Security region in the years from 1982;

(3) what is the number of boarders in residential care accommodation in Scotland by Department of Social Security local office during the last financial year;

(4) what is the number of boarders in residential care accommodation for Scotland, England and Wales by Department of Social Security region in the years from 1982.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend on 5 December at columns 157-58.

Miss Jane Brown

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement of the findings by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration on the results of his investigation under the Parliamentary Commissioner Act 1967 into a complaint made by Miss Jane Brown, 31 Moray road, Port Glasgow, (C850/88).

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: No. The hon. Member has had a full report from the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration who considered that his investigation had reached a satisfactory conclusion.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many claimants of unemployment benefit will be denied benefit in the travel-to-work areas in the constituency of Roxburgh and Berwickshire by imposition of the £43 weekly earnings rule;

(2) if he will list the proportion of claimants of unemployment benefit in each travel-to-work area in the United Kingdom who will be denied unemployment benefit by the new £43 weekly earnings rule.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mr Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of people who will be excluded from unemployment benefit by the new £43 weekly earnings rule.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: It is estimated that, in any one week, around 5,000 people declare earnings in excess of £43 and will lose unemployment benefit.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will undertake a full review of benefits available to claimants of unemployment benefit to include the implications of new patterns of work for those claiming benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We have no plans to undertake a full review of unemployment benefit. We have recently introduced a number of changes to make the benefit more relevant to current needs. We are of course monitoring the effects of those changes.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will contact each of the people who lost their entitlement to unemployment benefit on 1 January 1989 to inform them that they are entitled to reclaim that benefit in line with section 16(1)(c) of the Interpretation Act 1978 and the previous decision of the Social Security Commissioner in paragraph 5 of case CG/069/1988 and in case Z/10/4811/Norwich.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: An appeal has been lodged with the Social Security Commissioner against the social security appeal tribunal's decision. It would not be appropriate to anticipate the outcome.

Christmas Bonus

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would have been the present amount of the pensioners' Christmas bonus if it had maintained its 1979 real value.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The present amount of the Christmas bonus had it been raised by increases in prices since 1979 would have been £18.70.

Arts and Design

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what expenditure was made by his Department on (a) the arts and (b) design in the last financial year.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Discretion to make small-scale purchases of items of art is devolved to local managers and some initiatives for the commissioning of larger-scale murals for public waiting areas have taken place. The extent of expenditure and sponsorship in this and other areas of the arts is not normally separately identified, but our Newcastle central office carried out a special exercise and expenditure last year amounted to £4,359.

Personal Pension Plans

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to provide, under social security legislation, for special disclosure requirements by plan managers to those investing in unit-linked personal pension plans.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: As part of our response to the Occupational Pensions Board report we intend to review the disclosure requirements for occupational and personal pension schemes. This review will include information required by those investing in unit-linked personal pension plans.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are his assumptions for low community charge calculations of the level of income of a couple, one of whom is in work and who have no dependent children or other dependants, below which they may be eligible for rebate on their community charge.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is shown in the table.

Assumed community charge per person (£)	Level of income per week (£)
100	84·72
150	94·95
200	105·17
250	115·40

Notes:

1. The income figure is the level at which the minimum Community Charge Benefit of 50p a week will be payable for a couple under pension age, one of whom is working, neither of whom is disabled, who have no dependants, and who have savings of less than £3,000.
2. 1990-91 benefit rates have been used.

Personal Injuries

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security from what date the recovery scheme in section 22 of the Social Security Act 1989 will apply to compensation payments made for personal injuries; what amount is to be set for the lower limit of compensation payments below which offsetting will apply instead of recovery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The scheme will apply to any compensation payment made on or after 3 September 1990 where the injury occurred on or after 1 January 1989. The lower limit of compensation payments to which recovery will apply is £2,500 gross—that is before benefits have been deducted. This amount is substantially more than the figure suggested by Touche Ross and will reduce the number of cases to be dealt with by around 37 per cent. It recognises the representations made by the Association of British Insurers, the CBI, TUC and others about the lower limit. We expect to lay affirmative regulations before Parliament soon setting out the administrative details of the scheme.

Computerisation

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to what extent his Department's (a) budget and (b) staffing level has been cut for the year 1989-90 in the light of anticipated savings to be achieved through computerisation.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Department's administration budget for 1989-90 was settled during the 1988 public expenditure survey and published in the 1989 public expenditure Whie Paper (Cm 615). It reflected the wide range of the Department's activities, including its computerisation programme. If this programme had not been undertaken it is estimated that in the year 1989-90 the Department would have required 4,000 additional staff at a cost of some £42 million.

Sick Pay

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of people who would become eligible for (a) statutory sick pay and (b) sickness benefit if they were paid for the first three days of illness, and the cost of making such payments.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Executive Agencies

Mr Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress his Department has made towards establishing executive agencies; and what is the timetable for completion of each agency.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Resettlement Units Executive Agency was established in May 1989. We have also made a good deal of progress towards establishing the Information Technology Services Agency (ITSA) and National Insurance Contributions Unit (NICU), both of which are scheduled to commence in April 1990. The Social Security Benefits Agency is scheduled to commence in April 1991. Staff have been informed of progress.

We expect the agencies to develop further after their launch as they gain experience and adjust their approach to management in line with the needs of their business. Establishment of the agencies is just the first step in improving service to the public and the cost-effectiveness of social security administration.

Adoption

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many instances of complaint against local social security services he has received during the last five years from British citizens who have felt their efforts to adopt children from overseas have been hindered by lack of co-operation from social services staff.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have been asked to reply.

The Department receives representations from time to time from people who find that local authorities are unable to provide advice and services in connection with the proposed adoption of children from overseas. People who contemplate this very serious step are especially in need of skilled advice and counselling. We would hope that this would be available from local authorities, bearing in mind the guidance issued by the Department in 1987 to introduce the comprehensive adoption service: the guidance stated that counselling of prospective adopters, including those who seek to adopt from overseas, should be provided as part of the service. It is particularly important that such people should know that arrangements to adopt a child from overseas should be made only through properly authorised agencies or charitable organisations.

WALES

Natural Heritage

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all those representations he has received from voluntary organisations in Wales in response to his proposed merger of the Countryside Commission and Nature Conservancy Council, indicating those which are opposed and those in favour.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: We have received 13 representations from voluntary organiisations in Wales on the general proposals. It is not possible clearly to state in all cases that particular organisations are opposed or in favour. A number of organisations have raised questions and made some criticisms but I am delighted that many other organisations, including the chairmen and chief officers of the national parks in Wales, the National Farmers Union committee for Wales, the advisory committees for Wales of the Nature Conservancy Council and the Countryside Commission, have all welcomed the proposals.

Motor Neurone Disorders

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will establish a centre for the education of children with motor neurone disorders such as cerebral palsy; if he will visit the Peto Institute in Hungary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: My hon. Friend the Minister of State responsible for the disabled announced on 15 December a Government contribution towards the establishment of a new international Peto institute. The Welsh Office has been associated with the discussions leading to that announcement. Subject to the detailed negotiations, Welsh children, along with others from the United Kingdom, will have access to available places at the institute.

The Department is keeping in close touch with progress on the pilot conductive education project in Birmingham. Neither my right hon. Friend nor I have any current plans to visit Hungary but we are aware of the work of the Peto institute from reports of visits by other Government Ministers.

Roads

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the amounts for road building in north Wales which encompasses the use of European Economic Community money.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: In 1988, £14 million was committed from the European regional development fund for road building projects in the counties of Gwynedd and Clwyd.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the new money for road schemes announced in his publication "A55: the Road to Opportunity".

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The schemes to dual the A5 across Anglesey are being added to the trunk road improvement programme. Firm information on likely costs is not yet available. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answers I gave him on Thursday 7 December and Thursday 14 December regarding the A548 Dee crossing scheme.

Schools (Ministerial Visits)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of visits made this year, by county, to (a) nursery, primary and junior schools and (b) secondary schools by (i) the Secretary of State for Wales and (ii) the Minister of State, Welsh Office; and if he will name the schools involved.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: During 1989 my right hon. Friend visited one comprehensive school and one independent school with an age range of seven to 18. In the same period I visited seven primary schools and six secondary schools. A summary of these visits shown in the following table:

School	Date
Schools visits undertaken in 1989 by the Secretary of State for Wales
Abersychan comprehensive school, Gwent	27 June 1989
Howells independent school for girls (age range 7 to 18), South Glamorgan	21 November 1989
School visits undertaken in 1989 by the Minister of State for Wales
Ysgol Morfa Rhiannedd (county primary), Gwynedd	13 January 1989
Ysgol Dyffryn Conwy secondary school, Gwynedd	13 January 1989
Kitchener county primary school, South Glamorgan	26 January 1989
Fitzalan high school, South Glamorgan	26 January 1989
Glyncorrwg county primary school, West Glamorgan	3 February 1989
Cwm Tawe comprehensive school, West Glamorgan	3 February 1989
Ysgol Teilo Sant (county primary), Dyfed	17 February 1989
Ysgol Gyfun Bro Myrddin (secondary school), Dyfed	28 April 1989
Coed Cae comprehensive school, Dyfed	17 February 1989
Penywaun infant and junior schools, Mid Glamorgan	24 February 1989
Treorchy comprehensive school, Mid Glamorgan	24 February 1989
Ysgol Gyfun Cwm Rhymni (comprehensive), Mid Glamorgan	31 November 1989
Rhosgoch primary school, Powys	1 December 1989

Isle of Anglesey Road

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of money for dualling the Isle of Anglesey road will come from (a) the European Economic Community, (b) the local authority and (c) central government.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The A5 across Anglesey is a trunk road and duelling will be funded by central Government. At present there are no proposals to apply for EC funding.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what basis of assumed expenditure was his estimate made regarding the likely levels of community charge in the Arfon borough council and Cyngor Dosbarth Dwyfor areas for 1990-1991.

Mr. Peter Walker: The assumed expenditure levels (consistent with standard spending assessments) of £6·002 million for Arfon and £3·544 million for Dwyfor are based on 1989-90 budgets, adjusted for changes in functions and funding arrangements and inflated to 1990-91 levels.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assumption he made of the amount of income that (a) Arfon borough council and (b) Cyngor Dosbarth Dwyfor, would receive from the distribution of business rate when he assessed that their personal community charge per capita would amount to £156 and £155 respectively.

Mr. Peter Walker: My provisional community charge estimates of £156 for the Arfon area and £155 for the Dwyfor area assumed:

(a) £1,361,000 and

(b) £758,000

These figures were updated by my statement to the House on 18 December 1989 to:

(a) £1,347,000 and

(b) £733,000

I now estimate community charge for 1990-91 to be £153 in the Arfon area and £149 in the Dwyfor area if councils spend in line with my assumptions.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the maximum charge per annum on community charge payers in Wales arising from the charge levied on account of the expenditure of a community council.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have made no such estimate.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the relationship between those areas, which have been granted transitional relief for the community charge for 1990-91, and the levels of per capita household incomes, and the indices for deprivation for such areas; and whether any area of the Dwyfor district has met the criteria to be granted such transitional relief.

Mr Peter Walker: Transitional relief is calculated by comparing average rate bills for 1989-90 in community areas with my estimates of community charge levels. As such the scheme is intended to moderate the increases community chargepayers would otherwise face in moving from the domestic rating system. Income levels and indices of deprivation are thus not relevant to the operation of these transitional arrangements.

Provisional details of those communities who may be entitled to transitional relief were placed in the Library on 18 December 1989. No communities in Dwyfor were shown as receiving relief.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of community charge payers in Wales live in those communities eligible for transitional relief by way of additional grant; what is the total number of such people; and what is the maximum increase that will be made by way of individuals payment in such communities, on the basis of his statement to the House of 10 December.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my statement to the House on 18 December. Provisional details of communities which may be entitled to transitional relief have been placed in the Library.

No community area will face a charge more than a threshold amount (about £20) above the average domestic rate bill per adult in 1989-90 (assuming that councils spend in line with the settlement).

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what will be the total payment to be made by non-domestic ratepayers in Wales in 1990-91; and what is the total payment to be made by these ratepayers in 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Walker: The total payment to be made by non-domestic ratepayers in Wales in 1990-91 is estimated to be £446 million, of which £3 million will be retained by charging authorities to meet the costs of collection. No direct comparison can be made with the 1989-90 payment because of changes in the structure of exemptions and reliefs, and different arrangements for empty property rating, all of which take effect for the first time in 1990-91. The Welsh national non-domestic rating multiplier has been set such that the average business ratepayer will pay broadly the same in 1990-91, in real terms, as in 1989-90.

Arts and Design

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what expenditure was made by his Department on (a) the arts and (b) design in the last financial year.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: These are the responsibility of the Welsh Arts Council and Design Council respectively, neither of which is funded by the Welsh Office.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of (a) the total amount of regional selective assistance paid out by his Department since its introduction and (b) the average sum granted for each project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Expenditure on regional selective assistance[1] in Wales from the inception of the scheme to 31 March 1989 was £306 million. The average grant value[2] was almost £200,000.

[1] The expenditure quoted comprises payments of grants and loans (until 1979-80) under section 7 of the Industrial Development Act 1982, exchange risk losses on European loans (since 1981-82) and payments under the in-plant training scheme (since 1984-85) and the business improvement services scheme (since 1983-84).

[2] Based on the cumulative number and value of offers of section 7 assistance accepted to 31 March 1989 published in appendix 6, table 3 of the Industrial Development Act annual report for 1988-89.

Initiatives

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will consider a similar initiative for west Wales to that in operation in the valleys and proposed for north Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Welsh Office, the Welsh Development Agency, the Development Board for Rural Wales, the Wales Tourist Board, the local authorities and many others are all working together with the private sector further to develop the economy of west Wales. I am glad to say that unemployment in Dyfed has fallen by 45 per cent. since the last general election.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of the amount of development rural initiative venture and enterprise grant paid out by his Department in each year since its introduction; and if he will make a statement as to the future of the grant.

Mr. Peter Walker: The development of rural initiative venture and enterprise grant scheme is operated by the Welsh Development Agency (WDA) and the Development Board for Rural Wales (DBRW) in their respective territories. Since its introduction initially on an experimental basis, in March 1986, these bodies have made grant payments shown in the following tables:

Following an independent evaluation of the experimental scheme it was reintroduced in September 1989. I refer my hon. Friend to answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Delyn (Mr. Raffan) on 27 July 1989 for further details.

	WDA £	DBRW £
1986-87	250,000	32,361
1987-88	420,000	91,938
1988-89	430,000	117,288

Rural Conversion Grant

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of the amount of rural conversion grant paid out by his Department each year since its introduction; and if he will make a statement as to the future of the grant.

Mr. Peter Walker: The rural conversion grant scheme is operated by the Welsh Development Agency (WDA) and the Development Board of Rural Wales (DBRW) in their respective territories. Since the scheme's inception these bodies have made grant payments shown in the following table:

	WDA £	DBRW £
1983-84	—	18,900
1984-85	—	17,780
1985-86	163,000	39,500
1986-87	230,000	21,655
1987-88	366,000	15,612
1988-89	967,000	86,784

Urban Investment Grant

Mr. Nicholas Bennett To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of the urban investment grant paid out by his Department since its introduction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Since the introduction of UIG in April 1989, 10 projects have been approved with a total grant award of nearly £2·8 million. This is expected to bring forward over £10·3 million of private sector investment and to create over 600 permanent and nearly 270 temporary construction jobs.

Cardiff Bay

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State of Wales (1) if he will place a copy in the Library of letters of warning sent by him in 1989, to the chairman of the board of Cardiff Bay development corporation about development in the Cardiff Bay development corporation designated area;

(2) if he will publish his correspondende with the chairman of the board of Cardiff Bay development corporation asking the corpoartion to expedite development in the bay area;

(3) what requests have been sent by him to the chairman of the board of Cardiff Bay development corporation to expedite development in the Cardiff Bay development corporation.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have not made such a request. I am delighted with the progress that is being made to the benefit of Cardiff and of Wales, progress that should have the support of all Welsh Members of Parliament.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his most up to date estimate of total jobs lost to the Cardiff bay area subsequent to the breakdown of negotiations between developers and the Cardiff Bay development corporation in (a) 1988 and (b) 1989.

Mr. Peter Walker: Negotiations between developers and the Cardiff Bay development corporation are entirely a matter for the corporation. The development of the Cardiff bay area will create many thousands of jobs over the coming years and splendid progress has been made to see that this objective is achieved.

Urban Programme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list concerning the urban programme the (a) community and social provision and (b) voluntary and independent schemes grants and projects in each of the boroughs and districts of each of the counties of Wales giving their cash backing, employment consequences and objectives for 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Grist: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the Clwyd urban programme and urban development moneys and schemes for 1988 and 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The information as requested is shown in the following tables:

Second Homes

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on second homes in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given on 26 May by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State.

Roadbuilding

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is (a) the amount of transport supplementary grant he is making available to county councils in local roadbuilding, (b) the amount estimated by his Department to be used in local roadholding from revenue support grant, (c) the amount for local roadbuilding from capital receipts and (d) the amount for local roadbuilding from the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Transport grant support is given only to eligible (over £5 million) schemes. The amount of grant to be paid in 1990-91 is £26·8 million. The £86·6 million gross capital for roads and transport for 1990-91 which my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State announced on 29 November assumes that authorities will spend £0·6 million of their capital receipts. Revenue support grant is unhypothecated and it is for local authorities to decide their own spending priorities; similarly no estimate is available of the amount for local roadbuilding from the community charge.

Council House Building

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he will take to encourage council house building for 1990.

Mr. Grist: It is for local authorities to decide about housing priorities, taking account of local needs and achieving value for money.

Housebuilding

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of private housebuilding starts for 1987, 1988 and 1989; what is the predicted start number for 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Private housebuilding starts in Wales were:

	Number
1987	8,741
1988	10,892

Figures are not yet available for 1989 as the year has not yet ended but 8,084 were started in the first nine months. Forecasts for 1990 are a matter for the private housebuilding industry.

Salmonella

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to hold a public inquiry allowing tests at public health laboratories in the wake of the Clwyd salmonella outbreak.

Mr. Grist: I have already announced that the Department is conducting an internal review.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to publish his findings following his internal inquiry into the Clwyd salmonella outbreak.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 20 December.

Housing Revenue Accounts Subsidy

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will announce his initial housing revenue account subsidy determinations for 1990-91.

Mr. Grist: The housing revenue account subsidy determinations for 1990-91 have been made today. Every local housing authority in Wales has been sent a copy of the determinations together with provisional figures on which its subsidy entitlement will be based. The figures for each individual authority are subject to change in the light of new information supplied by the authority itself. Copies of the determinations and of the provisional figures for all authorities are being placed in the Library and the Vote Office.

The new housing revenue account subsidy was introduced by the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. It replaces the existing main housing subsidy, the rent rebate element in housing benefit subsidy and the element in rate support grant related to authorities' own housing costs.

Each authority's subsidy will be determined in accordance with the formulae prescribed in the determinations. For 1990-91, the formula assumes that there will be a national increase of 2 per cent. in gross rent income together with an allowance of 5 per cent. for inflation. However, unlike previous years, the determinations provide for different guideline rent increases in different authorities instead of a uniform increase for all authorities receiving subsidy. The rent guidelines for 1990-91 are set by reference to the value of each authority's housing stock.

For 1990-91, the subsidy formula provides for a 3 per cent. real terms increase in the provision for management and maintenance expenditure. The allowance will be related to authorities' past expenditure.

The subsidy formula also takes into account the full cost of loan charges and of rent rebates, subject to safeguards to prevent double subsidy and to provide an incentive for the efficient operation of the rent rebate scheme.

Rechem (Pontypool)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now arrange for further soil samples to be taken around the Rechem incinerator at Pontypool designed to detect polychlorinated biphenyls at levels significantly lower than 200 parts per billion.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 20 December 1989]: I am considering what further action may be necessary in the light of the recent results of monitoring undertaken by the Welsh Office in the Pontypool area.

Air Pollution

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what action he intends to take following the identification by Her Majesty's inspectors of pollution of local contamination above background levels by polychlorinated biphenyls at Ordnance Survey grid reference number SH 5101; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what action he intends to take, following the identification by Her Majesty's inspectors of pollution of local contamination above the established background levels by dioxins and furans at Ordnance Survey grid reference (a) SO 5101, (b) SN 5101 and (c) SH 5151; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 20 December 1989]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given today by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State at the Environment Department in relation to levels at locations in England.

Earnings

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report tables showing the proportion of (1) manual, (2) non-manual and (3) all full-time employees earning less than (a) £157, (b) £160, (c) £163, and (d) half average earnings a week, for (i) men, (ii) women, and (iii) all full-time employees excluding overtime, shift and public borrowing requirements premia, in each county in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 11 December 1989]: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Monetary System

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with other European Community Ministers regarding the European monetary system and political co-operation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: European monetary union was discussed briefly at the Foreign Affairs Council held on 18 and 19 December in Brussels, and political co-operation at the European Council held in Strasbourg on 8 and 9 December.

Vietnamese Boat People

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether identity passes are to be provided for Vietnamese boat people returning to Vietnam.

Mr. Maude: All Vietnamese citizens carry identity cards containing a photograph and thumb print. We have no reason to believe that identity cards will not be issued to the returnees. This is one of the issues which will be raised in the course of the embassy's monitoring exercise.

Bulgaria

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make all information in the hands of the Government available to the Lukanor inquiries into corruption in Bulgaria under its former rulers.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have received no such request from the Bulgarian authorities.

Diplomatic Bags

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to non-European Community countries urging them to permit the non-intrusive searching of diplomatic bags.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

Falklands Fishing Company

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he is making to the report by Mr. Stewart Boyd QC in relation to Mr. Brian Cummings over Falklands Fishing Company losses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Mr. Stewart Boyd QC was commissioned by the Governor of the Falkland Islands to inquire into the affairs of Seamount Limited, a joint venture between Stanley Fisheries Ltd., a subsidiary of the Falkland Islands Development Corporation, and Seaboard Offshore Ltd., a UK company.

The report's contents and findings are entirely a matter for the Falkland Islands Government who are responsible for the operation of the Falkland Islands Development Corporation.

Departmental Papers

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which of his Department's papers have been made available to the public since 1 October 1988.

Mr. Sainsbury: Between 1 October 1988 and 30 September 1989, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office —excluding the Overseas Development Administration —made the following papers available to the public on request:

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council on 18 and 19 December.

Mr. Hurd: I represented the United Kingdom at the Foreign Affairs Council and at a working dinner with the Soviet Foreign Minister in Brussels on 18 December. My hon. Friend, the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, represented the United Kingdom at a joint EC/EFTA Ministerial meeting on 19 December.

The Council began with a discussion of follow-up to decisions taken at the Strasbourg European Council, in particular on the European bank for reconstruction and development, and on economic and monetary issues.

The Council took note of the Commission's report on meetings with the US Administration on 14 and 15 December and confirmed the importance it attaches to close EC/US relations. I and other Ministers warmly welcomed Secretary of State Baker's wish, expressed in his recent speech in Berlin, to see a further strengthening of the United State's relationship with the Community.

On specific EC/US issues, Ministers discussed the implications of the findings of the GATT panel on the US complaint against the EC's oilseeds regime, and expressed concern at lack of progress in the dispute over import of meat treated with hormones.

The Council then discussed the Community's relations with Japan. It also agreed to the submission in Geneva on 20 December of a paper on long-term agricultural reform in the Uruguay round.

The Council called for early consideration of a mandate for the negotiation of a trade and commercial and economic co-operation agreement with the GDR. It also took note of a Commission report, completed on 18 December, on Turkey's application for EC membership and agreed that it should be examined in depth.

The Council also approved the Commission's negotiating mandate for a trade and commercial and economic co-operation agreement with Argentina and agreed a mandate for the negotiation of a second stage trade agreement with the Gulf Co-operation Council. The Commission informed the Council that negotiations with Andorra on a customs union had been successfully completed. The Council also reached a satisfactory agreement on the Poseidon programme of support for the French overseas departments.

On 18 December, the Commission and presidency, on behalf of the Community, signed a trade and commercial and economic co-operation agreement with the Soviet Union, and a second agreement on textiles. The co-operation agreement is an important landmark in the EC's relations with the Soviet Union, symbolic of the new relationships emerging between the Community and eastern and central European countries as political reforms and economic restructuring take hold. The agreement lays the foundations for a stronger EC relationship with the Soviet Union, which we welcome. Its significance, and the importance of developments in the Soviet Union and eastern Europe, was noted at the subsequent dinner with Mr. Shevardnadze.

On 19 December EC and EFTA Ministers agreed to open substantive negotiations on a new, more structured relationship in the first half of next year. Our joint aim is to extend as far as possible the single market to include EFTA. The United Kingdom fully supports this important decision, and will continue to play a full and constructive role in the negotiating process: a successful outcome would open the way to a new stage in EC-EFTA relations, benefitting all parties, and reflecting the Community's commitment to a liberal single market, open to all.

The text of the joint conclusions agreed by EC and EFTA Ministers on 19 December will be placed in the Library of the House.

Central American Presidents

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received on the outcome of the meeting of Central American Presidents in San Isidro de Coronado, Costa Rica, on 10 to 12 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have been encouraged by the positive outcome of the meeting, which condemned armed action and terrorism by rebel forces in the region and expressed solid support for the democratically elected Government of President Cristiani. I have placed in the Library of the House a copy of the five Presidents' statement of 12 December.

SCOTLAND

Health Service

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each year since 1970 the number of patients on hospital in-patient waiting lists in Scotland at 30 March and 30 September of each year.

Mr. Rifkind: The information available is set out in the table.

Number of persons on waiting lists for NHS hospitals at 31 March and 30 September, Scotland

The statistical system on which these figures are collected including the revision which took place in 1988 is explained in ISD Statistical Bulletin 1/88, a copy of which is in the Library.

Scottish Information Office

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of recent changes in office accommodation in the Scottish information office corridor of New St. Andrew's house.

Mr. Rifkind: There have been no recent changes.

BBC Scotland

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the occasions on which each Scottish Office Minister, in each of the past 12 months, he required the Scottish information office to make representations about alleged programme bias to BBC Scotland;

(2) if he will make a statement on recent correspondence between BBC Scotland and the Scottish Office concerning alleged editorial bias;

(3) what representations he has made to BBC Scotland concerning the integrity of coverage accorded to his Department by it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The Scottish Office has had need to make various representations to the BBC on these matters. So far as alleged programme bias is concerned, it is essential that the BBC charter is applied throughout the United Kingdom in a consistent manner.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what distribution was given to recent correspondence between Mr. Jack Regan of BBC Scotland, and Mr. Donald Stewart, of the Scottish information office.

Mr. Rifkind: As with all correspondence, it was distributed to those within the Scottish Office who appeared to have an interest.

Correspondence

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to ensure that correspondence addressed to the Scottish Office is dealt with only from within the Scottish Office and that none is referred for answer to any party organisation.

Mr. Rifkind: It is Scottish Office policy to reply to all correspondence correctly addressed to it. Correspondence not falling properly within the responsibilities of the Scottish Office will normally be forwarded to whatever other body appears to be the correct recipient.

Trials

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to his answer of 12 December, Official Report, column 558, he will list each of the sheriff courts in which the number of summary criminal trials adjourned in the period 1 January to 30 September 1989 due to lack of court time exceeded 5 per cent. of the total number of trials set down in the period; and if, in each case, he will give the actual number of trials so adjourned and the percentage of the total number of trials set down.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The list of courts is as follows.

1 January 1989 to31 March 1989
Haddington[1]
Alloa
Stirling

1 April 1989 to 30 June 1989
Falkirk[1]
Stirling[1]
Haddington[1]

1 July 1989 to 30 September 1989
Stirling
Dunfermline[1]
Falkirk[1]
Dumfries[1]

[1] Indicates that target not met for only part of 3 month period.

Information on the actual number of trials adjourned and the percentage of the total number of trials set down is not held centrally.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Alan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on non-domestic rates in 1990-91.

Mr. Rifkind: In my statement to the House on 26 July about the revenue support grant settlement for 1990-91, I announced that I intended to reduce the rate bill for Scottish business next year by £80 million below what it would otherwise have been. I have now decided to apply this sum to reduce the rate poundage for all local authorities by 6·25 per cent. This will mean that all non-domestic ratepayers throughout Scotland will benefit from this further move to reduce their burden. The table shows the rate poundage which I intend to prescribe for each local authority in an order which I shall lay before Parliament early in the new year. The table also indicates the extent of the reduction in poundage at an individual ratepayer level as a result of our policy.

It is implicit in our policy that, over a period, the 40 per cent. derating which at present applies to manufacturing and freight industry in Scotland should be eliminated. But my intention is that the phasing out of industrial derating should be co-ordinated with the phasing in of a unified business rate north and south of the border. This will give manufacturing and freight industry the assurance that the effect of reducing the level of derating will in any particular year be neutral. For all other business sectors, the reduction will be entirely beneficial. Having regard to my decision to reduce rate poundages by 6·25 per cent., I intend to set the level of industrial derating next year to 35 per cent., a decrease of 5 per cent. on the present level. The position will be reassessed each year until a unified business rate has been achieved and industrial derating has been eliminated entirely.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his proposed community charge transitional relief scheme.

Mr. Rifkind: I have today sent to the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities a paper describing the conclusions I have drawn after consultation with it. I intend to lay regulations in the new year which will provide for the introduction of the scheme.

Electricity Boards

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to receive the annual reports and accounts for 1988-89 of the Scottish electricity boards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I have now received the annual reports and accounts of the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board and the South of Scotland electricity board. These have been laid before the House. Notwithstanding the position shown in the accounts at 31 March 1989, I have confirmed to the boards, with the agreement of Treasury that they shall continue to have access to advances which can be made by me under section 24(1) of the Electricity (Scotland) Act 1979 subject to the limit set out in section 29(1) of that Act, as amended, until the transfer date defined in section 67(4) of the Electricity Act 1989.

Nursery Education

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what extra resources he is proposing to devote to the promotion, development and provision of local authority nursery places in Scotland; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is his policy regarding promoting an increase in local education authority provision of nursery places in Scotland;

(3) what research he is currently undertaking to estimate the demand for local authority nursery places in Scotland;

(4) what targets he has set for the increase in provision of local authority nursery education over the next five years.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 20 December 1989]: It is for education authorities themselves to determine, within the resources available to them, the level of nursery education places they wish to provide for their area, having regard to local circumstances and competing priorities. They are also responsible for estimating demand and setting any targets.

ENVIRONMENT

Social Landlords

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to prevent private companies setting up as social landlords, obtaining a council dowry and then defaulting on their responsibilities.

Mr. Chope: Under the Housing Act 1988, tenants' choice landlords are required to meet stringent criteria if they are to be approved by the Housing Corporation to seek to acquire property under tenants' choice.

Only responsible applicants with a long-term commitment to the provision of rented housing for those who need it will be approved. All applicants will also have to give a series of binding undertakings in a deed under seal to the corporation, regarding the way they operate.

A negative valuation or "dowry" may arise where repairs are necessary to bring transferring property up to the standard required by the public sector landlord's repairing obligations. Disputed valuations are set on statutory principles by the district valuer.

After a valuation is set, an approval landlord wishing to acquire property under tenants' choice is required to make a detailed offer to the tenants on a range of matters including repairs. If the tenants vote to accept the offer and transfer proceeds the offer is contractually binding on the landlord.

Urban Development

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list for each qualifying authority (a) the number of inquiries, applications and approvals relating to either urban development grant, or urban regeneration grant in 1987-88 and (b) the number of inquiries, applications and approvals relating to city grant in 1988-89;

(2) if he will publish a table which lists those qualifying authorities which did not win (a) any approvals for either urban development grant or urban regeneration grant in 1987-88 and (b) any city grant approvals in 1988-89.

Mr. Moynihan: The information requested is shown in the table:

[1] External financing limits.
[2] Includes urban development grant and urban regeneration grant.
[3] Includes current and capital expenditure funded by the programmes of various Government Departments and local authority self-financed expenditure.

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing for every qualifying authority the amount of urban programme aid spent in each year from 1986-87 to 1988-89 on (a) new industrial and commercial buildings, (b) improving and converting industrial and commercial buildings, (c) land improvement, (d) housing and (e) other buildings which fulfil a social purpose.

Mr. Moynihan: I am arranging for copies of the information requested to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amount of urban programme aid was allocated to each of the 57 qualifying authorities in 1987-88 and in 1988-89.

Mr. Moynihan: The amount of urban programme aid allocated to each of the 57 qualifying authorities and district health authorities in these areas for 1987-88 and 1988-89 is shown in the table. The figures do not include the amounts topsliced for the Merseyside special allocation, residual traditional urban programme commitments, low-attaining pupils programme and research.

Note:
The information given in column 2 relates to the number of quarters since the establishment of each UDC for which data is available. Figures for Merseyside and London Docklands relate only to information available for the most recent 5 years.

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide estimates showing for each financial year from 1987-88 to 1990-91 the amount of actual or planned expenditure designed to support the urban programme.

Mr. Moynihan: The figures showing the total amount of expenditure for the urban programme for the years 1987-88 to 1990-91 are as follows. These figures include the amounts topsliced for the Merseyside task force, residual traditional urban programme, low-attaining pupils programme and research.

	£ million

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) the factors and (b) the figures used to determine the percentage increase in the 1990-91 standard spending assessments to take account of the costs arising from the geographical location of Surrey county and Spelthorne borough councils.

Mr. Chope: The standard spending assessments for all authorities in the south-east standard region are adjusted to take account of higher labour costs in the region as identified by standardised earnings for an appropriate range of occupations from the new earnings survey for 1988. The precise adjustments vary from service block to service block according to the proportion of total costs represented by labour costs. Provisional figures are set out in annex F to the draft distribution report which my right hon. Friend placed in the Library on 6 November.

Pollution

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the appeals under section 10 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 currently under consideration by his Department; how many decisions have been issued since 27 July; and what steps he is taking to increase the speed of progress.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Following is a list of the appeals currently under consideration showing the dates they were first lodged. Three decisions have been issued since 27 July. Internal reorganisation of staff will allow greater priority to be given to these appeals in future, and changes have also been made to the various administrative procedures in order to speed up the decision-making process.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what action he intends to take following the identification by Her Majesty's inspectors of pollution of local contamination above background levels by polychorinated biphenyls at Ordnance Survey grid reference numbers (a) NY 5151, (b) NZ 5101, (c) NZ 0151, (d) SE 0101 and (e) TR 3666; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what action he intends to take following the identification by Her Majesty's inspectors of pollution of local contamination levels of dioxins and furans above the established background levels at Ordnance Survey grid reference numbers (a) NY 5101, (b) NZ 5151, (c) SE 0101, (d) SE 0151, (e) SU 5101; (f) TQ 0151; (g) TR 0151; (h) SK 0202 and (i) NT 0301; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 20 December 1989]: The report by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has shown PCBs, dioxins and furans to be ubiquitous in United Kingdom soils. As expected levels are higher where there is a history of heavy industry and urbanisation. I am, however, informed that the levels of these compounds found at the locations mentioned do not pose a direct risk to human health. Further work will concentrate on sampling around those processes having the potential to release significant amounts of these compounds.

Clause 28 Prosecutions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the details of all prosecutions that have taken place under clause 28 of the Local Government Act 1988.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Section 28 of the Local Government Act 1988 (which prohibits local authorities from intentionally promoting homosexuality) does not create any criminal offence: there can therefore be no prosecutions under it.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to inform people of their rights to protect their confidentiality during the period remaining for implementation of the community charge in England and Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I am not aware that the implementation of the community charge in the manner advised jointly by the Department and the local authority associations poses any threat to confidentiality.

Waste Paper

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the quantity of waste paper removed from the House in an average week; and what proportion of this consists of unsolicited mail or other unused matter.

Mr. Chope: The quantity of paper removed from the Palace averages 2 tonnes per day, with a maximum of 4 tonnes per day. It is not possible to estimate the proportion of this which is unsolicited mail, or other unused matter. The waste paper is sent for recycling.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will arrange for Property Services Agency employees' severance terms to be no less favourable than those granted to workers in ordnance factories and dockyards;

(2) if he will make a statement on his discussions with the United States forces on the future of the Property Services Agency;

(3) when he hopes to announce the results of the study of the formalities of the relationship between the United States Air Force and the Property Services Agency when the Property Services Agency has been privatised.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 13 December 1989]: There have been several discussions with representatives of United States forces about their future relationship with PSA since my right hon. Friend's statement of 25 May 1988. Further discussions of the implications of privatisation are now in progress as part of the study I referred to in the debate on the Property Services Agency and Crown Suppliers Bill on 6 December. This study is being led by the Ministry of Defence with full PSA involvement. My right hon. Friend will make an announcement about the continuing role of a privatised PSA in providing services to United States forces in the United Kingdom as soon as conclusions have been reached.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has in relation to regulation 7 of the principal Civil Service pensions scheme concerning Property Services Agency employees.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 13 December 1989]: On pensions, we shall make it clear to purchasers that we expect them to offer terms which are broadly comparable with those of the principal Civil Service pension scheme. The terms that they offer will be subject to analysis by the Government Actuary. If they are assessed as not being as good as the Civil Service scheme, some means will be found to ensure that the staff are not disadvantaged in respect of the overall terms and conditions of service.

On redundancy, the purchaser will be required to provide compensation terms which, as far as possible, are identical to those the staff have at present.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the Government Actuary has advised about the Property Services Agency pension terms offer.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 13 December 1989]: Advice on an offer has not been sought.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish for each water authority in England the estimated percentage held by (a) individual shareholders and (b) financial institutions as on the first day of trading in the new companies.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 19 December 1989]: The allocations to applicants in each of the nine English water companies were announced on 11 December. The offer of shares to the general public in each company was oversubscribed to an extent that the clawback arrangements set out in the prospectus were triggered. As a result, 39·25 per cent. of the shares in each company were allocated to institutions and 46·875 per cent. of the shares in each company were allocated to applicants in the retail public offer.

City of London Heliport

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will call in the planning application submitted to the corporation of the City of London for the construction of a heliport adjacent to the Cannon Street railway bridge; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if there will be a public inquiry on the planning application for the proposed City of London heliport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: This application has been made only recently and my right hon. Friend is considering its implications. The corporation of the City of London, as local planning authority, is responsible for deciding planning applications within its area. In determining applications, the corporation is required to take into account all material planning considerations.

MINIS 10

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the outcome of the full consultation and discussion on MINIS 10 within Government promised by the then Minister of State in Standing Committee on 4 May.

Mr. Chris Patten: Copies of MINIS 10 were placed in the Library on 15 November 1989.

British Rail Land, Nottingham

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now use his powers to order the sale of the British Rail-owned land between Sainsbury's and Gunn and Moores in Nottingham.

Mr. David Hunt: I understand that the British Rail Property Board is today discussing its disposal plans for the land. It would be premature for the Secretary of State to become statutorily involved at this juncture.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to reduce the import and export of toxic waste.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Environmental Protection Bill contains provisions to restrict or prohibit the import or export of any type of waste into or out of the United Kingdom, in order to prevent risk of harm to the environment or human health, or to conserve disposal resources.

Satellite Television Dishes

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment under what statutory enactment an individual is obliged to apply to the local planning authority for permission to erect a satellite dish on a private dwelling house.

Mr. Howard: Class H of part 1 of schedule 2 to the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988 grants permission to install a single satellite antenna on or within the curtilage of a dwellinghouse provided the antenna's maximum diameter does not exceed 90 cm and it does not project above the highest part of the house's roof. Otherwise, specific planning permission is necessary under section 23(1) of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971.

Coventry Council (Ombudsman's Report)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further action has been taken in the cast of Coventry city council and Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Quin and Mrs. Havels née Quin since the answer to the hon. Member for Pembroke of 22 February at columns 696-97.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I will write to my hon. Friend.

1 and 2 Bridge Street, London

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who owns Nos. 1 and 2 Bridge street, London, SW1; whether the building is listed; and whether there are any proposals to demolish or improve the building.

Mr. Chope: Nos. 1 and 2 Bridge street, which are Crown property, are listed grade II. They form part of the Bridge street site which is being redeveloped to provide additional parliamentary accommodation. Proposals for the second phase, which includes Nos. 1 and 2 Bridge street, were sent to the Services Committee last month.

Norris Green Estate, Liverpool

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Minister of State, the hon. Member for Wirral West, (Mr. Hunt) will be responding to the letter from the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby of 15 September in respect of the Norris Green housing estate in Liverpool.

Mr. Howard: I have written to the hon. Member.

Homelessness

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his Department's estimates of the number of families who will present themselves as homeless in (a) London, (b) England in each of the years from 1990 to 2000 inclusive.

Mr. Chope: The Department has no such estimates.

Crown Premises

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment approximately how many complaints Her Majesty's Government have received from private landlords about the poor maintenance and rundown appearance of Crown-occupied premises; and what effect he estimates such complaints have had on the willingness of lessors to have the Property Services Agency as a tenant.

Mr. Chope: No information is held centrally about complaints by landlords of poor maintenance. The National Audit Office referred in its report "The Management of the Civil Estate" to the only two cases which came to light following a specific enquiry to PSA regions in 1986 for evidence of cases where landlords had refused to grant leases.

There is no evidence that those two cases have affected the general willingness of lessors to have PSA as a tenant.

Control Properties

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the results of his evaluation of the Property Services Agency's selection of control properties experiment, terminated in the autumn of 1988.

Mr. Chope: The radical option experiment to which I believe the hon. Member refers has provided valuable lessons for Government Departments and the Agency when they assume their new responsibilities for property management from April 1990.

Accommodation (Free Assets)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the outcome of his review of free assets, in relation to the value of accommodation, as described in the National Audit Office report on the Property Services Agency, section 4:28.

Mr. Chope: For 1990-91 it has been decided that opportunity cost rents will be charged on Departmental Estate properties in the same way as on common user estate properties. Property Holdings will act as agents for the Treasury in assessing rents and collecting them.

Property Services Agency Estate Surveyors

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the result of his consideration of improvements in the Property Services Agency estate surveyors information system and in the longer-term estate support system.

Mr. Chope: Changes to the Property Services Agency estate surveyor information system (ESIS) have been considered in the context of the reorganisation of PSA from 1 April 1990 as announced in the statement by my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State on 25 May 1988. By that date PSA services will require a more flexible and responsive resource cost management system. A weekly diary capture system is now being developed. This will be in place by 1 April 1990 and the ESIS system will then be abandoned.

Norfolk House, East Kilbride

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why Norfolk house, East Kilbride, was vacated in 1984; when the lease of Norfolk house expires; and what is the annual cost.

Mr. Chope: The occupying Department, Inland Revenue, vacated the premises since they were considered to be unsuitable eitner for adaptation under the computerised office programme or as a training centre. PSA (Scotland) is currently negotiating abandonment of the lease which is scheduled to expire on 24 March 2029. Annual costs vary from year to year but including rental approximate at £200,000.

Police and Fire Brigade Pay

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provision has been made in the standard spending assessment of local authorities for next year in respect of pay awards for the police force and the fire brigade.

Mr. Chope: The control totals for each of the standard spending assessment service blocks take account of all the costs of providing a standard level of service. Provisional figures are set out in annex B to the draft distribution report which my right hon. Friend placed in the Library on 6 November.

Water Meter Trials

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will obtain information from the Yorkshire water authority as to why the local people in the Normanton meter trial area were not given the opportunity to consider the draft code of practice for water leakage before it was submitted to the director general as promised in the letter of 29 August from his Department to the hon. Member for Normanton; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The draft code will apply to all Yorkshire Water's domestic customers who are metered, not just those customers in the trial area. We did, however, ask Yorkshire Water to give the local liaison committee on the south Normanton trial an opportunity to comment on the draft code before it was submitted for approval to the director general. I understand that Yorkshire Water subsequently passed the committee's comments, including those from the hon. Member, to the director general with the draft code.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information is available to Parliament from the national compulsory water meter trials; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: A copy of the first interim report on the trials, which was published last February, was placed in the Library. A second interim report is expected to be published in the spring.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated cost to public funds for the compulsory water meter trials in the Normanton constituency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The Government have agreed to contribute up to half the cost of the south Normanton trial. The budget for the trial has yet to be finalised, but we expect the Government's contribution to be in the region of £240,000.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what mechanism is to be applied to monitor the total income, including the contribution from his Department to the compulsory water meter trials in the Normanton constituency, by the Yorkshire water authority during the trial period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The trial tariff has been designed to recover the same amount of income from the trail area as would have been recovered on a rateable value basis. We shall be regularly monitoring the level of income received from customers when charging starts in April 1991. The tariff will be amended if the income recovered from customers is greater than anticipated.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what value will be obtained from the investment of public money on the compulsory water meter trials in the Normanton constituency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The south Normanton trial is part of a programme of 12 trials in different areas designed to examine all aspects of metering, including the views of customers. The lessons learnt during the trials will help ensure that those water companies that decide to adopt metering as an alternative means of charging once the use of rateable values is no longer permitted, will do so cost effectively and with the least inconvenience to customers.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of water meters being installed in the Isle of Wight trial scheme which, when examined by the trading standards officer for verification, have fallen outside the tolerance area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I understand that one meter has been tested by the local trading standards officer on the Isle of Wight at the request of a customer. The meter was found to be just outside the error limits prescribed in the Measuring Equipment (Cold-water Meters) Regulations 1988 and was subsequently replaced.

City Grants

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to review the priority areas for city grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The Secretary of State has no immediate plans to review the priority areas for city grant.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline the criteria for deciding priority areas for city grant purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Priority for city grant is given to the 57 local authorities invited to submit inner area programmes for support under the urban progamme.

Urban Grants

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give a breakdown of (a) urban development grant, (b) urban renewal grant and (c) city grants approvals to the 57 urban programme areas to the end of November, authority by authority, category by category; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Crown Buildings, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for leasing surplus space in the Crown buildings, Cathays park, Cardiff, subsequent to the departure of the insurance services group of the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Chope: Any surplus space in the Crown building, Cathays park, subsequent to the departure of the insurance services group of the Export Credits Guarantee Department, will be reallocated to meet the requirements of another Government Department or Departments.

Housing Revenue Account Subsidies

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will make housing revenue account subsidy determinations for 1990-91.

Mr. Howard: The housing revenue account subsidy determinations for 1990-91 have been made today. Every local housing authority in England has been sent a copy of the determinations together with provisional figures on which its subsidy entitlement will be based. The figures for each individual authority are subject to change in the light of new information supplied by the authority itself. Copies of the determinations and of the provisional figures for all authorities will be placed in the Library and the Vote Office.

The new housing revenue account subsidy was introduced by the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. It replaces the existing main housing subsidy, housing benefit subsidy for rent rebates and the element in rate support grant related to authorities' own housing costs. The total Exchequer subsidy for 1990-91 is estimated to be some £3 billion, a similar sum to the combined figure for the different subsidies this year.

Each authority's subsidy will be calculated in accordance with the formula which is prescribed in the determinations. For 1990-91, the formula assumes that there will be a national increase of 10 per cent. in gross rent income. That produces an average guideline increase of £2·08 a week compared with £1·95 last year. However, unlike previous years, the determinations this year provide for different guideline rent increases in different authorities. The rent guidelines are set by reference to the value of each authority's housing stock, but are subject to a minimum and a maximum guideline increase. We estimate that the maximum guideline increase of £4·50 will apply to 66 authorities, and that 156 authorities will benefit from the minimum guideline increase of 95p which is less than would be required nationally to keep pace with inflation. Over half of all council tenants are on housing benefit and will not have to pay for any increase in rent because this will be fully rebated.

Overall, the effect is that guideline rent increases are lower in parts of the country where the value of housing is lower, and higher where it is relatively high. Within any area, guideline increases are also lower for authorities with high rents at present than they are for authorities where rents are lower. In this way authorities will be encouraged to move towards a more sensible pattern of rents across the country which reflects the value of the housing being provided.

For 1990-91, the subsidy formula provides for an 8 per cent. increase in the provision for management and maintenance expenditure which allows for at least 3 per cent. growth. The allowance will in most cases be related to authorities' past actual expenditure. There are two additional safeguards for authorities whose past expenditure has been low. First, if their past spending was lower than their allowance for management and maintenance spending under the existing housing subsidy system, then we will base their allowance for 1990-91 on the previous allowance. Secondly, we have set a minimum allowance per dwelling which will benefit the 10 per cent. of authorities whose allowances would otherwise (after adjustment for regional cost variations) have been the lowest in the country. To provide for the cost of the minimum allowance we have transferred £30 million from the local authority housing capital expenditure programme for 1990-91. In future years we intend that the provision for management and maintenance should be progressively directed towards those authorities with the greatest needs.

The subsidy formula also takes into account the full cost of loan charges and of rent rebates, subject only to safeguards to prevent double subsidy and to provide an incentive for efficient operation of the rent rebate scheme. The existing system of admissible cost limits for capital works, under which subsidy is paid only on loan charges where the average cost of schemes falls within unit cost limits prescribed by the Government, will be dropped. Rents on leasehold property will also be taken into account in subsidy, but in this case the admissible cost limits will continue to apply for the time being.

The draft determinations were the subject of consultation with local authorities, their associations, and other professional bodies. A large number of representations have been received, in response to which we have clarified and simplified the determinations wherever possible. We intend to publish a new edition of the "Housing Subsidy Manual", with practical guidance on the operation of the new subsidy system, early in the new year.

The combined effect of these proposals is to direct the £33 billion of taxpayers' money which will be paid out in HRA subsidy towards the authorities that most need it.

Drinking Water

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement about the new drinking water inspectorate.

Mr. Howard: Section 60 of the Water Act 1989 empowers my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State and the Secretary of State for Wales to appoint technical assessors to act on their behalf in relation to the new provisions on drinking water quality and supply. This is the statutory basis for the new drinking water inspectorate which will begin work on 2 January 1990. Their principal task will be to ensure that water undertakers in England and Wales are fulfilling all their statutory requirements for the supply of wholesome drinking water. They will check for failures to comply with the standards set by the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989 which come fully into force on 1 January 1990. If a failure occurs the inspectorate will ensure that appropriate action is taken.

Mr. M. G. Healey has been appointed chief inspector. Mr. Healey is head of the drinking water division of the Department of the Environment and is an engineer by training.

Housing Investment Programmes

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will make the allocations to local authorities in England for their housing investment programmes in 1990-91.

Mr. Howard: Each housing authority is today being informed of its housing investment programme (HIP) allocation for 1990-91. Copies of the letters to authorities and of the schedule of HIP allocations will be placed in the Library and the Vote Office.

The local authority associations have been consulted about the distribution of HIP allocations, including the construction of the generalised needs index (GNI), which has been comprehensively reviewed. My right hon. Friend has also consulted the local authority associations, local authorities and others about the determination of housing revenue account subsidy for 1990-91 and has decided that £30 million should be transferred from the total available for housing credit approvals in 1990-91 to increase the resources available for HRA subsidy.

Local authority credit approvals and specified capital grants will therefore total £1,784 million in 1990-91, not including £112 million for the special homelessness initiative. The Local Government and Housing Act 1989 allows my right hon. Friend to take account of local authorities' capital receipts when making allocations, and the housing element of the receipts taken into account in this way is £270 million. Housing investment programme (HIP) allocations for 1990-91 will therefore total £2,054 million.

HIP allocations in 1990-91 totalled £1,110 million and the large increase in the total for allocations in 1990-91 has been made possible by the provisions of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. As a result, about two thirds of the total capital resources that local authorities are expected to spend on housing next year can be targeted to reflect differences in local needs, compared with about one third in recent years.

After considering the views of the local authority associations, my right hon. Friend has concluded that a revised GNI should be introduced for 1990-91, and that the distribution of resources should be made on the following basis:

(i) £164·5 million to be allocated separately as supplementary credit approvals (SCAs), as follows:
  (a) £110 million for the estate action programme, for new and some continuation schemes. (A further £80 million for the remaining estate action continuation schemes is being allocated to authorities on the basis of agreed levels of commitment as part of their main HIP allocations).
  (b) £54·5 million held back for later distribution, of which £10 million is expected to be to cover renewal areas declared during the year, and the remainder primarily to provide against demand under the new renovation grant system for mandatory grants in excess of authorities' available resources.

(ii) My right hon. Friend's view is that the existing system of weighting the GNI scores of the 57 "Action for Cities" target areas is not only obscure, but also ineffective in ensuring that additional resources reach those inner city authorities most in need of them. He has therefore decided that, for 1990-91, £100 million of the total for HIP allocations should be allocated to the 57 "Action for Cities" target areas as distinct inner city special allocations. These resources have been distributed to the DOE regions in proportion to the GNI scores of the 57 authorities. Each region's total for inner city special allocations has been allocated to the 57 authorities following recommendations by the Department's regional housing controllers.

(iii) The remaining £1,709 million of the main HIP allocations, made up of the £1,296 million of housing annual capital guidelines (ACGs) and £413 million of resources for specified capital grants, has been distributed in two stages. First, the distribution to DOE regions has been made in proportion to the sum of the GNI scores of the local authorities in each region. Second, each region's total has been allocated to individual local authorities one half in proportion to each authority's GNI score, and one half following recommendations by the Department's regional housing controllers to reflect local needs.

Urban Programme

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list schemes covering energy conservation under the urban programme for each year since 1986.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 19 December 1989]: I am arranging for copies of the information requested to be placed in the Library of the House.

Home Insulation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give for each year since 1978 the number of dwellings insulated under public sector insulation programmes.

Mr. Howard: My Department is responsible for the energy conservation programme and homes insulation scheme. Information on activity in 1986, 1987, 1988 and the first quarter of 1989 for energy conversion, and the first half of 1989 for the homes insulation scheme, appears in table 2.21 of "Housing and Construction Statistics Part 2", No. 38. Figures for earlier years appear in table 7.7 of "Housing and Construction Statistics 1978-1988". Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Work under the energy conservation programme is identified only where it is the only work being carried out to a local authority dwelling. Insulation is often installed when other general renovation work is carried out, but these cases cannot be separately identified.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library the internal audit report of 1986 on the homes insulation scheme.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 18 December 1989]: No. It would be inappropriate to make generally available such reports, which are however sent to the National Audit Office and used by the Comptroller and Auditor General to inform his examination of the Department's work.

EMPLOYMENT

Social Fund

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much European social fund funding Leeds will lose for training programmes for long-term unemployed adults and unemployed young people in the coming year.

Mr. Eggar: Allocations to particular programmes have yet to be made. To date, support under the European social fund is made for one year at a time. Funding in one year carried no guarantee of support for future years.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the parameters now used to determine the allocation of European social fund money.

Mr. Eggar: Under the new European social fund arrangements the Commission determines the amount to be allocated to the member states and decides on the applications submitted earlier this year. The regulations on priorities for the schemes were agreed by all member states within the Community. In addition, the Commission has issued guidelines on those elements of the fund to support measures for the long-term unemployed and young people, which they have said they will apply in assessing applications for support. These regulations and guidelines have been widely circulated to all interested parties. This week the Commission published its Community support framework for four of the five objectives of the fund. They set out the priorities that the Commission and member states will adopt in assessing applications for support in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy that any overflow of European social fund training grants should be reallocated to local authorities that already have well-established European social fund programmes.

Mr. Eggar: We expect that all allocations by the European Commission of ESF will be fully taken up by the applicants concerned.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a list of all the major schemes in order of amount supported by the European social fund.

Mr. Eggar: A copy of the latest European social fund decision on the funding of all United Kingdom applicants has been lodged in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table of the European social fund training grants allocation to Leeds from 1979 to 1989, inclusive.

Mr. Eggar: Details of allocations to individual towns and cities can be identified only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish his Department's reply to correspondence from Leeds city council about reduced European social fund allocations to training projects.

Mr. Eggar: It is not my Department's policy to publish correspondence with other organisations and individuals.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set out the new criteria for the European social fund bid allocations to local authorities.

Mr. Eggar: My Department used the European Commission's own criteria of assistance to the long-term unemployed and to youth to produce percentage figures by region and, within that, by county based on long-term and youth unemployment, to facilitate the compilation of the bids for European social fund support. My Department then advised interested organisations of an overall amount they could bid for taking into account the likely demand from all quarters and the European Commission's requirement that bids should be realistic.

Peterlee and Seaham

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement concerning the future of jobcentres and unemployment benefit offices in Peterlee and Seaham.

Mr. Eggar: The employment service is working progressively to bring jobcentres and benefit offices together under one roof. This will provide a new and improve one-stop service.

I will ensure that the hon. Member is informed as soon as decisions about the future of offices in Peterlee and Seaham have been taken.

Jobcentres

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement regarding the future of jobcentres in the (a) Burnley, (b) Pendle, (c) Hyndburn and (d) Rossendale and Darwen constituencies.

Mr. Eggar: The employment service is working progressively to bring jobcentres and benefit offices together under one roof. This will provide a new and improved one-stop service.

I will ensure that hon. Members with a constituency interest are informed as soon as decisions about the future of offices in the Burnley, Pendle, Hyndham and Rossendale and Darwen constituencies have been taken.

Training Schemes

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list all training schemes and measures to reduce unemployment, including the enterprise scheme; and if he will give details of (a) the number of people participating at any one time and (b) the separate and overall expenditure in each case.

Mr. Eggar: The information is as follows:

1 Training Agency

Programme	Cost (£ million)[6]	Numbers in training October 1989
Employment Training (ET)	1,251·5	209,000
Business Growth Training (BGT)	42·4	see [1] below
Youth Training Scheme (YTS)	1,039·1	405,000
Community Industry (CI)	28·1	6,000[2]
Work Related Further Education (WRFE)	101·5	see [3] below
TVEI[4] & Compacts	121·2	see [5] below
Enterprise Allowance Scheme (EAS)	138·5[6]	77,230

[1] The following figures are available for BGT for the period April-October 1989:

Option 1, kits issued	3,700
Option 2, training places	25,700
Option 3, contracts signed	700
Option 4, contracts signed	1,200
Option 5, contracts signed	25

[2] Employees in Scheme until 1 May 1989, when the contract changed from "Employment Measure" to "Training Provision".

[3] In the field of WRFE the TA operates by negotiating with Local Education Authorities. It is not possible to give participation figures comparable with the rest of table.

[4] Technical & Vocational Education Initiative.

[5] In the academic year 1988-89 314,000 students were involved with TVEI. This figure rose to 630,000 in the academic year 1989-90.

[6] Provision in TA Vote from July 1989 only.

There are also other TA initiatives for which the numbers in training are not readily available:

Programme	Cost (£ million)
Employment Rehabilitation	9·0
Residual Schemes[1]	20·0
Enterprise Training	3·8
Other Adult Training[2]	11·5
Enterprise in Higher Education & Other HE Projects	8·7

Expenditure reflects 1989-90 funds allocated.

Noise at Work Regulations

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to issue a Health and Safety Commission approved code of practice to accompany the 1989 Noise at Work Regulations; and when is the likely date of publication.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Commission has no plans at present to issue an approved code of practice (ACoP) to accompany these regulations. In its consultation document on proposals to implement directive 86/188/EEC the Commission sought views on whether an ACoP should be produced: the majority of respondents thought that guidance alone would be preferable in this case because it facilitated provision of advice on technical issues in a single series of documents which could readily be amended in the light of technical progress.

The Health and Safety Executive has prepared general guidance for employers, machine makers and suppliers which was published on 16 November. Further guidance will be produced shortly.

Careers Services

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the inspection reports on local authority careers services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The reports on local authority careers services produced by the careers service inspectorate will in future be published. Publication will start with those inspections that began after October 1 1989.

Strikes

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many days work were lost by unofficial strike action in each industry as categorised by his Department in each of the last five years for which official figures are available;

(2) how many official strikes were settled within (a) one, (b) two, (c) three, (d) four weeks and (e) longer than four weeks, of the official action occurring in the last five years for which official figures are available;

(3) how many unofficial strikes were settled within (a) one, (b) two, (c) three, (d) four, and (e) five working days of the unofficial action occurring in the last five years for which official figures are available;

(4) how many unofficial strikes were settled within (a) two weeks, (b) three weeks and (c) four weeks, or took longer than four weeks, of the unofficial action occurring in the last five years for which official figures are available;

(5) what was the total number of days lost by strike action, official and unofficial, and by each industry as categorised by his Department in each of the last five years for which official figures are available;

(6) what was the total number of unofficial strikes in each industry categorised by his Department, in each of the last five years for which official figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in how many (a) official strikes and (b) unofficial strikes the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service has been involved in each of the last five years for which official figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: Information is not available in the form requested. Information on the overall number of disputes in which ACAS has been involved is published in the service's annual reports, copies of which are held in the Library.

Wages Councils

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many establishments were checked by a visit by wages council inspectors in 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: In 1988 a total of 19,573 establishments in Great Britain were checked by visits by wages inspectors.

Closed Shop

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has received any further representations about the closed shop; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: In addition to comments on the proposals contained in chapter 2 of the Green Paper "Removing Barriers to Employment", my Department continues to receive letters which describe difficulties experienced as a result of the operation of closed shop arrangements. The Government's new Employment Bill will make it unlawful to refuse anyone employment because they are not a union member which, together with the protections provided in the 1988 Employment Act, will make all forms of the closed shop unenforceable.

Self-Employment

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the various categorisations of self-employment.

Mr. Eggar: The borderline between employment and self-employment is not defined in statute, but is a matter determined by the common law. The question whether individuals are employed or self-employed will depend on the terms and conditions under which they are engaged and work. The courts will decide where the status of an individual is in doubt. The Inland Revenue and Department of Social Security have to establish whether an individual is employed or self-employed for purposes of income tax and National Insurance contributions.

Unemployment Benefit (Quarterly Attenders)

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what is the total number of quarterly attenders reporting to unemployment benefit offices in Great Britain and in each of the standard regions, Scotland and Wales;

(2) whether quarterly attenders aged over 50 years are included in the published monthly unemployment figures.

Mr. Eggar: The following table shows the number of quarterly attenders for November 1989 in Great Britain and in each of the standard regions, Scotland and Wales.

Quarterly Attenders in November 1989

	Number
Great Britain	149,572
South East	25,985
East Anglia	2,756

	Number
South West	8,032
West Midlands	18,627
East Midlands	10,257
Yorkshire and Humberside	18,397
North West	22,257
North	13,770
Scotland	21,674
Wales	7,547

The provision of signing quarterly is mainly for those aged 50 and over, who have been unemployed for one year and have no entitlement to unemployment benefit.

Arts and Design

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, what expenditure was made by his Department on (a) the arts and (b) design in the last financial year.

Mr. Nicholls: This information is not available in the form requested.

Business Enterprise Allowance

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement as to the eligibility of businesses in receipt of business enterprise allowance funding to (a) engage as sub-contractors and (b) engage sub-contractors.

Mr. Eggar: The aim of the enterprise allowance scheme is to help unemployed people create new small businesses that would otherwise not exist. Most labour-only sub-contracting arrangements are ruled outside the scope and the spirit of the scheme. However scheme support may be approved where applicants can show they will provide specialist expertise or services to a number of other companies not normally retaining these "in-house". Existing EAS participants are free to engage sub-contractors or employ other staff.

Military Conscription

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if his Department has identified reserved occupations for exemption from military conscription during a war emergency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My Department has not identified reserved occupations for exemption from military conscription during a war emergency.

Host Nation Support

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if his Department has identified specific categories of skilled workers as part of planning for host nation support within NATO.

Mr. Eggar: My Department has not identified specific categories of skilled workers as part of planning for host nation support within NATO.

Tourism

Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the Prime Minister's answer to the hon. Member for York (Mr. Gregory) on 12 December, Official Report, column 854, regarding the Minister for tourism for Great Britain, if he will ensure that he answers all questions on tourism relevant to Great Britain as a whole.

Mr. Nicholls: The Secretary of State for Employment has responsibility for tourism matters in Great Britain as a whole; as such he will continue to answer questions relevant to the whole of Great Britain.

Sewage Sludge Tanks

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set out the required safety standards set by the Health and Safety Executive for fencing around sewage sludge tanks.

Mr. Nicholls: Sections 2 and 3 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 require an employer to ensure so far as is reasonably practicable the health, safety and welfare of his employees and the health and safety of persons not in his employment who may be affected by his work activity. These duties extend to the risks at sewage and sludge tanks.

The Health and Safety Executive has not published standards for the fencing of sewage and sludge tanks in the water industry but would expect employers, in complying with their duties under the Act, to provide adequate fencing around the tanks.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to (a) the number and (b) the percentage of workers who leave their job within two years of starting.

Mr. Nicholls: This information is not available.

Sick Pay

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the number of people who are not paid by their employer if they are off sick for between one and three days.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available.

Employment Training

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is meant by low incomes in relation to people who have joined employment training schemes, for (a) lone parents and (b) couples; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department does not use any definition of low income in relation to people in employment training. Eligibility for employment training does not depend on the level of income and the training allowance paid to trainees is based on their existing entitlement to benefits.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what provision is made for people taking employment training who have child care problems, particularly where no creche facilities exist; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: There are a number of ways in which people on employment training (ET) can be helped with childcare. Training providers are encouraged to set up creche facilities at or near the place of training and lone parents can get help towards the cost of this or other appropriate provision. In addition the inbuilt flexibilities of ET mean that training can often be arranged to take account of individual domestic circumstances.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what provision is made to help people taking Government employment training in computer courses to undertake training at home; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Where appropriate trainees may, with the agreement of the training manager, undertake training in computer skills at home. Where computer equipment is needed for people with disabilities, there is help available through the special aids to employment scheme.

Within employment training there is also provision for higher level information technology skills courses specifically for women returners. In some cases where training is home based, office equipment and computers can be made available on loan.

European Social Fund

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on allocations to the United Kingdom by the European social fund for measures for the long-term unemployed and young people in Great Britain for the period 1990 to 1992.

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about allocations to the United Kingdom by the European social fund for measures for the long-term unemployed and young people in Great Britain for the period 1990 to 1992.

Mr. Eggar: Having obtained the agreement of the British Government, on 20 December 1989 the Commission of the European Communities made its decision on European social fund allocations to the United Kingdom for training and employment of long-term unemployed people and of young people under objectives 3 and 4 of the Community's structural funds. The decision is contained in the Community support framework, a copy of which will be placed in the Library.

The priorities of the Community support framework will guide the allocation of 1,025 million ecu (approximately £782 million) made available by the Commission under these objectives of the fund for the three years 1990 to 1992. This is the highest allocation to any member state and represents 24·8 per cent. of the budget which the Commission has distributed.

The Commission has yet to take decisions on allocations to particular programmes.

Action for Jobs Campaign

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, what was the total expenditure attributed to the Action for Jobs campaign in 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Mr. Eggar: The total expenditure attributed to the Action for Jobs campaign in 1985-86, 1986-87, 1987-88 is as follows:

1985-86	£40,000
1986-87	£13·9 million
1987-88	£8 million

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether it is his intention to place the responsibility for education capacity in the hands of the local training and enterprise council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 18 December 1989]: Compacts will come under the training and enterprise councils (TECs) as they come into being, provided always that the educational partners in each compact agree to this. It is of the utmost importance that TECs should take all opportunities to work effectively with all relevant parts of the local education system to raise skill levels and educational achievements in their local community.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Services Committee

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what support he intends to give to the regional north-western legal services committees and proposed similar committees in north-east England and south Wales.

The Attorney-General: The legal aid board funds the north west legal services committee.

It will be considering, in the light of progress on its franchising proposals, future support for regional legal services committees.

Jeremiah Miller

Mr. Alton: To ask the Attorney-General what requests the Crown prosecution service has received for documents concerning Jeremiah Miller, a prisoner at Her Majesty's prison Walton; what documents he has released; if he has withheld any information; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Crown prosecution service has received requests for the disclosure of documents relating to police activity during the course of the investigation of an offence of attempted robbery which occurred at Upton, Wirral on 24 July 1986. Jeremiah Miller was subsequently convicted of offences arising out of that incident.

Requests have been received both from Jeremiah Miller and from solicitors acting on his behalf; in addition, a request by Jeremiah Miller has been channelled to the CPS through the chief constable of Merseyside.

I am satisfied that the Crown prosecution service has responded fully and properly to those requests.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General whether there are any current prosecutions of accountants for the creation of a false market in shares.

The Attorney-General: I have taken the hon. Member's question to refer to the statutory offence under section 47(2) of the Financial Services Act 1986, and any other proceedings where the prosecution case amounts to an allegation of market manipulation.

There are no such cases involving an accountant as defendant currently being prosecuted by the Crown prosecution service or the serious fraud office. For the purposes of this answer I have treated the word "accountant" as referring to persons employed as or acting in that capacity, as distinct from an individual who simply happens to hold a formal accountancy qualification.

Jaderow Case Ruling

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the implications for United Kingdom law of the Jaderow case ruling delivered by the European Court of Justice on 13 December.

The Attorney-General: The judgment in the Jaderow case was given in answer to a request for a preliminary ruling of the Court of Justice under article 177 of the treaty. It is now for the referring court, the High Court of Justice, to decide on the lawfulness of the fish licensing conditions at issue in that case in the light of the ruling of the Court of Justice. The case will be reinstated before the High Court in due course and argument will be heard on the impact of the preliminary ruling. To the end, the judgement is being considered carefully by Her Majesty's Government. Until the High Court delivers its judgment, it would be inappropriate for me to comment further.

Trial Statistics

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Pembroke on 18 December, if he will arrange for statistics concerning the period between offence and trial to be collected in future.

The Attorney-General: No. The Crown prosecution service collects statistics for its own management information and performance indicator purposes. It is not necessary for those purposes to collect statistics by reference to the date of offence.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Attorney-General what is the average period in (a) criminal cases and (b) civil cases between arrest or service of papers and hearing.

The Attorney-General: The latest figures recorded in the Home Office statistical bulletin for 29 November show that the average time taken between the date of charge or summons and the date of first hearing is 36 days.

Statistics relating to the period of time between arrest and hearing, in criminal cases, and service of papers and hearing, in civil cases, are not collected.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Attorney-General what is the longest period in recent years between arrest and trail; and if he will give details of the case.

The Attorney-General: The information which is sought is not readily available and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Morledge Case

Mr. Allen: To ask the Attorney-General whether any police officers are to be prosecuted for perjury arising from the collapse of the Morledge case.

The Attorney-General: It is for the chief constable of the Nottinghamshire constabulary to determine whether there should be a disciplinary or criminal investigation. If there is a criminal investigation the provisions of part IX of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 will determine whether a report should be submitted to the Director of Public Prosecutions. The question of prosecution cannot arise unless and until such a report is submitted.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Willow Watermark Disease

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest position on the combating of willow watermark disease.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 15 November 1989 at column 336.

There has been a significant and welcome reduction in the incidence of the disease, largely as a result of control measures carried out under the Watermark Disease (Local Authorities) Order 1986 and its predecessors.

Shellfish Regulations

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will consider setting up a body run by his Department to administer and monitor the proposed molluscan shellfish regulations.

Mr. Gummer: The regulation of molluscan shellfisheries —including deposit controls, the granting of several orders and the approval of proposed byelaws of the Sea Fisheries Committees—are already matters for the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Proposals are expected soon from the European Commission dealing with intra-Community trade in live bivalve molluscs and safeguards to public health. We shall examine the resource needs for administration and monitoring in the light of the proposals made but at present see no need to create a separate, single and new body for this purpose.

Rationing Schemes

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ensure that guidance on war time rationing schemes for councils, resulting from a recent consultation exercise with local authority associations will contain specific provision for (a) ethnic minorities, (b) people with disabilities, (c) the homeless, (d) the illiterate and (e) those who decide to self-evacuate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Ministry takes its civil defence responsibilities seriously and will ensure that arrangements are as accessible as possible to the whole community. No doubt the hon. Member will encourage his local authority to take a full and constructive part in current consultations with local authority associations.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department has considered the possibility of using poll tax registers as a basis for the distribution of ration documents in a war emergency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The community charge legislation contains no provision for local authorities to use information collected for the purposes of the community charge for other purposes.

Food Stockpiling

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice his Department is offering to the public about the stockpiling of food in the event of a war emergency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: As a result of the defence policy pursued by the Government within our membership of NATO, the likelihood of a war emergency is remote. However, the public would be advised appropriately should such a situation arise.

Salmon

Sir Michael Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the United Kingdom salmon catch statistics, distinguishing between the different methods of fishing in Scotland and England, for the most recent convenient years.

Mr. Gummer: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Royal Society for the Protection of Birds

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Maclean: I met representatives of the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds on 30 August, when we discussed a number of issues of mutual concern.

Investment

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to reduce the cost of borrowing for agricultural investment.

Mr. Maclean: I recognise that high interest rates are unwelcome to the agricultural industry; but farming and agricultural investment, in common with other businesses, would be damaged more by a resurgence of inflation than by a period of higher interest rates.

Horse Sales

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to present the proposed code of conduct for horse sales and markets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: A new statutory order to protect the welfare of horses at markets, sales and fairs and a related code of practice are in the course of preparation. We hope to complete the new legislation and code of practice in the first half of 1990.

Arts and Design

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what expenditure was made by his Department on (a) the arts and (b) design in the last financial year.

Mr. Maclean: During the course of carrying out its publicity activities, my Department does incur expenditure on design but does not contribute to the arts. Creative design is produced as an integral part of any given publicity campaign, consequently information in the form asked for is not readily available.

Pesticides

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy for toxicity testing of pesticides to be based on exposures to multiple compounds.

Mr. Maclean: It is for the advisory committee on pesticides to determine what tests are required before approving pesticides.

Herbs and Spices

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is conducting research into methods of sterilising herbs and spices other than irradiation and ethylene oxide; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The industry is conducting research actively into the sterilisation of herbs and spices.

At present the only effective ways of ensuring that herbs and spices are free from microbiological contamination are treatment with ethylene oxide or irradiation. The problem in developing alternative treatments is the need to ensure that they are suitable for all, rather than just some, herbs and spices. Some promising new methods are currently being investigated, but it is too early to say whether any of these will be successful.

Salmonella

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell), of 13 December, Official Report, column 689, what evidence he has that the removal of salmonella infected poultry flocks is helping to reduce the level of salmonella infection in humans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The earlier reply referred to the risk of salmonella infection in humans. This risk is being reduced by the Government's measures, particularly through the compulsory slaughter of laying flocks known to be infected with invasive salmonella. Information collected by the public health laboratory service indicates that the number of salmonella food poisoning outbreaks associated with eggs rose from 23 in the first nine months of 1988 to 30 in the same period in 1989. This was a much lower rate of increase than that recorded in the previous two years.

Alcohol

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the measures he has taken to reduce alcohol consumption in the United Kingdom diet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: In response to the report by the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy on "Diet and Cardiovascular Disease" we extended the Community requirement to indicate alcoholic strength on prepacked alcoholic drinks to dispensed drinks such as those sold in bars or restaurants. This is to help those consumers wishing to assess or reduce their alcohol intake to do so. We are also intending to introduce controls over the use of the description "low alcohol" to drinks not exceeding 1·2 per cent. alcohol by volume to ensure that consumers are not misled in this area. Our Food Labelling Regulations already control the use of the terms "alcohol-free", "dealcoholised" and "non-alcoholic". All these are measures to give people the ability to choose. The responsibility for the sensible use of alcohol remains clearly one for every individual.

Food Additives

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all food additives which currently have approval for use in food, giving in each case, the year of approval; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: All currently approved food additives are listed in the back of our free booklet "Food Additives—The Balanced Approach", available from Food Sense, London SE99 7TT. Since publication of the list, one new sweetener, Lactitol, has been added and as a result of an EC directive four emulsifiers—polyoxyethylene (8) stearate (430), polyoxyethylene (40) stearate (431), lactylated fatty acid esters of glycol and propane-1, 2-diol (478), and dioctyl sodium sulphosuccinate (—) have been deleted, and two added tartaric acid esters of mono and diglycerides of fatty acids (E472(d)), and mixed acetic and tartaric acid esters of mono and diglycerides of fatty acids (E472(f)).

I will send the hon. Member a copy of the booklet.

The dates of current approval are the dates of the relevant regulations, a list of which I will also send to the hon. Member. The information requested on the individual approval dates could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the food additives for which he has withdrawn approval giving in each case the year when the additive was withdrawn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Cyclamic acid, a sweetener, and its sodium and calcium salts were withdrawn in 1969. The Colouring Matter in Food Regulations 1973 have been amended several times as follows:

in 1975 Orange RN was withdrawn; in 1976 Fast Yellow AB, Orchil or Orcein, Solanthrene Blue RS or Anthragen Blue or Indanthrene Blue Black 7984 and Burnt Umber were withdrawn; in 1978 in order to implement an EC directive, Orange G, chocolate brown FB, the channel black form of carbon black were withdrawn; and in 1987 yellow 2G was withdrawn.

In order to implement an EC directive the following emulsifiers and stablisers were withdrawn in 1989:

Ploxyoxyethylene (8) stearate, polyoxyethylene (40) stearate, lactylated fatty acid esters of glycol and propane-1 2-diol, and dioctyl sodium sulphosuccinate.

We have recently announced an intention to prohibit the use of mineral hydrocarbons in food, and potassium bromate as a flour improver. We have also accepted the advice of the Food Advisory Committee that the colours, crocin, santalin, solvent-extracted annatto, canthaxanthin and capsanthin/capsorubin should be removed from the permitted list, although in the case of the last three, Community action will be required.

Saturated Fat

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the measures he has taken to reduce saturated fat consumption in the United Kingdom diet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: In response to the report by the Committee on Medical aspects of Food Policy in "Diet and Cardiovascular Disease", which recommended reductions in overall fat intake and intake of saturated fat, we made adjustments to the beef and sheep variable premium schemes to exclude the fatter animals from eligibility. In 1987 my Department introduced guidelines on nutrition labelling. These have encouraged manufacturers to give nutrition information on food labels including total fat and saturates declarations, thus enabling consumers to compare products more easily and to help them reduce their fat intake. We are currently pressing for a satisfactory Communitywide system for consumers in negotiations on proposed Community directives on nutrition labelling. As announced in July we shall be introducing regulations to control nutrition claims such as "low fat", "low in saturates" to ensure that consumers are not misled. Together with the Department of Health and the Health Education Authority, my officials are preparing a simple set of dietary guidelines to be published in the new year which will further help to educate consumers about the need for an overall balanced diet.

Sugar

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the measures he has taken to reduce sugar consumption in the United Kingdom diet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: In 1987 my Department introduced guidelines on nutrition labelling. These have encouraged manufacturers to give nutrition information on food labels, including total sugar declarations, thus enabling consumers to compare products more easily and to help them choose a balanced diet. We are currently pressing for a satisfactory Communitywide system for consumers in negotiations on proposed Community directives on nutrition labelling. As announced in July, we shall be introducing regulations to control nutrition claims such as "reduced sugar", "no added sugars" to ensure that consumers are not misled. We are also actively considering those recommendations which fall to my Department's responsibility in the recently published report by the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy on "Dietary Sugars and Human Disease".

Sodium Chloride

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the measures he has taken to reduce the sodium chloride consumption in the United Kingdom diet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Although certain people require low sodium diets for medical reasons, I am not aware of any firm evidence of the need to reduce sodium chloride consumption in the United Kingdom diet. In 1987 my Department introduced guidelines on nutrition labelling. These have encouraged manufacturers to give nutrition information on food labels, including sodium declarations, thus enabling consumers to compare products more easily and to help those who wish to reduce their sodium intake to do so.

I am currently pressing for a satisfactory Communitywide system for consumers in negotiations on proposed Community directives on nutrition labelling. As announced in July we shall be introducing regulations to control nutrition claims such as "low salt", "low sodium", to ensure that consumers are not misled.

Commission proposals relating specifically to sodium have not yet been issued, but I am seeking to ensure effective Communitywide regulation on all these matters, although a number of countries have been strongly opposed to those proposals issued so far.

Fishing Rights

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on the extension of inshore sea fishery district and exclusive fishing rights from three to six miles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: My colleagues and I are currently giving careful consideration to a proposal put to us by the Association of Sea Fisheries Committees for an extension of SFC jurisdiction from three to six miles which would enable SFCs to propose byelaws for regulating certain stocks in the wider zone. We will make a decision as soon as we can. There would be detailed consultations with the fishing industry and constituent county and metropolitan district councils of SFCs if we decide to proceed.

Bass Nursery Areas

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the sea fishery committees about his proposal to introduce bass nursery areas in Langstone harbour, Portsmouth harbour, Southampton Water, Poole harbour and the Fleet at Portland.

Mr. Gummer: The Ministry has had a number of discussions with the Association of Sea Fisheries Commmittees and with individual Sea Fisheries Comittees about the introduction of nursery areas in these and other waters to help protect juvenile bass stocks. We hope to be able to make an announcement soon.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 8 January 1990

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Taken-over Cases

26. Mr. Allen: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list those cases taken over by the Director of Public Prosecutions since 1987.

The Attorney-General: Statistics concerning private prosecutions are not collected. The CPS has identified 28 private prosecutions conducted by private individuals or bodies which have been taken over by the Crown prosecution service since 1987. I will write to the hon. Gentleman listing the cases.

John Black RN

Mr. Latham: To ask the Attorney-General whether he is now in a position to give a date when the High Court will hear his application for a fresh inquest into the death of the late Petty Officer John Black, RN, in Sabinillas, Spain, in December 1983.

The Attorney-General: No. The case is in the Crown list, but no hearing date has yet been fixed by the court.

Courts and Legal Services Bill [Lords]

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General what is the estimated cost of implementing the Courts and Legal Services Bill [Lords].

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 7 December 1989 at column 316, and to the explanatory and financial memorandum prefacing the Bill.

TRANSPORT

Cyclists

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will direct British Rail to consider ways in which cyclists can more easily use rail services.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail has regular contact with the cycling organisations and is aware of their needs. I understand that BR's policy is to welcome cyclists and to convey bicycles whenever possible, for an appropriate charge, provided that this will not unduly inconvenience other passengers, or displace other revenue-earning traffic such as parcels.

Motoring Organisations

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which motoring organisations he or his predecessor met over the last year; and on which dates.

Mr. Atkins: During 1989 Transport Ministers met representatives of motoring organisations as follows:

The Automobile Association:
24 January
14 June
20 June
19 July
31 October
29 November

The Federation of British Historic Vehicle Clubs:
6 September

The Institute of Advanced Motorists:
14 December

The Royal Automobile Club:
26 June
6 September
7 November

Prestwick Airport

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many flights have been diverted to Prestwick since 1 November.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Civil Aviation Authority has not yet published figures for this period. Preliminary information from Prestwick Airport Limited indicates that, from 1 November to 31 December 1989, the airport handled 144 air transport movements diverted from other airports.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which building surveyors, land agents or chartered surveyors were used by his Department or by the British Airports Authority, or by his or their advisers, to value land at Prestwick airport, including land not required for airport operations, when assessing the assets of the British Airports Authority for privatisation.

Mr. McLoughlin: Page 58 of the prospectus offering shares in BAA for sale records that Debenham Tewson and Chinnocks Limited, international property advisers, valued the land at the BAA airports.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement following the Anglo-French intergovernmental commission announcement that passengers will not leave their cars and coaches when travelling through the Channel tunnel with particular regard to safety aspects in the tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: No. The intergovernmental commission was established by the Channel fixed link treaty to supervise, in the name and on behalf of the two Governments, all matters concerning the construction and operation of the fixed link. On safety matters, it is advised by the independent binational safety authority, also established by the treaty. Parliament has accepted that the safety authority is the right body to oversee tunnel safety standards. I believe that the safety authority will shortly be publishing a report which sets out the information on which its unanimous recommendation to the commission is based.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the make-up and terms of reference for his Department's working group on the assessment of the impact of railway noise with regard to the Channel tunnel link.

Mr. Portillo: The aim will be to establish for new railway lines a noise standard at a level which equitably relates to the standard set by regulation for new highways. I hope to make an announcement shortly about the establishment of a departmental committee to carry out this task.

LRT (Safety)

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is yet in a position to announce safety and quality of service objectives for London Regional Transport.

Mr. Parkinson [pursuant to his reply, 20 December 1989, c. 280]: Following is a fuller text of my letter to the chairman of London Regional Transport.

"My predecessor wrote to you on your appointment about the challenges facing London Regional Transport. He asked you to prepare a strategy for the coming years, which could be used as a basis for setting formal objectives for you and your Board.

Your response takes the form of the "Chairman's Planning Statement," which you are about to publish. In the light of that statement, I am writing to you about the safety and quality of service objectives I wish you to pursue. Before 1 April 1990 I shall settle with you the financial objectives for LRT covering the next three financial years.

Safety

LRT and its subsidiaries are responsible for the safe operation of the services they provide. The Fennell Report on the King's Cross fire underlined the need to give the highest priority to safety and to address safety matters explicitly in all LRT's activities. You have undertaken with vigour the task of implementing the Fennell Report's recommendations. You have already fully implemented 73 of the 127 recommendations addressed to LRT or London Underground, and have in hand action on the remaining 54.

You have also now established a clear framework for collecting statistics on safety performance, setting safety objectives and monitoring and auditing safety performance at every level of the organisation. This should ensure the progressive improvement in the safety of all the services you provide or secure. I welcome the steps you have taken. I hereby endorse the safety objectives set out in Annex A to this letter.

Quality of Service on the Underground

Demand for Underground services has grown by more than 70 per cent. since 1982. This has put the Underground under strain and we are all agreed that the quality of service for passengers is not as good as it should be.

Much of passengers' dissatisfaction stems from overcrowding. The only way to deal adequately with the growth in demand is to invest in increasing the capacity of the system. This is why approval has been given for a massive investment programme, including the £900 million Major Upgrading Programme and the extension of the Jubilee Line to service East London and Docklands. Urgent work is in progress on the options for another major new line to relieve congestion. In the shorter term, we must ensure that the most is made of the existing system. I am therefore setting objectives for improvement in such areas as peak capacity, reliability and the availability of lifts and escalators. I shall look to London Underground to meet these as soon as possible and, in any case, no later than 31 March 1992. These objectives are set out in full at Annex B to the Letter.

Docklands Light Railway

The Docklands Light Railway has been in operation for just over two years. It is now being extended to the City and to Beckton. Measures are in hand to increase its capacity still further. It is vital that the DLR provides a reliable and high-quality service, as the system is upgraded and capacity increased. I am therefore setting targets for the DLR covering aspects of service similar to those in the objectives set for the Underground. These are set out in Annex C. Again, the targets should be met as soon as possible, and no later than 31 March 1992.

LRT Bus Services

Despite increasing difficulties with traffic congestion, there has been a noticeable improvement in the percentage of scheduled bus mileage actually operated, and average waiting time has been stabilised over the past couple of years. You have increased the number of routes let by competitive tender. You have also restructured London Buses Ltd. into smaller, more accountable, subsidiaries. These measures have played a valuable part in securing better quality and value for money. I now think that the time has come to build on that success by setting LRT quality of service targets for all its bus services, including those operated by London Buses and other operators on contract. The objectives are set out in Annex D.

LRT Travel Enquiry Service

It is important that passengers should have ready access to up-to-date information on all LRT's passenger services. I am therefore setting LRT's Travel Enquiry Service the objective of ensuring that 75 per cent. of telephone callers receiving the ringing tone should be answered within 30 seconds and no more than 10 per cent. of callers should receive the engaged tone.

You will report to my Department and to the London Regional Passengers' Committee at quarterly intervals, the performance achieved against the quality of service objectives.

As you know, it is also my intention to set LRT, in good time before 1 April, financial objectives for the next three financial years. These will be designed to ensure that these safety and quality of service objectives are met as efficiently and economically as possible, so that customers and taxpayers, receive proper value for money. Our officials are already in touch about this."

Copies of the annexes to this letter have been placed in the House Libraries.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Elected Executive

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received in favour of electing an executive separately from Parliament.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None.

Written Constitution

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the subject of a written constitution.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government receive representations from time to time advocating a written constitution. These could be enumerated only at disproportionate cost.

Second Chamber

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received seeking the establishment of a democratically elected second chamber.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government receive representations from time to time advocating abolition or reform of the House of Lords. They could be enumerated only at disproportionate cost.

Prisons (Transfers)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were awaiting transfer to Thorp Arch from Durham at the end of the months August through to November.

Mr. Mellor: At the end of the four months for which information has been requested, the numbers of prisoners held at Her Majesty's prison Durham awaiting transfer to Her Majesty's prison Thorp Arch were as follows:

	Number
August 1989	38
September 1989	43
October 1989	48
November 1989	54

Shamim Ayaz

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Shamim Ayaz, Ref. H 162359; Imm/15031, is to be issued with a passport to join his father in the United Kingdom; when the post in Islamabad was instructed by him to issue a visa to Shamim Ayaz; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Mr. Shamim Ayaz's application for entry clearance to settle in the United Kingdom as the dependent son of Mr. Muzaffar Hussain has been referred by the entry clearance officer in Islamabad to the immigration department of the Home Office for consideration under paragraph 56 of the immigration rules and the concession announced by my right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) on 14 June 1989 at column 463. The papers arrived on 1 December and a decision will be taken as soon as possible.

Political Refugees

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will specify the criteria under which political refugees are now admitted to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Applications for asylum on arrival at United Kingdom ports are considered under the criteria of the 1951 United Nations convention and 1967 protocol relating to the status of refugees. Article 1 of the convention defines a refugee as inter alia someone who "owing to well-founded fear of being persecuted for reasons of race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion, is outside the country of his nationality and is unable or, owing to such fear, is unwilling to avail himself of the protection of that country".
If the person has arrived from a safe third country he or she may be returned to that country to pursue an application there. A refugee who has already found protection in another country may be admitted to the United Kingdom if this is a more appropriate country of refuge.

Prisons (Capacity)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the under or over-capacity of Thorp Arch and Durham prisons at the end of the months August to November.

Mr. Mellor: The details requested are set out in the table.

	Durham	Thorp
Certified Normal Accommodation	[1]729	[2]156
Population[3] on:
25 August	1,002	144
29 September	1,006	150
27 October	976	149
24 November	1,019	146

[1] There was no change to the certified normal accommodation at Durham Prison during the period in question.
[2] Available accommodation at Thorp Arch has effectively been reduced to 150 since August to allow for a rolling programme of refurbishment, involving the installation of integral sanitation.
[3] The population details provided refer to the last Friday in each of the four months.

Brownhills and Heywood High Schools

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the application by Staffordshire county council for section 11 money in respect of Brownhills and Heywood high schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Additional information submitted by the authority on 8 December is being considered. We hope to be in a position to take a decision on the application shortly.

Alcohol Consumption

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to change the law to promote and encourage non and low-alcohol consumption by young people.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We very much welcome the introduction, by my hon. Friend the Member for Honiton (Sir Peter Emery) of the Licensing (Low Alcohol Drinks) Bill, which seeks to amend the definition of intoxicating liquor in the Licensing Act 1964 and of alcoholic liquor in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976.

Robberies

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will supply statistics of robberies, and attempted robberies involving the confrontation of counter staff in the betting office, banking and building society industries over the past three years.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not available in the form requested. The total numbers of notifiable offences of robbery are published annually, and most recently in table 2.10 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1988" (Cm. 847). Information on the location of notifiable offences of robbery in which firearms were reported to have been used is given in table 3.8 of the same publication. A copy of this publication is available in the Library. Offences of attempted robbery are included in the robbery category and are not separately identified in the figures collected centrally.

Hong Kong

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visitors there have been to the United Kingdom from Hong Kong, arriving in each of the last 36 months for which he has figures.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest available information is given in the table for British dependent territories citizens from Hong Kong. Reliable figures of admissions of stateless persons from Hong Kong are not available.

Hong Kong British Dependent Territory Citizens admitted to the United Kingdom as ordinary or business visitors, November 1986 to October 1989

Downing Street Railings

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the expected savings to the Metropolitan police following the erection of railings in Downing street.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None.

Ambulance Duties

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of police man hours employed in ambulance duties per police authority, to date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The readily available information is that up to 31 December police forces had provided approximately the number of man hours shown in the table in assisting the ambulance service in their areas.

Approximate number of man hours

	Hours
Bedfordshire	17,700
Derbyshire	6,900
Dorset	9,500
Hampshire	5,100
Hertfordshire	31,600
Lincolnshire	2,600
South Yorkshire	27,300
Staffordshire	1,750
Surrey	850
Warwickshire	460
West Mercia	6,100
West Midlands	35,500
West Yorkshire	20,700

I understand that in the Metropolitan police district about 460 officers are usually employed in each 24-hour period assisting the ambulance service.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cost per police man hour of deploying the police on ambulance duties (a) outside London and (b) in London.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The charge that is made by the Metropolitan police to the regional health authority for police officers who assist the London ambulance service is £16·20 per hour of normal duty time worked. Information about the charges made outside London is not available centrally; the level of charge is determined by the relevant police authority.

Visas (Indian Sub-continent)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are waiting for interview in queues 1,2,3 and 4 at each British post on the Indian sub-continent, and if he will give comparable figures for 1988, 1987 and 1986.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 18 December 1989]: The information requested is given in the table.

[2] There were no applicants awaiting for interview in Calcutta.
[3] Queue 1: Persons with a claim to the right of abode, dependent relatives over 70 years old, and special compassionate cases (first-time applicants for settlement).

Queue 2: Spouses, and children under 18 years old (first-time applicants for settlement).
Queue 3: Fiance(e)s and other applicants (first-time applicants for settlement).
Queue 4: Re-applicants for settlement.

[4] Data exclude persons seeking political asylum in the United Kingdom.

[5] Madras did not re-open for entry clearance work until October 1986.

[6] Separate data are not available; re-applicants are included in the data for first-time applicants.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have applied over the past year for visas to visit the United Kingdom from British posts on the Indian sub-continent; how many were (a) granted and (b) refused; and what was the average waiting time for (i) interview and (ii) secured interview.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 18 December 1989]: In the 12 months ending 30 September 1989, 176,500 persons in the Indian sub-continent applied for a visa to visit the United Kingdom; during the same period 151,800 such applications were granted, including those granted on appeal, and 19,400 were refused initially. Visit applications were considered within 24 hours.

Those applicants who then required a detailed interview were usually seen within the 24-hour period except in Madras and Islamabad where the waiting time for applicants interviewed at the end of October 1989 was two to three and eight days respectively. The average waiting time over the latest 12 months is not available centrally because of incomplete information.

Civil Defence

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total amount of civil defence grant aid for (a) staff costs, (b) building work and (c) other costs in the financial years from 1983-84 to 1988-89 and projected for 1989-90, received by each London borough.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 14 December 1989]: The information requested in respect of financial years 1985-86 onwards is shown in the table. Comparable figures for 1983-84 and 1984-85 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many outside accountancy firms are employed by his Department; whether such employment is subject to any guidelines; and whether he takes steps before employing an accountancy firm to discover whether that firm has been censured by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors in their inquiries under the Companies Act.

Mr. Waddington [holding answer 14 December 1989]: The Home Office is currently employing four accountancy firms. Contracts are awarded which provide value for money from competent firms, after consultations as necessary and where appropriate, in the light of advice given by Her Majesty's Treasury.

Arts and Design

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what expenditure was made by his Department on (a) the arts and (b) design in the last financial year.

Mr. Waddington [holding answer 21 December 1989]: A number of items of my Department's expenditure—for example, the provision and maintenance of prisons and programmes for prisoners, and the production of various publications—contain elements that could be classified as expenditure on arts and—or design, but in general it is not practicable to separate and cost those elements.

All prison education departments provide courses in art and craft work, but, because these courses are part of the total education provision, it is not possible to identify separately expenditure on them. Expenditure on the annual Koestler Trust exhibition of prisoners' art and craft is estimated to have been £20,000 in 1988-89.

ENERGY

Plutonium

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy at what point plutonium created in civil reactors under safeguards becomes no longer subject to safeguards when distributed in plutonium-contaminated wastes at Sellafield.

Mr. Baldry: Detailed discussions are continuing with the international safeguards authorities on the safeguards to be applied to waste containing civil nuclear material.

Euratom Annual Safeguards Report

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has received a copy of the 1988-89 Euratom annual safeguards report from the European Commission.

Mr. Baldry: The Secretary of State has received no such report.

Neighbourhood Energy Action

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy from what percentage of projects in England and Wales Neighbourhood Energy Action has received statistical returns.

Mr. Wakeham: In the latest two quarters for which information is available (April to June and July to September 1989) the response rates of projects in England and Wales providing statistical returns to Neighbourhood Energy Action were both over 99 per cent.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will itemise the progress made by the Energy Efficiency Office in developing quality indicators for Neighbourhood Energy Action projects.

Mr. Wakeham: All community insulation projects operating under employment training are contracted to undertake a "standard job" to a specification provided by Neighbourhood Energy Action. In addition, that organisation with the support of the Energy Efficiency Office, is continuing to develop certified training for the benefit of both project staff and trainees.

Gas-fired Power Stations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all the schemes for gas-fired power stations which are known to his Department giving in each case details of the progress of applications for consent to build and operate them and the names of the organisations concerned.

Mr. Wakeham: Not all gas-fired projects known to my Department are in the public domain, and I must respect the wish for commercial confidentiality where it exists. The projects that have been made public, and the consents that I have so far given are:

Company	Project	Consents received
Lakeland Power	Roosecote	Gas burn consent
Thames Power	Barking	Gas burn consent
Hawker Siddeley	Corby	Gas burn consent
	Peterborough	Gas burn consent
Lasmo/Ranger	South Denes	Gas burn consent
British Sugar	Brigg	——
Shell	Shellhaven	——
ICI/Enron	Wilton	——
Sheffield Heat & Power	Sheffield	——
CEGB	Killingholme (A)	Gas burn consent
	Little Barford	Gas burn consent
	Killingholme (PowerGen)	Gas burn consent
	Rye House	Gas burn consent

The stations planned by the CEGB would require capital investment approval in addition to consents from me under section 2 of the Electric Lighting Act 1909. I shall reach decisions in due course. I cannot comment on the position on other consents or authorisations which may be required for these stations from other authorities.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment his Department has made of the likely impact on employment in the mining industry of the proposed gas-fired power station at Killingholme.

Mr. Wakeham: It will be for the British Coal Corporation to assess the implications for its manpower requirements of changes in fuel purchasing arrangements within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what effect the European Community directive prohibiting the use of national gas for power generation is likely to have on gas-fired power station proposals in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Wakeham: The use of gas for power generation is not prohibited by EEC directive 75/404; rather, its use has to meet certain criteria. The Government assess gas-powered generation project proposals against the criteria in the directive, such as the thermal efficiency and environmental impact of the plant.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what estimate his Department has made of the likely impact of gas-fired power stations on the consumption of coal in power stations.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department makes no such estimates; decisions on fossil fuel choice are matters for the industry. Mechanistic scenarios, which are not to be construed as estimates, illustrating the technical options which may be available to curtail emissions of the greenhouse gases from the United Kingdom are however contained in my Department's paper "An evaluation of energy-related greenhouse gas emissions and measures to ameliorate them", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Section 2 of chapter 5 deals with alternative fossil-fuelled power generation.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is his Department's estimate of the likely increase in gas-fired generating capacity in the United Kingdom in each year to 1995;

(2) what is his Department's estimate of the likely percentage of electricity to be generated by gas-fired power stations in each year to 1995.

Mr. Wakeham: This depends on the growth of demand and on decisions to be taken by the electricity industry.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, when he expects to announce his decision on the application to build a gas-fired power station at Killingholme.

Mr. Wakeham: The CEGB has submitted two applications for my consent under section 2 of the Electric Lighting Act 1909 to construct combined cycle gas turbine power stations at Killingholme. My officials are currently discussing a number of points relevant to my consideration of the applications with the CEGB, the relevant local planning authorities and other Government Departments. I will announce my decisions on the two applications when I am ready to do so.

Energy Efficiency

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what financial resources will be made available to the Director General of Electricity Supply to promote energy efficiency and electricity conservation measures.

Mr. Baldry: The Office of Electricity Regulation will be financed by vote with its costs covered through licence fees. It will be for the director general to assess the resources he needs and to manage those resources in the most appropriate way to meet his statutory duties.

Close links are being established between his office and the Energy Efficiency Office to ensure that they both complement and reinforce one another's work in the important area of energy efficiency.

Energy Conservation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will amend the draft licence for electricity suppliers to allow cost-pass-through for energy conservation measures.

Mr. Wakeham: I am reviewing the conditions in all the electricity licences with a view to publishing revised versions of the licences shortly.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Grants

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Oxford, East, Official Report, 18 December, columns 36-40, if he will publish the numbers of students on which his calculations are based for each year from 1990 to 2027.

Mr. Jackson: The table gives estimates of the numbers of students eligible for loans from 1990-91 to 2000-01 inclusive. The basis is the United Kingdom. The figures in annex E of the White Paper rest on a series of assumptions, one being that numbers remain constant after the end of the century. This assumption also applies to the revised estimates of costs and savings.

United Kingdom numbers eligible for loans

Year	(000s)
1990	569·2
1991	582·2
1992	584·6
1993	580·6
1994	576·4
1995	574·3
1996	581·6
1997	600·0
1998	625·7
1999	645·1
2000	655·5

Disabled Students

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to revise the guidelines to local education authorities concerning administration of the disabled students allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: As I indicated in the reply that I gave to my right hon. Friend on 19 December 1989 at columns 219-20, guidance is normally issued to local education authorities following the revision of the mandatory awards regulations. My right hon. Friend will consider later this year what if any new guidance is needed on the disabled students' allowance, after he has reviewed the contents of the regulations in the light of representations received.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether students who become disabled during their course will continue to receive loans.

Mr. Jackson: An eligible student who becomes disabled will remain eligible for loans.

Secondary Schools

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Epping Forest of 29 November, Official Report, columns 261-2, if he will break down the information in (a) and (b) on closures and significant changes of character of secondary schools by the categories (i) to (v) which he has applied in the case of enlarged schools under (c).

Mr. Alan Howarth: The information is given in the table. Figures in respect of school closures are for the total number of schools approved for closure in a given year; the equivalent figures in my answer of 29 November were net of new schools established as a result of amalgamations. Disaggregated figures by gender before 1988 are not available.

Single-Sex Schools

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list by gender of pupils and name single-sex schools which have been closed since 1985.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The names of the single sex maintained and non-maintained schools that have closed in 1985 and onwards are given in the table. The table includes maintained schools that have been closed following the approval of statutory proposals; in some cases for the purpose of amalgamation.

The table is not fully up to date as some replies from local education authorities are still awaited confirming closures in 1989.

Independent schools are shown in the education authority in which they are situated.

Local Management Schemes

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table to show such information as he has to hand from the schemes for local management of schools submitted for his approval by local education authorities under the headings (a) the value of the general schools budget, (b) the value of the mandatory exceptions, (c) the value of the aggregate schools budget, (d) (b) as a percentage of (a) and (e) (c) as a percentage of (a).

Mrs. Rumbold: A table giving such information as is available will be published very shortly.

Teacher Shortages

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children have not been receiving full in-school education since the start of the 1989 autumn term in (a) Vauxhall constituency, (b) Lambeth, (c) the Inner London area, (d) the Greater London area and (e) nationally.

Mrs. Rumbold: The particular data requested are not all available to the Department. At the beginning of the 1989 autumn term, some 200 primary pupils in the area of the Inner London education authority, including about 100 in Lambeth, were sent home from school because of the shortage of teaching staff. The authority was able to recruit more teachers during the term and all these pupils returned to school. Other pupils, on a rotation basis, have been sent home for short spells. The authority is continuing to monitor the situation, and is keeping the Department informed.

The Department does not have equivalent information in respect of the other London boroughs or other parts of the country.

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action his Department will be taking to tackle teacher shortages, particularly in inner-city areas.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Amos) on 14 November 1989 at column 235. In addition, the teaching as a career unit will be assisting in a Londonwide recruitment campaign in collaboration with the ILEA and the London boroughs. My right hon. Friend has also asked the interim advisory committee to look at measures to improve supply in areas where vacancy rates are highest—particularly in Inner London.

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of graduates entered a career in teaching in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Statistics of graduates entering teaching and of the total number of graduates can not readily be compiled on a common basis, so a precise calculation of the first as a percentage of the second is not possible. The table provides the best approximation that can be made from the available data.

[2] First degree United Kingdom domiciled graduates from institutions in England and Wales in the previous academic year (including the Open University). (Figures include an element of estimation).

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what were the total numbers of teachers leaving the profession each year for the last 10 years, indicating whether the reason was (a) retirement and (b) entering a new profession.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The number of teachers leaving full-time service in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available is as follows:

Year ending 31 March

All figures in thousands

	Number
1978	29·8

1983	29·4

	Number
1984	29·6
1985	31·1
1986	31·2
1987	29·0

Information on the nature of these departures is available only for the last two years, and even then does not provide a complete breakdown of destinations. The available data are:

	Year ending 31 March
	1986	1987
	per cent.	per cent.
Percentage of teachers leaving full-time service in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England who:
transferred to other service, full or part-time, in the maintained sector in England or Wales[1]	15	17
transferred to teaching outside the maintained sector[1]	4	4
retired or died	34	30
others	47	49

[1] The Department's "Database of Teacher Records" does not provide complete coverage of the non-maintained sector nor of part-time service within the maintained sector, so these figures may be slightly understated (with the "others" correspondingly overstated).

The "others" category in this table includes teachers leaving for alternative non-teaching employment, but also those withdrawing for family reasons. The sex and age distribution of these cases (more than half are women aged 25-39) suggests that the latter group are a substantial part of the whole.

National Curriculum

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether it is his policy that the 10 subjects of the national curriculum should take up approximately 70 per cent. of the school timetable and that the remaining 30 per cent. should be left for schools to use at their own discretion.

Mrs. Rumbold: Section 4(3) of the Education Reform Act makes it clear that it is for schools themselves to determine how much time should be devoted to the subjects of the national curriculum. I would expect that in key stages 1 to 3 schools will devote the great majority of curriculum time to the national curriculum subjects and to religious education, as they have done in the past. In key stage 4, I would expect that schools will offer some optional subjects outside the national curriculum.

Student Loans Company

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how may people are likely to be employed by the Government to run the Student Loans Company.

Mr. Jackson: Some 130 people are likely to be employed by the Student Loans Company by December 1990. There will be some increase in numbers thereafter as the collections department staff are employed and take-up is known.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate profit levels for the Student Loans Company in each of the next 10 years.

Mr. Jackson: The Student Loans Company will operate at cost. Any income will be offset against the administration costs which will be met by the Government.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate the cost to the Government of running the Student Loans Company for (a) 1990, (b) 1991, (c) 1992, (d) 1993, (e) 1994 and (f) 1995.

Mr. Jackson: The annual administrative costs of the Student Loans Company will be in the order of £10 million to £20 million.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the estimated cost of transferring the Student Loans Company into the hands of the Government.

Mr. Jackson: The Government have purchased the shares of the Student Loans Company Limited at a total cost of £10. The banks agreed to make a contribution of £500,000 towards the preparatory costs of the student loans scheme.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the Government intend to appoint a chairman of the Student Loans Company.

Mr. Jackson: An official of the Department of Education and Science has been appointed chairman of the Student Loans Company.

EMPLOYMENT

Police (Earnings)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, why earnings etc. figures have been left blank for the police in the new earnings survey.

Mr. Nicholls: Footnotes to the relevant tables in the new earnings survey report explain why some figures for certain occupations, including police inspectors and above, have been omitted.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the fall in unemployment since June 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Since June 1987 the level of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in the United Kingdom has fallen by 1,207,500 to 1,649,700 in November 1989 and is now at its lowest level for over nine years.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the rise in the number of people in employment in the last quarter; and what were the comparable figures for other countries in the European Community.

Mr. Nicholls: In the second quarter of 1989, the latest date for which information is available, the civilian work force in employment in the United Kingdom rose by 82,000 (0·3 per cent.) to 26,033,000. Quarterly data are published by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development in respect of some European countries and data for recent quarters are shown in the following table:

Property Services Agency

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any conveniently available figures for the (a) value, and (b) size of Department of Employment property being removed by the Property Services Agency; and how much priority one Department of Employment property is not being renovated, owing to shortage of funds.

Mr. Eggar: The Department of Employment occupies approximately 604,000 sq m of the civil estate, but figures are not conveniently available for the value of these occupations.

Responsibility for maintenance of the civil estate, under the property repayment system (PRS) arrangements, is shared between PSA and Departments. On 24 May 1989, Sir Gordon Manzie, the chief executive of the PSA, informed the Environment Committee that, at current funding levels, it should be possible to clear the backlog of priority maintenance work on the civil estate as a whole by 1995-96. There is, however, no readily available information relating the backlog to individual Department occupations.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many claimants have completed the UB671 since its inception; and how many have been disallowed benefit as a result, for each quarter and by each standard region.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not available.

Jobstart Scheme

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have participated in the 50-plus jobstart scheme in each of the pilot areas; what was the average hourly pay earned by participants, excluding the £20 a week allowance, what was the average amount of hours worked per week by participants; and how many participants remained in employment after the allowance had ceased.

Mr. Eggar: Between the start of the 50-plus Jobstart pilots on 26 June and 15 December 1989 a total of 61 people were accepted on the programme. The breakdown of the number of people on the programme and their average hours and wages by area is as follows:

Area	Participants	Average hourly wage £	Average hours
Dudley and Sandwell	14	2·00	20·0
Leeds	27	2·20	18·7
London South	1	2·00	20·0
Lothian and Borders	19	2·27	17·4

Unemployment Benefits (Adjudication)

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average length of time between a claimant's referral for adjudication and an adjudication officer's decision on grounds of actively seeking work, by standard regions in Great Britain.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average length of time between a claimant's referral for adjudication and an adjudication officer's decision on grounds of refusal of employment by standard Great Britain regions.

Mr. Eggar: Information is not available in the precise form requested. However, the speed with which adjudication officers make decisions—that is, the time between their receiving a referral and reaching a decision —is monitored in a 5 per cent. sample of cases. The sample shows that for the three-month period ending 30 September 1989, the percentage of refusal of employment questions decided within four weeks of referral to an adjudication officer, for each employment service region, was as follows:

Refusal of employment

Southern	73

Footwear and Textile Industries

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what numbers of jobs there have been in (a) footwear and (b) textile industries for each year since 1979; and how many have been lost in each industry in 1989, by month.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is supplied in the table.

Employment Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of trainees in employment training for the most recent date for which information is available in Great Britain and in each of the standard regions, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 21 December 1989]: The information is not available in the precise form requested. Information is available only for the eight Training Agency regions in England and for Scotland and Wales. The latest available figures of employment training filled places are given in the table.

Employment training
Number in-training at 8 December 1989

Region	Numbers
South East	14,300
London	21,400
South West	12,300
West Midlands	23,100
East Midlands and Eastern	16,900
Yorkshire and Humberside	25,600
North West	29,400
Northern	24,500
Wales	16,500
Scotland	26,400
Great Britain	[1]211,000

[1] Including a small number of trainees at Residential Training Colleges and other training providers not identified separately in the regional totals.

PRIME MINISTER

Nuclear Energy Projects

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will initiate a review of all statements since 1979 made to the House by Ministers having responsibility for military and civil nuclear energy projects and programmes, to assess whether they require revision in the light of official information made public under the 30-year rule on 1 January 1990.

The Prime Minister: No.

Eastern Europe

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to meet the Heads of Government of (a) Bulgaria, (b) East Germany, and (c) Czechoslovakia, to discuss the creation of free markets in those countries.

The Prime Minister: I have no immediate plans to meet the Heads of Government of Bulgaria, East Germany or Czechoslovakia. I have no doubt that when I do meet them, economic reform will be high on the agenda.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has made to President Gorbachev regarding the political situation in eastern Europe.

The Prime Minister: We and other western Governments have kept in close contact with the Soviet authorities over developments in eastern Europe. This was one of the topics at my meeting with Mr. Shevardnadze on 19 December.

Science and the Environment

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if she will place in the Library a copy of her speech on science and environment, given as the 50th anniversary lecture of the parliamentary and scientific committee on 6 December 1989.

The Prime Minister: A copy is available in the Libary of the House.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Market Research

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many market research and sample surveys were carried out by or for his Department in the last 12 months; what was the cost of each; what was the total cost; how many were carried out in-house; how many were carried out for his Department by outside organisations; and what percentage of the total expenditure was paid to outside organisations.

Mr. Cope: A total of 38 sample surveys were carried out in the target period of which eight were continuous or annual surveys, for example, the family expenditure survey and the labour force survey. The remainder were ad-hoc surveys of varying size and complexity.

Total expenditure was £954,000 with the costs of individual surveys ranging from £400 to £192,000. Twenty-two surveys were conducted in-house (cost £832,000) and 16 were carried out for the Department by outside organisations (cost £122,000). Payment to outside organisations accounted for 13 per cent. of total expenditure.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons above the age of (a) 60, (b) 65 and (c) 70 years he has appointed to public bodies in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Cope: The information requested is as follows:

	Over 60	Over 65	Over 70
1980	3	6	—
1981	2	1	—
1982	8	7	—
1983	4	4	—
1984	3	1	—
1985	9	2	—
1986	8	6	—
1987	3	3	—
1988	11	7	—
1989	2	5	1
Totals	53	42	1

The figures include reappointments.

Fishery Conservancy Board

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many statutory pollution samples have been taken by the Northern Ireland Fishery Conservancy Board in the past 12 months; what was the cost of taking each sample; how many such samples proved positive; how many such samples resulted in prosecution in court; and how many such prosecutions were successful.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: During 1988, the latest period for which complete statistics are available, 198 statutory samples were taken by the Fisheries Conservancy Board for Northern Ireland. Information on the cost of taking each sample is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

All the statutory samples proved to be polluting. Of these samples, 98 resulted in prosecution in court with 92 leading to convictions; four cases are still pending.

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how the Northern Ireland Fishery Conservancy Board is funded: what is the total number of bailiffs employed by the Northern Ireland Fishery Conservancy Board; what is the number of permanent bailiffs employed; what is the average probationary period served by a bailiff before he becomes permanent.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Fisheries Conservancy Board for Northern Ireland is responsible for the conservation and protection of salmon and inland fisheries of Northern Ireland other than the fisheries of the Londonderry area of the Foyle Fisheries Commission. The board derives licence revenue from commercial fishermen and anglers to offset the cost of carrying out those functions. In addition the board carries out and receives agency fees for water pollution control work on behalf of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland and providing bailiffs for public fisheries on behalf of the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland. The total number of bailiffs presently employed by the board is 48: of these, 14 are permanent bailiffs.

While the turnover of permanant staff is small, the probationary period for a new permanent bailiff is six months after which the appointment is confirmed, subject, of course, to a satisfactory report. This period may be extended or the appointment terminated in the event of an unsatisfactory report.

Strangford Lough

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will replace the CNCC with a democratically constituted council; and if he will make a statement about public participation in the management of area of special scientific interest Strangford lough part 3.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Council for Nature Conservation and the Countryside (CNCC) was recently established under the provisions of article 3 of the Nature Conservation and Amenity Lands (Amendment) (Northern Ireland) Order 1989, and its constitution was very carefully considered. The membership of the council represents a wide range of interests and experience throughout Northern Ireland. It provides sound and balanced views on conservation matters. There are no plans to amend the legislation.

The management of the lands within the Strangford lough (part 3) area of special scientific interest (ASSI) depends on co-operation between individual owners and occupiers and the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland. It is not an appropriate matter for public participation.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to involve the loughside community in the management of the Strangford lough foreshores; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The management of the Strangford lough area of special scientific interest (ASSI), which mainly comprises the Strangford lough foreshores, is a matter between the individual owners and occupiers and the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland. At the time the declaration of Strangford lough (part 3) ASSI was confirmed I stated that a locally based and organised voluntary group representative of the wide variety of interests concerned could be very useful to the Department in preparing its proposals for the marine nature reserve in Strangford lough. I also indicated that I hoped that local people would take forward this suggestion which I had welcomed.

Agricultural Advisory Service

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what amount of money has been received for advice given following the introduction of charges by the Agricultural Advisory Service; how many persons have been given advice; and what were the comparable figures for the equivalent period prior to the introduction of charges.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Following the introduction of charging by the advisory services of the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland in October 1988 a total of £224,000 has been received up to November 1989.

Advice, some of which continues to be free, is given in a variety of ways both to individuals through farm visits, office consultations and by telephone and to groups through events, meetings, advisory letters, press articles, media broadcasts and publications notably "Agriculture in Northern Ireland". During any given period a farmer may get advice in more than one way. Currently our records which are compiled for each financial year are as follows:—

	1987-88	1988-89
Farms Visited	16,827	14,442
Attendance at meetings/events	34,006	29,744
Advisory letters	20,268	38,500
Press articles	416	403
Media broadcasts	21	36
"Agriculture in Northern Ireland"	12,125	12,958

Harbours

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the level of harbour dues for (a) boats, (b) yachts and (c) other sea-going vessels at the harbours of Portrush, Ballycastle, Bangor, Ardglass and Portstewart.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 19 December 1989]: The harbours at Portrush, Portstewart, Ballycastle and Bangor are owned and operated by the Coleraine, Moyle and North Down councils respectively and the information sought is not available in my Department.

The Ardglass harbour is the responsibility of the Northern Ireland Fishery Harbour Authority. Charges at Ardglass are as follows:—

Fishing Vessels
Over 15 tons gross—£50 per annum
Under 15 tons—£25 per annum

Cargo and other commercial vessles
EC Vessels—15p per tonne per visit
Outside EC—21p per tonne per visit
If vessels stay over 1 week an extra 11p per tonne is charged for each week thereafter.

All other craft
30p per metre for each week or part thereof except for vessels in a reserved area (for yachts and pleasure crafts) 15p per metre each week or part thereof.

ENVIRONMENT

European Environmental Monitoring

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what European Community funds are being, or will be, directed to the establishment of the European Environment Agency in 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92;

(2) what European Community funds are being, or will be, directed to the establishment of the European monitoring and information system in 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Trippier: The establishment of the European Environment Agency and the European monitoring and information system are integral parts of a single proposal. As such it is inappropriate and impossible to distinguish separate expenditure elements. The cost of establishing and maintaining the agency and the underlying network in the first year of operations is estimated at 5·5 million ecu, equivalent to about £3·8 million. Budget estimates for later years are not available.

CORINE Programme

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what European Community funds have so far been directed to the establishment of the CORINE programme; and what is the predicted annual funding of the programme in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Trippier: Up to 1989, 4 million ecu (£2·8 million) have been directed to the CORINE programme. For 1989, expenditure is estimated at 3 million ecu (£2·1 million) and for 1990 expenditure earmarked at 4·5 million ecu (£3·1 million). After 1990, it is envisaged that CORINE-related work will pass to the proposed European Environment Agency.

European Environment Statistics Office

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what European Community funds will be directed to the European environment statistics office in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Trippier: A separate European environment statistics office does not exist. A four-year programme to develop regular official statistics of the environment is currently being proposed within the statistical office of the European Communities. The proposed budget for the period amounts to 13·3 million ecu, approximately £9·3 million, with £0·7 million earmarked for 1990, £1·9 million for 1991, £2·8 million for 1992 and £3·9 million for 1993.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the cost to the Economic Community each year since its inception of the European environment statistics office.

Mr. Trippier: A separate European environment statistics office does not exist. The statistical office of the European Communities collects, co-ordinates and disseminates statistics to assist in the formulation and monitoring of a wide range of Community policies. The office is mainly concerned with economic and social statistics; its programme of work on environmental statistics has only recently begun with appropriations being met from the general budget of the European Communities.

European Environment Agency

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment pursuant to his reply of 30 November to the hon. Member for Billericay, Official Report, column 368, if he will undertake a survey of businesses to determine their view of the usefulness of the European Environment Agency.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The objectives of the proposed European Environment Agency are to assemble, co-ordinate and analyse environmental information to inform and support Community environment policy. There is no intention to place further burdens on industry by surveying their views on the proposal.

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report his letter of 6 December to the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green concerning the seventh report of the Environment Committee of Session 1988-89, relating to the proposed European Environment Agency.

Mr. Chris Patten: The text of my letter was as follows:

"Your Committee took evidence from my officials on 8th November and produced an admirably clear report in time for the debate in the House on 12th November; we appreciate this.

For the record I can say that Government policy is very much in line with the Committee's recommendations.

In particular:

Paragraph 1: The Committee's agreement with the DOE view on duties of the Agency is noted.

Paragraph 11: The Government agrees that "in the first instance the Agency should be set up as a Community body".

Paragraph 12: The Draft Regulation requires separate agreements to be established with third countries covering all aspects of participation; but the need to include voting rights and the financial contribution issue is noted.

Paragraph 14: The need to recognise the value of the information holding of NGO's is important and the Committee is right to stress the advantages of collaboration between the Agency and the NGO's in this area.

Paragraph 15: I shall be keeping the staffing implications of the proposal under review as far as my Department is concerned.

Paragraph 16: The Committee's support for the Government bid for the Agency to be located in the United Kingdom is welcome.

Please convey my thanks to your Committee for their speedy and helpful examination of this issue. Your findings were helpful in the discussions in the Environment Council on 28th November and you might like to know that the location of the Agency is now the only significant outstanding issue as far as Environment Ministers are concerned. You may have seen that the Government has now offered Cambridge as a suitable location; no decision has yet been taken however at Community level."

Housing Needs Index

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his review of the housing needs index and on the effect on the apportioning of capital funds to housing associations in the north-west of England of this review.

Mr. Chope: My hon. and learned Friend the then Minister for Housing and Planning announced on Wednesday 20 December 1989, in answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Edmonton (Dr. Twinn), his decisions on the Housing Corporation's approved development programme for 1990-91. The number of new housing association dwelling units to be approved in the north-west region is planned to increase in each of the next three years, though the proportionate increase will be less than in some other regions.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library as soon as possible a full list of non-domestic revaluations arising out of the Local Government (Finance) Act 1988.

Mr. David Hunt: I shall make available in the Library as soon as possible microfiche copies of the draft local non-domestic rating lists for England and Wales which have been sent to local authorities by the valuation office.

Derelict Land

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce his decision on the joint rolling programme submission by North Staffordshire local authorities for derelict land programme assistance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department will announce decisions on the regional distribution of derelict land grant resources for 1990-91 shortly. At the same time, we will announce the rolling programme which the Department is prepared to support.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his departmental library holds copies of the International Atomic Energy Agency waste management research abstracts on radioactive waste programmes in progress.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Copies are held by the Department.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his departmental library receives a copy of the bimonthly information bulletin on radioactive wastes and fuel reprocessing, produced by Harwell Information Services.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Yes.

Nirex (Safety Research)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the 1988-89 report on the United Kingdom Nirex safety assessment research programme.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I understand that the report is expected to be published by the end of January 1990. Distribution of the report is a matter for United Kingdom Nirex.

Insulation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make cavity wall insulation and double glazing mandatory requirements in building regulations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. The thermal insulation standards in the Building Regulations 1985 have recently been upgraded, and we estimate that these amendments will achieve a saving of around 20 per cent. in energy requirements for space and water heating in new houses and other buildings. Cavity wall insulation and double glazing are methods of meeting these requirements, but there are also other ways of doing so. We consider that architects and builders should be allowed the maximum flexibility to choose for themselves whch is the most appropriate way of meeting the higher standards, which are due to come into force on 1 April.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will update his Department's 1985 estimates of the amount needed to be spent on the insulation of local authority houses in England and generally on heating, insulation and works to remedy condensation.

Mr. Chope: The Department's most recent estimate of the amount needed to be spent on the insulation of local authority houses in England is £880 million, and on heating, insulation and works to remedy condensation £3,100 million. These figures are based on analysis of the 1986 English house condition survey. They are at 1984 prices and therefore comparable with the Department's estimates reported in 1985.

Departmental Finance

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when MINIS 10 was completed; when it was placed in the Library; and if he will make a statement in its findings.

Mr. Chris Patten: I reviewed the outcome of MINIS 10 on 3 October 1989 and subsequently authorised publication. Copies of MINIS 10 were sent to the Library on 15 November 1989.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give for each year since 1978 the spending on loft and wall insulation measures in local authority housing stock, consistent with the figure of £146 million stated in paragraph 3.40 of the National Audit Office's "National Energy Efficiency".

Mr. Chope [holding answer 18 December 1989]: The figure given in paragraph 3.40 of the National Audit Office's report was based on analysis of the 1986 English house condition survey. Comparable figures for earlier years are not available.

Microwave Ovens (Palace of Westminster)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the location and make of each microwave oven within the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 18 December 1989]: A total of 14 microwave ovens in use on the parliamentary estate have been provided by my Department. They are located in either the Refreshment Department or mess facilities and comprise seven Merrychefs, five National Panasonics, one Moulinex and one Sharp.

Craven Cottage

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) on what criteria he based his decision to set the date of the inquiry concerning Craven Cottage at 30 January 1990;

(2) on what date Hammersmith council was notified that Mr. Palmer had been appointed to preside at the inquiry concerning Craven Cottage;

(3) on what date Mr. Martin replaced Mr. Palmer on the inquiry concerning Craven Cottage; and why Hammersmith council was not given an opportunity to make representations on this matter;

(4) when the date of the public inquiry on 30 January 1990 into the London borough of Hammersmith and Fulham's compulsory purchase order of Craven Cottage was set; and when his Department received the council's compulsory purchase order;

(5) whether he received any representations from any person concerning the appointment of Mr. Palmer to the inquiry concerning Craven Cottage.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 20 December 1989]: The compulsory purchase order was received on 30 May 1989 and the date of the public inquiry on 30 January 1990 was set on 25 September, after consultation with the parties on alternative dates in the usual way. The Department has no record of when Hammersmith council was told the name of the inspector. Mr. Stephen Marks was substituted for Mr. Palmer on 10 November after representations were received from the agents for the owners. It is not departmental practice to invite the parties to an inquiry to comment upon the choice of inspector.

Arts and Design

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what expenditure was made by his Department on (a) the arts and (b) design in the last financial year.

Mr. Chris Patten [holding answer 21 December 1989]: The Government's support for the arts, as the term is commonly used, is primarily a matter for my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts. I have joint responsibility with my right hon. Friend for the grant in aid to the national heritage memorial fund, and for the acceptance of land, property and works of art in lieu of tax. In the last financial year (1988-89) expenditure was split equally £3 million (£1·5 million each) and £2 million (£1 million each) respectively.

More generally my Department contributed to expenditure on the arts in 1988-89 where inner city regeneration is concerned, for example through grant in aid to urban development corporations—the London Docklands development corporation spending £75,000 in 1988-89.

Among all its activities, PSA included, the Department aims to encourage good design especially through the public bodies it sponsors. Specifically, it has incurred expenditure of £365,000 through its sponsorship of the Royal Fine Art Commission, and contributed £12,000 as its share of the costs of the housing design awards, the other contributors being the Royal Institute of British Architects and the National House Building Council.

Radioactivity

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information on radioactivity released has been withheld in 1989 under section 8(5)(b) of the Radioactive Substances Act 1960.

Mr. Trippier: It is not Government policy to reveal the existence of any authorisation to dispose of radioactive waste restricted under the terms of section 8(5)(b) of the Radioactive Substances Act 1960.

Rutland Water

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will call for a report from the National Rivers Authority into the progress of the investigation since 27 November into the death of dogs and sheep connected with the Rutland Water, and whether he will instruct the authority to complete its report in sufficient time to enable remedial action to be taken before summer 1990.

Mr. Trippier: I am satisfied with the progress which the NRA is making in compiling its report into the causes of last year's toxic algae problem which will take account of the findings arising from the studies being conducted into animal deaths at Rutland Water. These are primarily matters for the NRA which I understand will address the question of remedial action in its report which it aims to complete this summer.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, following the meeting between the Minister of State, the hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) and the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton on 27 November, he has obtained copies of (a) the findings by Professor Codd of Dundee university regarding the toxicity of algae at Rutland Water and (b) the findings of the veterinary service of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, regarding post mortems on dead dogs and sheep; when this information will be made available to the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Results of the work carried out by Professor Codd to establish the toxicity of the algae at Rutland Water have been placed on the NRA public registers. The studies being conducted by the veterinary service of MAFF and Professor Codd on the animal deaths at Rutland Water are continuing and final results are not yet available.

Water Privatisation

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the total cost to public funds of advertising for the privatisation of water;

(2) what was the total cost to public funds of the flotation of the water industry in fees to City advisers;

(3) what was the total cost to the Government of the flotation of the water industry.

Mr. Trippier: It is too soon for these cost totals to be known. The full costs of the flotation of the water industry will be reported to Parliament in due course in the normal way.

WALES

Local Government Finance

24. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assumptions he has made with regard to those domestic rates being paid by second home owners in Wales, in preference to personal community charge; and upon what basis such non-domestic rate income will be distributed between district councils in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have made no such assumptions. Domestic rates will not be payable by second-home owners from April 1990, whether in preference to personal community charge or otherwise. Standard community charges will be payable on domestic properties that do not constitute any person's sole or main residence; the income from these charges will accrue to the local authorities in the areas where the properties are situated—it will not be distributed between district councils in Wales.

Income from non-domestic properties will be pooled and redistributed between district and county councils as an amount per head of population in each receiving authority's area.

Farm Woodlands Scheme

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the operation of the farm woodlands scheme in Wales; and what is the current uptake.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department has received 38 applications for planting on 286 hectares of land. Twenty-two applications in respect of 188 hectares have already been approved, three applications for 12 hectares have either been withdrawn or rejected and those remaining are being processed.

Eggs

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will undertake a review of the overall effectiveness of recent legislation affecting the egg-producing industry in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: It is too early at this stage to gauge the effectiveness of the various measures to control salmonella, since the legislation has been introduced only recently. It will be reviewed in due course.

Works of Art

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list (a) German expressionist, (b) 20th century Welsh, (c) Piccassos, (d) Dutch 17th century, (e) Italian renaissance and (f) French impressionist works of art in Wales, owned by the state; how much money each cost the state; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the works of art produced in (a) 1945 to 1964, (b) 1965 to 1977, (c) 1978-87 and (d) 1988 to 1989 owned by the state; if he will indicate which of those were produced either partly or wholly by public funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: We have no direct responsibility for any works of art within the categories listed. Information on items held by non-departmental public bodies is not held centrally. Items from the Government art collection are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts.

HEALTH

Medical Equipment

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps have been taken to act on the recommendations of the 1986 Advisory Council for Applied Research and Development report on medical equipment.

Mr. Freeman: The Government's response to the report, summarising action then being taken or planned on the report's recommendations, was published in February 1987. A wide programme of improvements has been implemented and further developments in the fields of research, evaluation and equipment management are being vigorously pursued. Inter alia the research and development coordinating committee of the Department of Health, Department of Trade and Industry, Medical Research Council and the Science and Engineering Council, which meets quarterly, has made considerable progress in identifying and eliminating gaps and overlaps in the research and development medical equipment field to ensure that available resources are used as effectively as possible.

Nurses

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what instruction he has as to how many (a) trained and (b) untrained nursing staff were employed in (i) the private sector and (ii) the public sector, for each of the years 1978 to 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The available information is given in the tables.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for each year since 1959 the number of nurses employed by the National Health Service, with each year also expressed as a percentage change of the previous year.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in the table.

National Health Service nursing and midwifery staff in post (including agency) at 30 September each year

[1] The manpower figures are independently rounded to the nearest hundred (100) wholetime equivalents. Percentage changes calculated on unrounded figures. * indicates less than 0·1 per cent.

[2] England and Wales figures are for hospital based staff only whereas England figures related to total nursing and midwifery staff. In addition, because of changes and improvements in the collection and processing of the data between 1959 and 1988 the information is not strictly comparable. Figures for England only are not available prior to 1971.

[3] Includes qualified nurses and midwives, learners and unqualified nursing staff.

[4] The figures have not been adjusted for changes in the working week introduced over the period shown.

Milk Discount Tokens

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage he intends to introduce on milk discount tokens: what discussions he has had with self-employed milk-round persons: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Government currently pay the full retail price for liquid milk they buy for the welfare milk scheme at an annual cost of approximately £80 million. In view of the size and value of the Department's purchase detailed commercial negotiations have taken place with the dairy trade. Following these negotiations we intend to implement a new pricing structure that will represent a reduction of approximately 10 per cent. of the current average price paid to welfare milk suppliers.

This decision has been arrived at after an extensive period of negotiation, consultation and consideration. There will be provision to enable this reduction to be shared between all sectors of the trade on a voluntary basis.

People entitled to liquid welfare milk will continue to receive seven pints of milk per week entirely free of any charge.

Hypertension

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what increase in the number of reported cases of hypertension there has been arising directly from the growing incidence of health scares.

Mr. Freeman: We have no statistics on any such increase.

Campylobacter

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Caerphilly of 19 December 1989 concerning campylobacter, cryptosporiduim and leptospira; whether the number of incidents of campylobacter infection represents outbreaks or individual cases.

Mr. Freeman: The figures given represent numbers of cases, not outbreaks.

Cancer Screening

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the shortfall in cancer screening services available to women in high risk groups in Staffordshire; and what steps are being taken to provide a full service.

Mr. Freeman: The provision of cancer screening services in Staffordshire is a matter for the three Staffordshire district health authorities and for Staffordshire family practitioner committee.

However, I understand that computerised call and recall programmes have been or are being introduced for cervical and breast cancer screening in line with national guidance.

Dental Treatment

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what are the monthly breakdown figures for courses of dental treatment completed since charges for dental examinations came into operation;

(2) what are the monthly breakdown figures for courses of dental treatment, on the most convenient regional basis, since charges for dental examination came into operation.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to my reply on 12 December 1989 at column 628.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the monthly breakdown figures of courses of treatment of (a) those under 18 years of age, (b) those who are over 18 years but are fully exempt from dental charges, (c) those over 18 years who are partially exempt from dental charges and (d) those who are over 18 years but are fully liable for dental charges, in the period since dental charges for examinations came into operation.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to my reply on 12 December 1989 at column 627.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any additional dental educational programmes in mind to promote awareness of the proposed capitation arrangements for children and continuing care contracts for adults, under the current dental contract being negotiated.

Mr. Freeman: If, as the Government hope, the proposals for a new dental contract are accepted by the profession and implemented in October 1990, there will be an important role for postgraduate education in promoting awareness of the matters mentioned by the hon. Member. Postgraduate dental Deans and others concerned with the supply of education to dentists are aware of this potential need, and are taking it into account in their planning.

Dental Caries

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what current statistical inquiries are in train, to gain a more accurate picture of dental caries among children in particular localities, especially in inner city areas.

Mr. Freeman: It is the responsibility of district health authorities to monitor the dental health of all age groups in the population of their areas and to plan jointly with family practitioner committees the provision of local dental services. Information about local inquiries currently in train is not held centrally.

The Department commissioned national surveys of children's dental health in 1973 and 1983, and it is expected that a further survey will be conducted in 1993.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provisions there are in the contract currently being negotiated with the dental profession to adjust capitation payments to the differing workloads which will arise from varying rates of dental caries in particular localities.

Mr. Freeman: Under the proposals for a new contract for general dental practitioners, the initial fee paid to a dentist for treating a child entering capitation will be greater if the child has large numbers of decayed teeth. This will greatly benefit dentists in localities with high incidence of dental caries. There are no proposals to adjust capitation payments to take account of regional variations in work loads.

Dental Forms

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when a new and correctly drafted supply of orthodontic dental forms FP17(O) will be generally available to the dental profession; and what steps have been taken to inform dental practitioners of the current situation with regard to consequential matters.

Mr. Freeman: Family practitioner committees were notified of a delay in the printing of the revised form FP17(O), and were asked to inform individual general dental practitioners. The Dental Practice Board and FPCs have dealt with questions arising from the delay. We expect the new form to be available towards the end of January 1990.

Intensive Care Cots

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by district and by region the number of paediatric intensive care cots and the percentage change since 1980.

Mr. Freeman: Information on paediatric as opposed to neonatal intensive care cots is not collected centrally.

General Practitioners

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will monitor the reasons in all the cases where patients have been taken off their general practitioner's list at their general practitioner's initiative; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will specify for each family practitioner committee how many people in each of the last three years were removed from their general practitioner's list on the initiative of the general practitioner; and what percentage of them were over 65 years.

Mr. Freeman: Information on the removal of patients from general medical practitioners' lists is not routinely collected and none is held centrally.

Respite Care

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will say how many beds are made available for the purposes of respite care, for each regional health authority in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not held centrally. The Government consider respite nursing care services to be an integral part of NHS provision for those groups of patients who require it. However, the actual level of service to be provided by a health authority is a matter for that authority to decide for itself.

Health Authorities

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number and percentage of (a) women and (b) men members on each (i) district health authority and (ii) regional health authority.

Mr. Freeman: Details of the membership of district health authorities are not held centrally. The figures for regional health authorities are given in the table:

Number and percentage of men and women members of regional health authorities

Region	Male	Percentage	Female	Percentage
Northern	9	60	6	40
Yorkshire	10	62	6	38
Trent	11	61	7	39
East Anglian	11	73	4	27
North West Thames	10	56	8	44
North East Thames	10	71	4	29
South East Thames	9	56	7	44
South West Thames	12	75	4	25
Wessex	11	69	5	31
Oxford	10	67	5	33
South Western	11	65	6	35
West Midlands	12	75	4	25
Mersey	9	60	6	40
North Western	9	64	5	36
Total	144	65	77	35

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number and percentage of women chairs of (a) district health authorities and (b) regional health authorities.

Mr. Freeman: Thirty-two women (18 per cent.) are chairmen of district health authorities, and one woman (7 per cent.) is chairman of a regional health authority.

Hospital Accommodation

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which hospitals routinely make accommodation available for the parents of children detained overnight in hospital.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not available centrally. Statistical return KHO4 includes, at district health authority level, the numbers of parents accommodated and the numbers of bed days used by parents in respect of babies up to the age of 28 days detained in hospital, but the information for the first year of this new return, in 1988-89, is incomplete.

AIDS

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are known to be suffering from AIDS, and how many to be HIV positive, as a result of receiving a transfusion of whole blood before screening was introduced in October 1985; how many such infected people have already died; and whether the Government's compensation scheme for haemophiliacs will be extended to cover such people.

Mr. Freeman: The position at the end of September 1989, as reported to the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre, is that in England, Wales and Northern Ireland, there have been 15 cases of AIDS in people known to have been transfused in the United Kingdom, of whom 13 are known to be dead. Fourteen of the 15 are known to have been transfused before October1985, the remaining person was transfused in 1985 but the month is unknown. Of 17 known HIV seropositives transfused in the United Kingdom, 13 were transfused before October 1985, and 4 at a date as yet unknown. There are also 45 known seropositives whose country of transfusion is still under investigation.

The Government grants to provide financial assistance for haemophiliacs with HIV infection are ex-gratia payments and not compensation. These payments recognise the wholly exceptional combination of circumstances affecting those haemophiliacs.

We have no plans to extend the remit of the MacFarlane Trust to include those who are now HIV positive as a result of "whole" blood transfusions.

Spinal Units

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what extra monies have been allocated to supra-regional spinal units consequent upon his announcement of 14 December 1989 of a cash increase for the National Health Service in 1990-91.

Mr. Freeman: Spinal injury services will receive a total revenue allocation of £15·4 million in 1990-91, compared with an allocation of £14·4 million in 1989-90.

I am arranging for copies of the detailed announcement on supra-regional services, which I made on 3 January on behalf of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health, to be placed in the Library.

Nursing Officers

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of nursing officer posts are held by (a) men and (b) women.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 20 December 1989]: In the NHS in England at 30 September 1988, 18 per cent. of the posts of Sister I and above (ie Nursing Officer posts) were held by men and 82 per cent. women.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

NATO

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for the Western Isles, of 11 December, Official Report, column 497, what other military functions, apart from training, versions and variants of NATO combat aircraft have been modified to perform.

Mr. Waldegrave: NATO combat aircraft have been modified to perform a variety of functions. In the case of the United Kingdom, roles of various RAF squadrons are set out in annex C of the statements on the defence Estimates of 1989 (CM 675/1).

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for the Western Isles, of 14 December, Official Report, column 762, when the United Kingdom will provide information on the types of each of the main categories of weapon equipment holdings to the conventional forces in Europe negotiations; and if he will make this information available to Parliament.

Mr. Waldegrave: The proposals that NATO has tabled in the CFE negotiations in Vienna envisage an exchange of information on national holdings between parties on signature of a treaty. The information provided by the United Kingdom will be made available to the House.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any of the aircraft in storage that are included in the current NATO total of 6,700 combat aircraft are in addition to those mentioned in footnote 4, page 27 of Conventional Forces in Europe: The Facts.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any of the combat-capable training aircraft included in the current NATO total of 6,700 combat aircraft are in addition to those mentioned in footnote 5 of page 27 of Conventional Forces in Europe: The Facts.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will list the specific types of combat aircraft that have been included in the overall total of 6,700 NATO combat aircraft that are in addition to those itemised in page 27 of Conventional Forces in Europe: The Facts.

Mr. Waldegrave: As explained in footnotes 4 and 5 on page 27 of Conventional Forces in Europe: The Facts, the figures for NATO combat aircraft do not include combat-capable trainers and aircraft in storage. Those aircraft, together with versions and variants of types listed in footnote 1 which have another military function between them, raise the NATO total to 6,600. The definition of such aircraft was given in my reply to the hon. Member for Western Isles on 11 December.

Hong Kong

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make it his policy that statements taken by Hong Kong immigration officers from boat people are read back to or read by the appellant and that the appellant is allowed to amend the statements and sign them.

Mr. Maude: Any statements taken by Hong Kong immigration officers which require clarification are read back to the interviewees to ensure accuracy. The UNHCR and its designated agency have access to the questionnaire completed for all boat people at the start of the screening procedure so that they can assist the asylum seeker to make any further representations at the review stage.

Mr. Tony Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the further difficult decisions concerning Hong Kong referred to in his statement of 20 December, column 363.

Mr. Maude: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made clear in his statement on 20 December, our continuing responsibility for Hong Kong over the next eight years will involve us in a variety of complex and difficult decisions. Those decisions span the whole range of Hong Kong issues related to the effective administration of the territory and the implementation of the joint declaration. One such decision involves steps to be taken to develop democracy further in Hong Kong.

Takrouna Monument

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to protect and preserve the monument at Takrouna, Tunisia, which commemorates the relief of that strongpoint by the Eighth Army and the Free French Forces in April 1943.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have no responsibility for this monument, which is threatened by mining operations. But our embassy in Tunis is monitoring the situation and is ready to find an appropriate alternative site if necessary for the commemorative plaque.

Panama

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any humanitarian assistance has been offered to authorities in Panama following the invasion of that country by United States forces.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place with European Economic Community governments since the United States of America invasion of Panama; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: EC Foreign Ministers discussed Panama in Paris on 22 December.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reasons were given by the President of the United States of America for the invasion of Panama when he sought endorsement for his actions from Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Sainsbury: President Bush has stated that the United States military intervention in Panama had four objectives: to safeguard the lives of American citizens, to help restore democracy, to protect the integrity of the Panama canal treaties, and to bring General Noriega to justice.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps were taken by Her Majesty's Government to establish the legality of the United States invasion of Panama before endorsement of such action was given.

Mr. Sainsbury: The American action was undertaken with the agreement of the leaders who clearly won the elections held last May. We had no hesitation in welcoming the establishment of democratic government in Panama and giving full support to the action that led to this. General Noriega's arbitrary rule was maintained by force. There can be no suggestion that he represented legality.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a British Minister last visited Panama.

Mr. Sainsbury: My noble Friend Baroness Young, the then Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, visited Panama in November 1983.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which European Economic Community countries, other than the United Kingdom, have expressed official support for the United States invasion of Panama; which of them have recognised the regime of Mr. Guillermo Endara; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Several EC member states made statements on 20 December. Italy, Germany and the Netherlands expressed understanding of the United States action. EC Foreign Ministers issued a joint statement on 22 December. It is the practice of the United Kingdom and other EC countries to recognise states rather than Governments, so the question of formal recognition does not arise. Heads of mission of the five EC member states with resident representation in Panama—United Kingdom, France, Germany, Italy, Spain—called on Sr. Linares, the Foreign Minister of President Endara's new Government, on 4 January.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why the United Kingdom exercised a veto in the United Nations Security Council on the motion condemning the United States invasion of Panama; and if he will list each occasion in the past three years when Her Majesty's Government's representative at the United Nations has exercised a veto.

Mr. Sainsbury: Together with the United States and France, we exercised our veto on the draft resolution on the situation in Panama because it was seriously unbalanced. Canada also voted against. Finland abstained.

The United Kingdom has exercised a veto in the United Nations Security Council on four other occasions since January 1987:

Date
20 February 1987	South Africa
9 April 1987	Question of Namibia
8 March 1988	Sanctions against South Africa
11 January 1989	Shooting down of Libyan jet

Arts and Design

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what expenditure was made by his Department on (a) the Arts and (b) design in the last financial year.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 21 December 1989]: Such detailed information could be provided only at disproportionate cost, but we are aware that our principal expenditure on the arts is almost exclusively channelled through the British Council, which in 1988-89 spent £13·3 million of the diplomatic wing's direct grant of £58·1 million on the promotion overseas of British artistic achievements.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Estate Agents

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total cost to his Department of the Likierman report; and if he will give a breakdown of the major areas of cost.

Mr. Redwood: We provided the secretariat for the steering group and the auditors study team in the review of professional liability under the overall chairmanship of Professor Andrew Likierman. The total cost of this was £26,500, of which £24,000 was spent on staff costs including accommodation and the remaining £2,500 on consultancy and other miscellaneous costs.

Companies Act Investigations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what actions are taken by his Department against accountancy firms criticised in his inspector's reports on inquiries under the Companies Act.

Mr. Forth: Such action as may be appropriate in the circumstances which may include disclosure of information with a view to the institution of, or otherwise for the purposes of, any disciplinary proceedings relating to the exercise by an auditor or an accountant of his professional duties.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times accountancy firms have been criticised for the audits in investigations conducted by his Department under the Companies Act; how many firms these criticisms apply to; and what action is taken by his Department when such criticisms are made.

Mr. Forth: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. My Department takes such action as is appropriate when accountancy firms are criticised in investigations. This may include disclosure of information with a view to the institution of, or otherwise for the purpose of, any disciplinary proceedings relating to the exercise by an auditor or an accountant of his professional duties.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many inquiries conducted under the Companies Act he has ordered since January 1979; how many have reported; how many of these reports have been published; how many of those not published have been communicated in any way to professional bodies; and how many of (a) the published reports and (b) the unpublished reports have resulted in (i) court action, (ii) any professional discipline on which he has information and (iii) action by his Department.

Mr. Forth: Inspections into the affairs and/or membership of 57 companies, some of which are linked, have begun since January 1979. A final report has been submitted in relation to 35 of those companies. An interim report has been submitted in relation to five other companies. Fourteen reports, including three interim reports, have been published relating to 17 different companies. One unpublished report has been disclosed to a professional body. Criminal proceedings have followed or commenced during investigations in relation to nine companies, in respect of which three reports relating to four companies have been published. Winding-up and disqualification proceedings have been commenced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State during an investigation in which an interim report was submitted. That report is unpublished.

Disciplinary proceedings by a professional body have followed investigations in relation to four companies in respect of which two reports relating to three companies have been published.

Other action was taken by my Department in one investigation in respect of which the report was published and resulted in the recovery of £475,000 for creditors and shareholders.

Export Credits

Mr. Jim Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was, for developing countries (a) the total of outstanding export credits in 1982, (b) the total repaid each year between 1982 and 1988, (c) the total outstanding for each country in 1988, (d) the total arrears of each country in 1988, (e) the terms under which the credits were advanced and (f) the annual rates of interest charged each year from 1982 to 1988.

Mr. Forth: The total outstanding export credits to developing countries was £14·9 billion as at 31 March 1982. This figure was published in ECGD's trading results for the financial year 1981-82. Figures for repayments each year are not available but the total outstanding as at 31 March 1988 amounted to £10·4 billion. It has been the policy of successive governments not to provide details of ECGD's exposure-experience on individual markets.

The definition ECGD uses for arrears on credit insurance business relates to the amount of claims paid which remain outstanding for recovery, and as at the end of 1988, this figure stood at £2·1 billion for developing countries.

The terms for export credit advanced to developing countries are governed by the OECD arrangement on guidelines for officially supported export credits. This arrangement also lays down the minimum interest rates permitted. The rates in force vary depending on the length of the credit involved and the grading of the country to which credit is extended. The rates are revised twice yearly.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many persons above the age of (a) 60, (b) 65 and (c) 70 years he has appointed to public bodies in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Forth: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Medical Equipment (ACARD Report)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps have been taken to implement the recommendations of the 1986 Advisory Council for Applied Research and Development report on medical equipment, so far as they affect his Department.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Department is represented on the R and D co-ordinating group on medical equipment chaired by the Department of Health; and a market branch in my Department deals with the medical equipment sector. The Department seeks to ensure that information received about market opportunities, including that obtained from posts overseas, is disseminated widely to United Kingdom industry.

Export Intelligence

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the contract awarded to Export Opportunities Ltd. for the marketing of export intelligence was subject to competitive tender; and what the number of subscribers to the export intelligence service now is.

Mr. Forth: Yes. Export intelligence is available on an automated matching basis from Export Opportunities Ltd., and by on-line inquiry from Trade Network International Ltd. and from FT Information Online Ltd. The three companies are in competition with each other and the number of customers each has is commercially confidential.

Sanitary Tampons

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was discussed at his Department's most recent meeting with tampon manufacturers; and whether he will advise those manufacturers that a warning about toxic shock syndrome should be clearly visible on the outside of tampon boxes.

Mr. Forth: My officials are in correspondence with the tampon industry about more prominent labelling about the use of the product. But I have no present intention of asking manufacturers to mention toxic shock syndrome on the outside of the packet.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the companies within his responsibilities in which the Government have sold their financial stake since June 1979; and which were the accountancy firms which either advised or reported on the prospectus in each case.

Mr. Redwood: The holdings sold by my Department, together with the appropriate advisers, were British Aerospace (Peat Marwick Mitchell); Rolls-Royce (Coopers and Lybrand); British Steel (Coopers and Lybrand); British Telecom (Coopers and Lybrand); Cable and Wireless (Deloitte Haskins and Sells); Jaguar (J. Henry Schroder Wagg and Co. Ltd.) and Rover Group (Baring Brothers, and Slaughter and May).

Other disposals comprised various subsidiaries of companies in public ownership; and the sale of 9·5 per cent. shareholding in Short Brothers in which the Northern Ireland Department of Economic Development had primary responsibility. A number of holdings in other companies have been returned to the private sector by the National Enterprise Board.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether any appointments have been made to the accounting standards task force of employees of firms against whom action has been taken by his Department.

Mr. Redwood: One member of the accounting standards task group is employed by such a firm.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether at any time since June 1979 any accountancy firm found to be lacking in professional conduct, efficiency and competence by the joint disciplinary scheme has supplied inspectors for any of his Department's investigations.

Mr. Redwood: Yes.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will seek to amend the Companies Acts to ensure that where reporting accountants have been criticised by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors within the last five years, published prospectuses shall give this information.

Mr. Redwood: No. The purpose of prospectuses is to enable potential investors to assess the merits of the investment they are being offered.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the reports published of Department of Trade and Industry investigations into accountancy firms since June 1979, showing the date of publication, date of completion of the report and the date on which the inspectors were appointed in each case.

Mr. Redwood: Reports published by my right hon. Friend are those of inspectors appointed to investigate a company's affairs under section 432 of the Companies Act 1985, its membership under section 442, and share dealings under section 446. These sections do not relate to investigations of accountancy firms.

Bankruptcies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many companies went into receivership within two months, four months, six months, nine months and 12 months of receiving an unqualified audit opinion in the period 1 January 1987 to 1 January 1989.

Mr. Redwood: The chief executive of Companies House tells me that the information requested is not available.

Land Valuation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will be requiring all large companies, as defined in the Companies Acts, to incorporate valuation of land and buildings in their annual accounts.

Mr. Redwood: I assume that the hon. Member is proposing a new requirement on large companies to revalue land and buildings annually in their accounts. The present law already requires fixed assets such as land and buildings to be included in the balance sheet, and directors are required to draw to the attention of shareholders any substantial difference between the market value of land and buildings and the amount included in the balance sheet where the difference is, in the directors' opinion, of sufficient significance. However, the question of accounting for fixed assets, including the need to keep valuations up to date, is due to be considered shortly by the Accounting Standards Committee with a view to the production of an exposure draft early in the new year.

Computer Misuse

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many prosecutions there were for computer misuse in the years 1985 to 1989; and how many were successful.

Mr. Forth: The Law Commission, when publishing its recent report on this subject, pointed out that computer misuse was a relatively new phenomenon and that the criminal law as presently framed did not provide adequate protection against all forms of misuse. As a consequence there have been few prosecutions, but the exact figure is not readily available, as Government statistics do not separately identify those cases containing this element.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report a breakdown of the verifiable cases of computer misuse in the years 1985 to 1989 in the following three categories (a) unauthorised access, (b) computer fraud and (c) damage.

Mr. Forth: Although there are no centrally collated figures, my Department has identified around 270 verified cases of computer misuse between 1985 and 1989. Of these, approximately 42 per cent. relate to unauthorised access, 37 per cent. to computer fraud and 20 per cent. to damage. I understand that a large number of cases go unreported, and that this figure probably represents only a proportion of the true total.

Footwear

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his policy on negotiations in the EEC in relation to footwear imports from Taiwan and South Korea; and if he will press for immediate strict limitation of such imports to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Redwood: The Government are prepared to support safeguard action where the conditions for such action are met and the restrictions can be fully and economically justified. In our view the European Commission's report on the impact on Community producers of imports of footwear from South Korea and Taiwan does not provide sufficient justification for such action. We have informed the Commission therefore that consistently with our general approach on trade policy issues the United Kingdom Government are opposed to safeguard action on imports of footwear from South Korea and Taiwan. We have, however, suggested to the Commission that if it were to propose some form of surveillance licensing we would give this sympathetic consideration.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his estimate of the number of jobs in the United Kingdom footwear industry which are dependent on the maintaining of the voluntary restraint agreement with Poland.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is not possible to estimate the number of jobs in the United Kingdom footwear industry which are dependent on the maintaining of the voluntary restraint arrangement.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the number of jobs displaced in the United Kingdom footwear industry by imports from (a) Taiwan and (b) South Korea.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is not possible to assess the number of jobs displaced in the United Kingdom footwear industry by imports from Taiwan and South Korea.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take steps to ensure that the voluntary restraint agreement limiting leather footwear imports from Poland remains in force for the foreseeable future.

Mr. Redwood: Ministers have considered the industry's arguments for renewing the voluntary restraint arrangement (VRA) on Polish leather footwear very carefully, but have concluded that it would not be appropriate to press the EC Commission to renew the VRA on our behalf.

There are three considerations which support this conclusion. First, it would be inconsistent with the Government's political commitment to assist the Poles in their progress to economic, political and social reform if we were to restrict footwear imports. Secondly, with effect from 1 January 1990 all Community restrictions on Polish footwear are to be lifted and thirdly, even if the VRA were to be renewed its effects could be totally undermined by imports of footwear on free circulation via other member states.

I have told the industry, however, that we will monitor the situation and reconsider the case for the renewal of the VRA towards the end of this year in the light of experience and in the context of the Community's consideration of its general attitude to Poland. If, in the meantime, imports of leather footwear from Poland should damage the United Kingdom industry significantly I will consider the possibility of applying either for safeguard action or for anti-dumping remedies.

EC Trade

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will bring up to date the figures for intra and extra-EEC trade of EEC countries given in the reply of 3 July 1985, Official Report, columns 190-92.

Mr. Redwood: The information is in the table. Because of the accession to the EC of Spain and Portugal, figures for 1984, the last year included in the previous answer, are given again to indicate the effect on intra and extra-EC trade.

Company Investigations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1), further to the reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, 27 November, Official Report, column 93, what is the relationship of the company inspections referred to there to the investigations mentioned in the Department of Trade and Industry's annual publication, "Companies in 1988-89" and earlier editions, as being approved since 1979;

(2) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, Official Report, 27 November, column 93, if he will list the 56 inspections under the Companies Acts since 1979, showing the date on which each inspection commenced, the names of the inspectors, the current status of each inspection and the anticipated date of publication of outstanding inspections.

Mr. Redwood: The table lists the details requested by the hon. Member of the 56 inspections mentioned in my previous reply. I am unable to say when reports will be published in relation to those inspections which remain outstanding.

My answer to the hon. Member of 27 November 1989 gave the total number of companies for which inspectors have been appointed since June 1979.

The relevant table dealing with Companies Act investigations in the annual reports presented to both Houses in accordance with section 729 of the Companies Act 1985 gives the number of appointments of inspectors under sections 431, 432, 442 and 446 of the Companies Act 1985 or their predecessor sections as well as details of the exercise of other Companies Act investigatory powers. When inspectors have been appointed under the authority of two sections, it has been the practice since 1986 to include details of both appointments in the table.

Monopolies and Mergers Commission

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he intends to refer the proposed merger of Kingfisher with Dixon Group plc to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; and if in his consideration he will take into account the local monopoly considerations as recently developed by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Redwood: The proposed acquisition by Kingfisher plc of Dixons is currently being considered by the Director General of Fair Trading who has a duty to advise the Secretary of State on whether or not it should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. It would not be appropriate for me to comment on the proposed acquisition in anticipation of the director general's advice.

Tourism

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he now proposes to take to promote increased tourism from countries in eastern Europe and East Germany; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

My Department sponsors the British Tourist Authority (BTA) which has responsibility for the promotion of tourism to the United Kingdom. The BTA is aware of the potential of the eastern European tourism market and will take this into account in developing its marketing plans.

Grants

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list for each region the take-up of (a) investment grants and (b) innovation grants; and what was the total amount spent in each year since their introduction.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 21 December 1989]: The requested information, with regard to take-up and expenditure in 1988-89 and 1989-90 (to end November) for the regional enterprise grant scheme is as follows:

	1988-89		1989-90[1]

Labour Statistics

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish figures for the numbers employed in (a) shipbuilding and (b) steel in each year since 1979.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 21 December 1989]: The relevant figures are estimated as follows:

	Shipbuilding[1]	Steel[2]
1979	64,500	162,000
1980	58,000	134,000
1981	59,000	96,000
1982	59,000	81,900
1983	52,500	67,300
1984	47,000	62,300

Shipbuilding

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the amounts paid by the intervention fund for shipbuilding in each year since 1979.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 21 December 1989]: Payments made from the shipbuilding intervention fund since 1979 are as follows:

Year	£
1978-79	10,839,000
1979-80	31,912,378
1980-81	41,890,399
1981-82	49,126,517
1982-83	47,925,370
1983-84	36,231,429
1984-85	20,069,280
1985-86	25,927,629
1986-87	17,450,596
1987-88	13,644,119
1988-89	38,653,894
1989 to date	25,426,976

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the share of world shipbuilding orders won by Britain in each year since 1979.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 21 December 1989]: The percentage share of world new orders for merchant ships (in compensated gross tonnes) placed with United Kingdom yards since 1979 is as follows:

	Percentage
1979	2·3
1980	2·8
1981	2·6
1982	2·6
1983	1·6
1984	1·8
1985	2·7
1986	2·1
1987	2·0
1988	0·7

Full information on world orders for naval vessels is not available.

Schools (Technology)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what increase has taken place in 1988-89 and 1989-90 in support for (a) the use of computer-aided design and (b) the use of advanced technology in schools and further education colleges.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 21 December 1989]: The Department of Trade and Industry has recently spent the following amounts in order to encourage the use of advanced technology (including computer-aided design CAD) in schools and further education colleges.

£ million

	Schools	Further education
1987-88	8·5	3·5
1988-89	5·5	1·6
1989-90	[1]2·9	[1]0·2

[1] Forecast outturn for full year.

The 1987 further education figure includes £2·2 million spent on a scheme limited to CAD. Apart from this, it is not possible separately to identify amounts spent on CAD within either schools or further education.

Advertising

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his latest estimate of the total cost of advertising by his Department in 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90; and what is his planned expenditure for 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 21 December 1989]: Expenditure on advertising from the Department's central publicity budget was as follows:

	£ million
1987-88	8·4
1988-89	18·8
[1]1989-90	10

[1] Estimate.

Media allocations for future years have not yet been decided.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the remit of his review of regional selective assistance; and when he expects it to report.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 21 December 1989]: The internal guidelines for regional selective assistance are kept under continual review in order to keep them up to date and to consider any changes which might improve the scheme's effectiveness and value for money.

English Industrial Estates

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the remit of his review of English Industrial Estates Corporation, and when he expects it to report.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 21 December 1989]: The remit of the review was set out in my reply to the Member for Dundee, East (Mr. McAllion) on 31 October. I expect to receive the consultants' report early in the new year.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the size of managed work space of English Industrial Estates Corporation in 1987, 1988 and 1989 (a) in total and (b) in inner cities.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 21 December 1989]: English Estates' managed workspace programme was announced in March 1988. Capital expenditure was £0·5 million in 1988-89 and is expected to be £0·6 million in 1989-90. All of this expenditure was in inner city areas. In addition, English Estates provides small workshops as part of its assisted areas programme and on behalf of the Rural Development Commission.

Post Office

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the remit of his study of the Post Office; and when he expects it to report.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 21 December 1989]: The Post Office Board naturally keeps under review a range of options for ensuring that their services meet as closely as possible the needs of both present and future customers. I am in regular touch with the board about these matters. There is, therefore, no date for reporting.

Consultancy Initiative

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of firms have taken up the consultancy initiative in each region.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 21 December 1989]: It is estimated that as of 1 December 1989 the percentage of firms is as follows:

Percentage of firms applying for the consultancy initiatives

DTI region	Percentage
North East	5·3
North West	4·1
Yorkshire and Humberside	3·5
West Midlands	3·6
East Midlands	2·8
South West	3·1

DTI region	Percentage
East	2·4
South East	2·5
Scotland	3·0
Wales	3·8
Total	3·1

Dixons (Takeover)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many representations he has received concerning proposals for the Kingfisher group to take over the Dixons/Currys group.

Mr. Redwood: I have received some 20 representations about the proposed acquisition by Kingfisher plc of Dixons.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will ask the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to consider the proposed takeover of Dixons by Woolworth.

Mr. Redwood: The proposed acquisition by Kingfisher plc of Dixons is currently being considered by the Director General of Fair Trading who has a duty to advise the Secretary of State on whether or not it should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. It would not be appropriate for me to comment on the proposed acquisition in anticipation of the director general's advice.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to receive the Coopers and Lybrand report on chlorofluorocarbons; to whom he will make it available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 7 December 1989]: My Department has commissioned two reports on CFCs from Coopers and Lybrand. The first, which examines the effect of environmental and health and safety controls on the markets for chlorinated solvents, has been submitted to the Department and will be published shortly. The second study, which complements the first, will examine the size of and distribution of current CFC and halon use within the United Kingdom and assess the technical and economic options for the recovery, recycling and eventual destruction of these substances. This study is due to be submitted in early 1990 and is expected to contain much information of interest to both Government and industry. Our intention therefore is that this information should also be made widely available, although it is too early to say precisely in what form it will be published.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has received any representations about the West German Government's intentions to ban the refrigerant gas HFA 22 with effect from January 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 7 December 1989]: The parties to the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer are presently discussing ways in which it should be strengthened at the second meeting of the parties in London next summer. The protocol is implemented within the European Community by regulation EC3322/88, which has as its legal base article 1305 of the treaty of Rome requiring unanimity of voting. For this reason, and because there would otherwise be serious implications for the internal market, this is a matter on which all 12 member states must work together. Her Majesty's Government's view remains that HFA 22 has an important part to play especially in helping the refrigeration industry to reduce its dependence on the more damaging chlorofluorocarbons, at least in the short to medium term.

Abbey National plc

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many representations have been received by his Department from shareholders of Abbey National plc who have not yet received shareholding certificates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 8 December 1989]: Since the beginning of August the Department has received over 100 letters from shareholders who at the time of writing had not received their share certificates. There have been seven such letters in the last month.

Whisky

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much the European Community import duty is on a one-litre bottle of whisky, containing 40 per cent. alcohol imported from (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the United States of America and (c) Japan.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 20 December 1989]: No EC customs duty is payable on goods produced in the United Kingdom when imported into another member state. The duty levied on a litre bottle of whisky containing 40 per cent. alcohol imported into any member state from either the United States of America or Japan is 14 pence.

GATT

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will specify the final European Community proposals on agriculture in the Uruguay round of the general agreement on tariffs and trade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply.

Along with other major participants in GATT, the European Community has now tabled outline proposals for long term reform of agricultural supported policies. The Community proposals are designed to meet the agreed objective of substantial and progressive reduction in support, over a period of time. The Community proposes a programme of reductions, measured against a 1986 starting level, on the basis of an aggregate measure of total support. Some changes in the operation of export subsidies and in the mechanisms of import protection are also envisaged. Ideas are put forward for the treatment of developing countries and for moves towards the harmonization of measures relating to animal and plant health.

In Council discussions, I and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs supported the Commission view that submission by the Community of a paper of this kind would make a helpful and constructive contribution to the Uruguay round negotiations as a whole.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the United States proposal within the Uruguay round in the general agreement on tariffs and trade for quantification in standard form of all aspects of agricultural support systems.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply.

A range of proposals have been tabled by the United States, EC and others in the negotiation. Several make reference to the possible use of an aggregate measure of support which can quantify the impact of a wide range of policies. The United Kingdom believes that an aggregate measure provides a useful negotiating tool which by placing countries on a common footing would facilitate an agreement to reduce support and protection worldwide.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what priority Her Majesty's Government attach to achieving a compromise between the respective positions taken by the United States of America and the European Community during the general agreement on tariffs and trade Uruguay round negotiations on agriculture; and what is his policy towards the Cairns group proposals for bridging the gap between the European Community and the United States of America.

Mr. Curry I have been asked to reply.

The Government strongly support the objectives of the agricultural negotiations within the current GATT Round. We are working closely with our Community partners and with other countries, including the United States, to achieve a successful outcome. The proposals of the Cairns group are an important and constructive contribution to the negotiations. All parties recognise that compromise will be needed to achieve success.

Manufacturing Investment

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on levels of investment in manufacturing industry in the last decade.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have been asked to reply.

The most recent full year for which information is available is 1988. Manufacturing investment at 1985 prices including leased assets, is estimated to have been £11·3 billion in 1988, compared to £10·7 billion in 1978. The 1988 figure is the highest recorded and amounts to an average growth rate of 8¼ per cent. a year from the 1983 level. Under the last Labour Government, manufacturing investment grew by less than 2½ per cent. a year averaged over the whole period of office.

Manufacturing Industries

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which regions in England have seen a reduction in constant value terms in manufacturing industries from 1979 to the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have been asked to reply.

Current prices estimates for regions of manufacturing gross domestic product are published annually and provisional figures for 1988 may be found in "Economic Trends" No. 433, November 1989, pages 92 and 93: a copy is available in the Library. Constant price estimates, however, are not made because there are no regional price indices.

Trade Gap

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the total trade gap for the current year.

Mr. Ryder: I have been asked to reply.

The latest available information was published on 29 December 1989 in table 1 of the monthly press notice on the current account of the balance of payments, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Balance of Payments (Oil)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish a table showing in current and 1985 prices the balance of payments surplus with the European Community in (a) crude oil and in other petroleum products and (b) other goods in 1970, 1979, 1985, 1988 and the current year to date.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have been asked to reply.

Estimates for trade with the EC on a balance of payments basis are available only at current prices. Information about trade in crude oil and other petroleum products is not readily available for the EC; the following table shows trade in all fuels as the closest available substitute.

Balance of trade with European Community countries[1]

SCOTLAND

Electricity Disconnections

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many electricity disconnections the South of Scotland electricity board undertook in 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988, expressed as a percentage of the total of domestic users.

Mr. Lang: The number of domestic customers disconnected by the South of Scotland Electricity Board, and the percentages these formed of the total number of domestic customers in the last four financial years, is set out in the table.

Disconnections Financial Years—1 April to 31 March

	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89
Number of Domestic Customers disconnected during year	7,874	10,622	11,546	9,627
Number of Domestic Customers as at 31 March	1,421,734	1,422,139	1,445,151	1,510,496
Percentage of Domestic Customers disconnected	0·55	0·75	0·80	0·64

River Pollution

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he plans to strengthen existing sanctions available to river purification boards and local authority water and sewage departments when they detect breaches in the voluntary codes for toxic disposals into rivers;

(2) if he will take further steps to give additional powers to river purification boards to prevent commercial toxic pollution reaching rivers;

(3) what proposals he has to change existing powers available to river purification boards to enter commercial premises and require specific action by owners to limit damage being done to rivers by toxic waste.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Anyone discharging trade effluent to sewers or to controlled waters without such consent as may be required by the local authority or without consent from the river purification authority is liable to prosecution. The powers available to river purification authorities to control the pollution of rivers, estuaries and coastal waters were recently improved and strengthened by the Water Act 1989. We are considering the making of regulations, including standards for the storage of chemicals on premises, which will further strengthen defences against such pollution.

It is our intention to include measures in this Session's Environmental Protection Bill which will impose tighter controls over the most dangerous substances and certain processes and make new pollution control arrangements for multiple waste streams.

Speech-impaired Children

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children with speech and language disorders have been placed in specialist residential schools in England from each region and island area in Scotland; and what assistance is available to Scottish parents in locating and selecting such schools for their children.

Mr. Lang: Information about the number of children with speech and language disorders placed in special residential schools in England is not held centrally. Parents wishing to send their children to such schools should seek assistance and advice from the regional and islands psychological services.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance has been given by his Department to ensure that speech and language disorders can be properly identified in examinations conducted for the purpose of a record of needs under the Education (Scotland) Act 1980 as amended by the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Mr. Lang: Guidance and advice to education authorities assessing children for the purpose of opening and keeping a record of needs under section 60 of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980 is given in Scottish Education Department circulars No. 1083 and 1087, copies of which will be sent to the hon. Member. The circulars do not give advice on particular learning difficulties such as speech and language disorders, since circumstances and special educational needs will vary with each individual child.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about the number of pre-school and school-aged children who are affected by speech and language disorders in each region and islands area in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Local Authorities (Chief Executives)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the salaries paid to chief executives of each local authority in Scotland; and if he will give details of the income of the elected council leaders in those authorities for the 1988-89 financial year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Councillors' Allowances

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the differences in income to councillors as a result of the changes in allowances applicable from 1 April 1990.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The overall resources available for councillors' allowances in Scotland will be no less than at present. Details of how the resources are to be distributed have yet to be finalised after consultation with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities. We have proposed that the amount available to individual authorities should be determined by the type of authority, the workload of that authority, the number of constituents and the number of councillors. Within that basic framework, we are also willing to consider sympathetically any reasonable proposals for banding by population which the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities can devise, provided these command a broad measure of support from authorities.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the changes contained in the Housing and Local Government Bill regarding allowances paid to councillors.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 28 November at column 112.

COSLA

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the Confederation of Scottish Local Authorities; and whether he discussed the effects of the Coal Industry Bill on the environment.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend met representatives of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities on 27 November to discuss his revenue support grant proposals for next year and other local government finance matters. The Coal Industry Bill was not raised at the meeting.

Drug and Alcohol Abuse

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the number of instances of drug and alcohol abuse reported to the children's panel.

Mr. Lang: This information is not separately available. Drug and alcohol abuse are not by themselves grounds under section 32 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 for referral to a children's hearing to consider compulsory measures of care. They may often be a feature of greater behavioural problems which attract such grounds as "beyond parental control" or "lack of parental care".

Colliery Tips

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans his Department has for clearing up and ensuring the reclamation and landscaping of former colliery tips.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Development Agency is the Government's principal agency for environmental improvement in Scotland. As such, it deals with a wide range of environmental problems including those resulting from former colliery tips. The agency has an ongoing programme for the reclamation and landscaping of disused bings where there are no private sector interests.

Colliery Closures

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the collieries closed since May 1979 in Scotland; and if he will give details of the numbers of jobs lost at each colliery.

Mr. Rifkind: The Scottish collieries that have closed since May 1979 are named in the table. In each case the numbers of jobs recorded refer to men on the colliery books at the end of the previous financial year. I understand that there have been no compulsory redundancies associated with these closures.

Plate Mill

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he discussed the sale by Japan of the second-hand plate mill to British Steel when he visited Japan during the summer recess.

Mr. Rifkind: No.

Highway Information Management System

Mr. Robin Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will request all Scottish regions to standardise on the highway information management system, the computerised system developed by Devon county council, which has been chosen as the preferred system by five of nine Scottish regions.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 December 1989]: The Scottish Development Department has endorsed the recommendation of the Scottish County Surveyors' Society highway database and management information system working party following a comprehensive trial of two of the available routine maintenance management systems, one of which was developed by Devon county council. The choice of the alternative system for use on trunk roads has been made following the recommendation of the Scottish County Surveyors' Society.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland pursuant to his answer of 28 November to the hon. Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro), Official Report columns 188-89, what was the number of responses which welcomed the merger of the Nature Conservatory Council and the Countryside Commission for Scotland; and what was the number which disapproved of the proposal.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 December 1989]: Of the 159 respondents expressing a view, 98 supported the proposals in principle and 61 were opposed to the merger. A list of those expressing support was provided in answer to the hon. Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor). The list of those opposed is as follows.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animals and Birds (Imports)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has taken on the importation of parrots and other rare birds from South America and Senegal, in the light of the meeting between the hon. Member for Linlithgow and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the hon. Member for Calder Valley (Mr. Thompson) at Whitehall court.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 20 December 1989 at column 350.

Food Processing (Safety)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations he has had on safety regulations for the food processing industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

I met representatives of the Refrigeration Industry Board on 13 November 1989. These and many other interested bodies have been consulted on proposals for amendment of the Food Hygiene Regulations to extend temperature control to certain foods for retail sale in order to protect public health.

Food Safety

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations he has had with the food industry about food safety measures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My Ministry continues to consult widely in the food industry on food safety matters.

Food Production

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further discussions he has had with consumer groups and others on the subject of food production; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Ministers of this Department maintain regular contacts with consumer groups, as well as the agriculture and food industries, to discuss topics of mutual concern including food production matters. I recently met with representatives of these interests to hear at first hand their initial reactions to the Food Safety Bill.

Green Pound

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the current effect on United Kingdom farmers of the disparity in the green pound.

Mr. Curry: The recent fall in sterling has caused United Kingdom MCAs to increase from their previous levels. This situation may change with further movement of sterling. I shall watch the position closely during the Community price review which has just begun.

Minke Whales

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will request an emergency meeting of the International Whaling Commission in order that they may discuss the current slaughter of minke whales in the Antarctic by Japanese hunters.

Mr. Curry: The Japanese Government are well aware of our views on their programme of whaling in the Antarctic for research purposes. We have consistently taken the lead within the International Whaling Commission (IWC) in questioning its validity in the light of the concerns raised by the IWC scientific committee. In response to the IWC resolution Japan has made some changes to the plans including reducing the number of minke whales to be taken. The IWC will discuss this revised programme at its next annual meeting.

Beagles (Deaths)

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is now in a position to make a statement about his Department's inquiries into the deaths of the 79 beagles en route to Sweden referred to in his answer of 1 November, Official Report, column 211, and on any other steps that can be taken to ensure that this possibility does not arise again.

Mr. Maclean: My Department's inquiries are now complete. Charges have been laid against three defendants under the Transit of Animals (General) Order 1973 and the Protection of Animals Act 1911. I believe that existing legislation provides sufficient safeguards but vigilance will always be necessary to prevent a recurrence of this kind of incident.

Alar

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will secure from the United States Environmental Protection Agency the evidence which led the agency to ban the use of the apple spray Alar on the grounds of its health damaging properties.

Mr. Maclean: We have the EPA's published review document, all the relevant studies cited therein, and all the raw test data provided by the registrant.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which countries exporting apples to the United Kingdom do not allow the use of Alar.

Mr. Maclean: Daminozide, the active ingredient of the pesticide product Alar is not approved for use in Italy and its approval has been withdrawn in the United States following the voluntary cancellation of its registration for food crop uses by the manufacturer.

Food and Drink Products

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce an environmental labelling scheme to cover food and drink products.

Mr. Maclean: No. "Environmental" claims are permitted under current food labelling legislation so long as the claim is true and not misleading to consumers. I am aware of requests for more detailed information on food, particularly on what might broadly be termed "green" issues. I have therefore asked the food advisory committee to carry out a comprehensive review of current labelling legislation and practices and to report back with any recommendations that it thinks appropriate.

Pesticides

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the pesticide safety unit's review of pesticides that currently hold his Department's approvals but which are banned or restricted in use in other countries will be completed.

Mr. Maclean: The advisory committee carries out reviews of individual products when scientific evidence suggests these are necessary. It has started the routine review of all pesticides which were approved prior to 1981, irrespective of their status in other countries, which will take several years to complete.

GATT

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements he has for consulting representatives of United Kingdom consumers about the agricultural negotiations in the Uruguay round of General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Mr. Curry: I and my officials, and our counterparts in the Department of Trade and Industry, are in regular consultation with representatives of United Kingdom consumers on this subject.

Import Restrictions

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what restrictions exist on the import into the United Kingdom of agricultural products from (a) New Zealand, (b) Australia and (c) Canada; and what steps he is taking to have them reduced.

Mr. Curry: Imports of agricultural products from these, as from other, countries are subject to the rules of the common agricultural policy. Agricultural policies, including import barriers, are currently under discussion in the Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations. The objectives of the negotiation, which the United Kingdom supports, include substantial, progressive reductions in support and protection, including the lowering of import barriers. The United Kingdom is working with our Community partners and other governments, including those of New Zealand, Canada and Australia, to ensure a successful outcome to these negotiations.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Housing Benefit

13. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to improve the co-ordination between local social security offices and local councils in relation to the payment of housing benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We attach high priority to good liaison between our local offices and local authorities and when difficulties arise we seek to remedy them promptly.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if his Department or the transitional payments unit has maintained league tables of outstanding TP3 forms awaiting return from local authorities.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 14 December 1989]: Inquiry forms TP3 were issued to local authorities in respect of over 484,000 applicants. The return of those forms has been closely monitored by the transitional payments unit. Seven local authorities each have in excess of 100 forms outstanding and in total around 3,000 applications cannot be assessed because inquiry forms have not been returned from over 200 local authorities.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has about the number of people in the London borough of Lambeth currently entitled to housing benefit, distinguishing between (a) certificated housing benefit, (b) uncertificated benefit, (c) assistance with rates, (d) assistance with rent, (e) council tenants and (f) private tenants and owner occupiers.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest complete information is in the table.

	Receiving Income Support and Housing Benefit Assistance with;			Receiving Housing Benefit only Assistance with;
	Rent and rates	Rent only	Rates only	Rent and rates	Rent only	Rates only
Local Authority Tenants	15,568	159	—	4,691	77	284
Private Tenants	4,849	746	75	1,728	556	58
Owner Occupiers	—	—	614	—	—	332

Note: Certificated and standard housing benefit ceased to exist when income support replaced supplementary benefit from April 1988.
Source: Local authority caseload returns: November 1988

Pension Schemes

14. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of the working population are investing in occupational or personal pension schemes.

Mr. Newton: Of those currently in full-time employment, we estimate that over 70 per cent. are members of occupational or personal pension schemes. In addition, some 50 per cent. of all pensioners and 70 per cent. of recently retired pensioners have an occupational pension.

Pensioners (Incomes)

16. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the most recent figures he has for the increase in pensioners' incomes from savings since 1979.

17. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the increase in pensioners' average net incomes for (a) 1974 to 1979 and (b) 1979 to date.

Mr. Newton: In the five years from 1974 to 1979, pensioners' average total net incomes rose by 3 per cent. In the seven years from 1979 to 1986, the latest date for which figures are available, they rose by 23 per cent.

Income from savings is a significant factor in this improvement. Between 1979 and 1986 pensioners' average income from savings rose by 64 per cent., whereas in the previous five years it had fallen by 16 per cent.

20. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of recently-retired pensioners he estimates has sources of income in addition to the basic state retirement pension.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest available figures show that in 1986, 70 per cent. of recently retired pensioners had an occupational pension and 85 per cent. had income from savings.

Computers

18. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the improvement in the level of service offered by his Department as a result of its computerisation programme.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Computerisation has improved accuracy of payments and the speed of response to benefit inquiries. It has speeded up the availability of renewed order books. Letters to claimants are clearer and more complete. In addition, computerisation has enabled the relocation of benefit processing from London to areas where it is easier to recruit and retain good staff and this is already showing improvements in all aspects of service.

Carers' Premium

19. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people will benefit from the new carers' premium to be introduced into income support.

Mr. Scott: We expect the new £10 premium, being introduced next October, to help 10,000 carers through income support, and a further 20,000 carers through housing benefit or community charge benefit.

Disabled People

21. Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by what proportion spending on the disabled has increased since 1979.

Mr. Scott: Expenditure on benefits for long-term sick and disabled people increased by 90 per cent. in real terms between 1978-79 and 1989-90.

Independent Living Fund

22. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average weekly award paid through the independent living fund.

Mr. Scott: As at 14 December 1989, the average weekly award paid to those receiving regular payments was £61·35.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if owner-occupiers and tenants supported by the independent living fund whose income above income support levels is required to supplement independent living fund contributions are entitled to rate rebates;

(2) whether adults, all of whose income above income support levels is required by the independent living fund to offset financial help from the independent living fund, will be entitled to community charge rebates.

Mr. Scott: People with incomes at or below income support levels are entitled to the full value of an award from the independent living fund. For people with incomes above income support, the ILF has to determine the amount to be offset against the ILF award. In making this calculation the fund makes allowance for the amount of rent, rates or community charge that the applicant has to pay after any housing or community charge benefit.

Any resulting payments received from the independent living fund are totally disregarded in the calculation of the income-related benefits. Entitlement to housing or community charge benefit is, therefore, calculated in the normal way and depends on the claimant's circumstances (age, family status, disability, number of children), the level of outgoings such as rent and rates or community charge, and the amount of income that is not disregarded.

Social Fund

23. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to alter the existing structure and increase the resources provided for the social fund; and what steps he is taking to ensure that decisions made in regard to grants were equitable in one area of the country against another.

Mr. Scott: My right hon. Friend recently announced that we have made available an additional £3 million for local offices facing the heaviest pressures on their budgets.

We have no plans to alter the existing structure of the social fund. Its discretionary nature enables social fund officers to look at each application on its merits. This means that decisions on similar cases will, quite properly, differ. We are, however, taking action, for example, by regional monitoring of decisions and by regular seminars for social fund officers, to ensure the highest possible standard of decision-making across the whole country.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the 100 social security offices which are to have their social fund allocations increased as a result of particular pressures, referred to in his written answer of 19 December to the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart).

Mr. Scott: Details of the 96 local offices that have received increased social fund allocations for 1989-90 are in the Library.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give consideration to amending directions 10 and 28 of his social fund directions to allow claims for the cost of redecoration in cases where applicants within the social fund manual, paragraphs 6380 and 6505, may only be decorating one room, and the cost of this may be below £30.

Mr. Scott: No. The main purpose of the social fund is to provide for expenses that are difficult to meet out of normal income. We believe that it is reasonable to expect people to budget for small expenses from their regular weekly income without help from the social fund. However, a social fund crisis loan may be considered for an amount below £30 if the applicant has no other resources and there is a serious risk to the health or safety of the applicant or a member of his or her family.

Housing Benefit (Transitional Payments)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for housing benefit transitional payments have been generated by the London borough of Ealing.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There have been 3,170 applications from people living in the London borough of Ealing.

Private Nursing Homes

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations he has received concerning the £5 per week increase for Department assisted residents and patients in private nursing homes.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We have received a number of representations about our proposals for next year's uprating. Subject to parliamentary approval, the overwhelming majority of people in nursing homes receiving income support in April 1990 will be entitled to up to an additional £10 for help with fees. The limit for the mentally ill is increasing by £5, meaning an increase of £15 in two years.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list, by year, for the past 10 years, the increases in allowance per week for (a) patients in residential private nursing homes and (b) residents in retirement homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The available information is set out in the tables.

Notes:
1. Prior to April 1985 each social security office set two maximum amounts that could be paid in respect of fees in homes, one for residential care homes and one for nursing homes.
2. Claimants in addition to the appropriate limit receive an amount payable for personal expenses.
3. Present limits can be increased by up to £23 in London.

Income Statistics

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will publish the final edition of the low income statistics calculated on the old basis covering 1983, 1985 and 1987.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The final edition of the low income statistics calculated on a family unit basis was published in May 1988. This covered 1981, 1983 and 1985. We have no plans to publish any further low income statistics on this basis.

Disablement Benefits

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be the estimated cost of uprating social security benefits for disabled people in the United Kingdom; and what proportion of the social security budget the uprating in benefits for the disabled will take up.

Mr. Scott: The estimated cost of the April 1990 uprating of benefits for the long-term sick and disabled in Great Britain is £599 million in 1990-91. This represents 1·1 per cent. of total planned expenditure.

Information about costs of benefit in Northern Ireland is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether his review of disability benefits is examining methods within the state system to provide payments to disabled people to enable them to employ their own care attendants.

Mr. Scott: Existing benefits—notably attendance allowance and the disability premiums—make some provision to enable disabled people to pay for care. We are reviewing those benefits, but in the context of the Government's aim in the White Paper "Caring for people" (Cmd 849) to establish the right framework for the delivery of good quality local services for community care.

Pensions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many organisations and individuals have sent their comments on the report by the Occupational Pensions Board Protecting Pensions to his Department; if he will name them; and if he will make copies of the responses available in the Library.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: One hundred and forty two representations were made to the Department during the consultation period last year. Many of these were made in confidence. It is for those who made comments to make them publicly available if they wish to do so.

Family Incomes

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give, in tabulated form, the net income after housing costs of a divorcee with a son aged six years, receiving maintenance of £20 per week, housing benefit of £271 per calendar month and paying private rent of £385 per calendar month, and earning (a) nothing, (b) £15 per week part time, (c) £30 per week part time, (d) £50 per week part time, (e) £75 per week part time, (f) £75 per week full time, (g) £100 per week full time, and (h) £150 per week full time.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 14 December 1989]: The information is set out in the table.

Net income after housing costs at various levels of net earnings

Net Earnings (per week)	[1] Net Income After Housing Costs (£pw)
a. Not working	57·76
b. £15 part-time	72·76
c. £30 part-time	72·76
d. £50 part-time	75·40
e. £75 part-time	78·81
f. £75 full-time	81·63
g. £100 full-time	83·60
h. £150 full-time	94·37

[1] Net income after housing costs is based on an eligible rent for housing benefit purposes of £60pw and rates of £9·93pw.
Note:—The assumptions and methods are those used in the tax benefit model table, copies of which are available in the Library.

Computerisation

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report the timetable for extension of computerisation began on 23 October and name the offices concerned; and if he will place in the Library a copy of the pilot exercise report.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 15 December 1989]: The timetable for extension of computerisation from October 1989 is a lengthy document and therefore I have placed a copy in the Library rather than publishing it in the Official Report. I have also placed a copy of the pilot exercise report in the Library.

Child Benefits

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of people who have and will become dependent on (a) income support, (b) family credit and (c) housing benefit as a result of the decisions not to uprate child benefit fully in line with inflation in each of the appropriate years.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 15 December 1989]: It is impossible to give any meaningful estimate to the number of people who have or will become dependent on income-related benefits as a direct consequence of not uprating child benefit in April 1988, 1989 and 1990 because the effects cannot be viewed in isolation. It is important to remember that eligible populations and their constituents for all the income-related benefits change constantly as family incomes and circumstances change. Gross earnings have risen, and our policies to reduce tax and national insurance contributions have succeeded in enabling families with children to keep more of their earnings. In addition, we have channelled extra help to families with children through the income-related benefits.

DEFENCE

WE-177 Bomb

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Western Isles, of 14 December, Official Report, column 821, what other contractors, apart from British Aerospace, are involved in the assessment of options for the replacement of the WE-177 free fall bomb.

Mr. Alan Clark: A contract has also been placed with Hunting Engineering Ltd.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Western Isles, of 14 December, Official Report, column 821, what information he has as to when the current assessment studies of the options for the replacement of the WE-177 free fall bomb, will be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is expected that our studies will be completed later this year.

Atomic Energy

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any information on the implementation of the 1958 Anglo-American mutual defence agreement on atomic energy matters has been withheld under sections 3(4) or 5(1) of the Public Records Act 1958; and if he will make a statement on his current policy of withholding archive material.

Mr. Alan Clark: Atomic records are retained in the Department under section 3(4) of the Public Records Acts 1958 and 1967 with the approval of the Lord Chancellor. It has been the practice of successive Governments not to discuss records that are so withheld from public release.

General Dynamics

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answers on 14 December, Official Report, columns 821-23, what future purchases from General Dynamics have been discussed with that company as part of the negotiated memorandum of understanding.

Mr. Alan Clark: None.

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assurances have been given to General Dynamics relating to replacement battle tanks for the British Army;

(2) what deadlines have been given to each company asked to submit proposals for replacement battle tanks for the British Army.

Mr. Alan Clark: As I told the hon. Member in my answer of 14 December 1989 (Official Report, Vol. 163, col. 822), the details of the invitations to submit proposals are commercial in confidence. No assurances have been given to General Dynamics relating to replacement battle tanks for the British Army other than that its proposals will be considered. It remains our aim to make a decision by the end of 1990.

Arms

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the brokerage fees accruing from the Ministry of Defence's management of the Al Hamamah Saudi arms deal to the end of December.

Mr. Alan Clark: None.

Trident

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the latest estimated cost of Trident.

Mr. Alan Clark: The current estimate for Trident is £9089 million at 1988-89 prices and an exchange rate of £1 = $1·76. It is intended to announce a revised estimate shortly.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British nuclear test veterans have written to the Government asking for compensation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence has received about 120 claims from individuals seeking compensation for damage to health allegedly due to their participation in the United Kingdom's nuclear weapon test programme. In addition, a number of representations have been made by test veterans' organisations concerning compensation for their members.

Berlin Saddle Club

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many people in Berlin take advantage of the facilities provided for the Saddle Club; what proportion are (a) officers and officers' families, (b) other ranks and other ranks' families and (c) civilians;

(2) what charges are made for the use of the Berlin Saddle Club facilities;

(3) what is the cost to public funds, including military personnel of running the Berlin Saddle Club.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend Lord Arran will write to my hon. Friend.

Residences

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many residences are currently owned by his Department in London; who occupies them and on what conditions; and how many are currently empty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence owns 19 properties classed as official service residences within the Greater London area. They are normally occupied by entitled senior service officers filling specific posts; those officers are required to pay the appropriate accommodation charge. Two are currently vacant pending the completion of maintenance work.

Panama

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any military assistance or co-operation has been given or offered to the United States authorities in respect of the invasion of Panama.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why British troops were present when the United States of America invaded Panama; how many were there; from what branch of the armed services they came; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Apart from the resident defence attache and his staff at the British embassy, no British military personnel were in Panama at the time.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Parliamentary Papers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is (a) the annual cost and (b) the nominal average cost per Member per week of the production of (i) the Order Paper plus blues, (ii) the daily Official Report and (iii) the Vote bundle.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Annual cost of production of:
(i) Order Paper plus blues	2,727,439
(ii) The Daily Official Report	2,745,393
(iii) The Vote Bundle	4,714,676
(b) The nominal average cost per Member, per week of the production of:
(i) The Order Paper plus blues	19·94
(ii) The Daily Official Report	17·01
(iii) The Vote Bundle	34·47

Notes:

1. Production costs relate to the 1988-89 parliamentary Session.
2. Publishing and distribution overheads are excluded (they are not production costs).
3. Blues' includes Notices of Questions and Notices of Motions.
4. Assumes one copy of each publication daily per Member.

Secretarial Allowances

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many hon. Members employ from their secretarial allowance (a) none, (b) one, (c) two, (d) three, (e) four, (f) five and (g) six or more employees.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: As at 31 December 1989, the number of staff directly employed by Members and paid by the Fees Office out of the office costs allowance are as follows:

	Number of staff employed	Number of employing Members
(a)	—	24
(b)	193	193
(c)	538	269
(d)	372	124
(e)	104	26
(f)	40	8
(g)	26	4
Totals	1,273	648

Notes:

1. The numbers of staff shown relates to persons directly employed by Members. They do not include persons who are fee earning, agency workers, or staff provided under an arrangement with a firm or business organisation.
2. A total of 648 Members are shown—this reflects the position as at 31 December 1989 (ie excluding the late Mr. J. Heddle and Mr. G. Adams who has not taken his seat).

Members' Employees

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Lord President of the Council what are the latest figures for the numbers of employees of hon. Members paid via the Fees Office, who are covered by contracts of employment; and whether he intends to take steps to increase the numbers.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: As at 31 December 1989, 1,273 staff employees of Members were paid via the Fees Office. Copies of the main terms and conditions of employment in respect of 781 staff have been furnished to the Fees Office at that date, leaving 492 staff—some of whom have been recently appointed—outstanding. The Fees Office continues to provide advice and guidance to individual Members seeking clarification on specific points of contractual detail, and I am satisfied that all reasonable steps are being taken to encourage adherence to the terms of the governing resolution.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Ivory Poaching

32. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is being offered to African countries willing to destroy all ivory stocks seized from poachers.

Mrs. Chalker: We do not offer assistance to African countries in response to their willingness to destroy ivory stocks seized from poachers, but we are committed to projects specifically to assist wildlife management and to help to deter and eliminate poaching.

Hungary

33. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on aid to Hungary.

Mrs. Chalker: Planning for the programme of £25 million over five years previously announced is under way. Our embassy in Budapest has been inviting appropriate contacts to submit ideas for possible financing from the fund. The programme commences substantively in April.

Pakistan

34. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to review United Kingdom aid to Pakistan.

Mrs. Chalker: When I visited Pakistan last month, I was able to review our aid programme with its Prime Minister and her Ministers. I signed new aid agreements worth £35 million, on behalf of ODA and CDC, for the Karachi water and sanitation project and the Sukkur barrage project.

Bangladesh

35. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will have discussions with the Government of Bangladesh on development issues.

Mrs. Chalker: Yes. The next meeting in our annual sequence of bilateral aid talks will be held in London later this month. I am also planning to pay my first visit to Bangladesh in February.

Rain Forests

36. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the further implementation of the agreement on rain forests negotiated by the right hon. Member for Bath (Mr. Patten) with the Brazilian Government.

Mrs. Chalker: British experts visited Brazil on several occasions between August and December and identified a number of well-defined possibilities for collaborative projects in tropical rain forests and urban environment. Detailed proposals are now being prepared by the Brazilian authorities for our consideration. I wrote to the hon. Member on 3 November and again on 20 December giving details of progress on the more advanced projects.

Fiji

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the levels of grant aid in pounds sterling given to Fiji for each year since 1980 and for each month during 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The information requested is as follows:

United Kingdom grants to Fiji 1980-1988 (£ Thousand)

Year	Total grant aid	Financial aid	Technical co-operation
1980	2,996	20	2,976
1981	2,649	135	2,514
1982	2,358	—	2,358
1983	2,752	706	2,047
1984	2,097	291	1,805
1985	2,254	395	1,859
1986	1,975	16	1,959
1987	1,953	70	1,883
1988	1,208	39	1,168

Provisional figures for 1989, not completely comparable with the above are £1,384,000, of which £32,000 was grant financial aid and £1,352,000 was technical co-operation.

All these figures exclude expenditure by the Commonwealth Development Corporation.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Mortgage Tax Relief

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish a table on the same general basis as that provided in his written reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 29 July 1988, Official Report, columns 728-30, on the cost to the Exchequer of mortgage interest relief for higher-rate taxpayers in a full year at the current basic rate of mortgage interest; and if he will add a forecast for 1990-91 on the same basis, allowing for separate taxation of husbands and wives.

Mr. Lilley: Estimates of excess over basic rate relief on mortgage interest in 1989-90, based on a projection of the 1987-88 survey of personal incomes, are given in the table. Estimates for 1990-91 are not available.

Ministers (Expenses)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what allowance is made against tax in respect of food and travel expenses incurred by Ministers of the Crown whilst employed on official duties.

Mr. Lilley: Ministers of the Crown, like all officeholders and employees, are entitled to tax relief under the schedule E expenses rules for those travel and subsistence costs that are necessarily incurred travelling in the performance of their duties.

Water (VAT)

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Government intend to impose a value added tax on water; and to which description of consumer it will apply.

Mr. Ryder: In order to comply with a judgment of the European Court, the provisions of section 19 of the Finance Act 1989 extend the standard rate of VAT to supplies of water used in connection with certain industrial activities with effect from 1 July 1990. Supplies to domestic consumers will remain zero-rated.

Inflation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the effect on the rate of inflation since 1986 of the increase in the price of assets, including houses; what was the increase in (a) overhead costs of employers and employees respectively and (b) wage increases granted to employees; and if he will provide regional as well as national figures.

Mr. Ryder: Increases in mortgage interest payments, including the lagged effect of house prices, contributed two percentage points to the annual rate of RPI inflation in the year to November, compared with half a percentage point in the year to January 1987. There are no official figures available for the overhead costs of employers or employees. Figures for average earnings are published in the Employment Gazette and New Earnings Survey, copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current rate of inflation in the United Kingdom and in the Group of Five leading industrial nations.

Mr. Ryder: More comparable inflation rates for members of the five leading industrial countries are given in the following table:

More comparable consumer price inflation rates

	Latest figures[1]
United Kingdom[2]	6·1
United States of America	4·4
Japan	2·6
Germany	3·4
France	3·7

[1] Figures for the United Kingdom and France are for November, the United States of America and Germany are for October and for Japan, September.
[2] The United Kingdom figure is for RPI excluding mortgage interest payments; figures for other countries exclude estimates of owner occupiers' housing costs as appropriate.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he is taking to curb inflation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The Government's tight monetary and fiscal policies are working. Demand is slowing and lower inflation will follow.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the effect on the rate of wage and price inflation since 1986 of the increase since 1987 in the real exchange rate against the deutschmark measured in terms of relative export prices regionally and nationally.

Mr. Ryder: The relationship between wage and price inflation and changes in the bilateral deutschmark-sterling real exchange rate cannot be separated from the effects of exchange-rate movements against third currencies and other influences on wage and price inflation in both countries.

Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the increase in real terms after tax of a married couple with two children and no tax allowances, other than personal allowances, for each of the male employees itemised in the written reply of 13 December from the Department of Employment to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, Official Report, columns 658-59, showing the increase in gross real earnings between April 1979 and April 1989.

Mr. Lilley: Information is given in the table.

Increases[1] in real earnings[2] after income tax[3] and child benefit of a married man with two children[4], between April 1979 and April 1989

Point on Earnings Distribution	Manufacturing	Percentage increase Non-manufacturing

[1] The increases shown do not relate to the same individuals at the different dates.
[2] Earnings are those for full-time males on adult rates in Great Britain.
[3] For April 1979, income tax is based on the tax regime in the Finance Act 1979.
[4] Two children, both aged under 11.

Child Care

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newham, South of 3 November, Official Report, column 361, he will examine the disparity in respect of parental payment for day child care facilities.

Mr. Lilley: I am not aware of such a disparity.

Tax Subsidies

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will consider introducing tax subsidies on British Rail season tickets as a means of reducing road congestion and environmental pollution.

Mr. Lilley: I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend's Budget statement.

Interest Rates

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on interest rates.

Mr. Ryder: Bank base rates are 15 per cent.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what new intitiatives he plans to reduce the level of interest rates.

Mr. Ryder: The Government will not reduce interest rates until that can be safely done without risk to inflation.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest figure he has for the percentage that taxation represents of the gross domestic product; and what was the comparable figure in 1979.

Mr. Ryder: The information is given below.

Taxes as percentage of GDP[1]

	per cent.
1979	28·3
1988	30·4

[1] Taxes cover taxes on income, expenditure (including local authority rates) and capital. GDP is GDP(A) at market prices.

Capital Inflows

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the value of short-term capital inflows into the United Kingdom in the first three quarters of 1989.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The available information on transactions in the main categories of United Kingdom external assets and liabilities in the first three quarters of 1989 was published on 14 December in the quarterly balance of payments press notice, CSO(89)143, a copy of which is in the Library. It is not considered meaningful to distinguish short-term capital flows.

Taxes and Benefits

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report up-to-date figures on the same basis as those provided to the hon. Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) in the Official Report, 10 January 1989, columns 633-56.

Mr. Lilley: Figures for 1978-79 to 1988-89 were placed in the Library of the House earlier this year (as noted in Official Report 13 April 1989, column 624). Revised estimates for 1988-89, and estimates for 1989-90 were given in reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 1 December 1989 (Official Report, col. 464). I regret that those estimates for 1988-89 for a married man with two children contained an error. The amended tables are below.

Notes to tables

1. Income tax payments are calculated on the assumption that the households receive no tax reliefs other than the standard allowances. Earners, including working wives, are assumed to pay Class 1 NI contributions at the contracted in rate. The figures for NI contributions are financial year averages.

2. The two earner married couple is assumed to have combined earnings equal to the various multiples of average earnings. In calculating disposable income it is assumed that these earnings are split between husband and wife in the ratio 60:40.

3. For the married couple with two children, child benefit is treated as a negative income tax.

4. Average earnings are taken to be the average gross weekly earnings of all full-time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence.

These were £256·30 per week in 1988-89, and estimated to be £280·00 per week in 1989-90, using the Government Actuary Department's assumption of 9¼ per cent. growth over 1988-89 as published in the 1989 Autumn Statement.

5. The estimates of indirect taxation are derived from the 1985 family expenditue survey, and are based on the illustrative assumption that 10 per cent. of disposable income is saved. There are wide variations in spending patterns between households with similar incomes and composition, and estimated payments of VAT, other indirect taxes and rates are therefore approximate, even within the income range for which figures are shown. Outside this range the margin of error is even higher and reliable estimates cannot be made. Because of sampling variation, there can be substantial differences between the estimates obtained from family expenditure surveys for different years.

6. 1989-90 figures are converted into 1988-89 prices by assuming that the RPI is 7½ per cent. higher in 1989-90 than the previous financial year. This is consistent with the forecasts published in the 1989 Autumn Statement.

Public Spending

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the public spending planning total for 1990-91.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The public expenditure planning total for 1990-91 has been set at £179 billion, as set out in the Autumn Statement.

Trade Deficit

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the trade deficit for 1990.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to table 2·3 of the Autumn Statement.

Company Cars

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he plans to change the nature of company car taxation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend's Budget statement.

EEC Inflation

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average rate of inflation for the European Economic Community.

Mr. Ryder: The average EC inflation rate is published each month by the OECD in "Main Economic Indicators".

Industrial Investment

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further measures he plans to introduce to stimulate industrial investment.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Investment in all sectors of the economy has been stimulated by confidence in the long-term prospects for the economy. Manufacturing investment is at a record level and the CSO's latest survey of manufacturers' investment intentions projects further growth over the next two years.

Members' Salaries

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to allow hon. Members to receive their House of Commons salary in European currency units.

Mr. Ryder: Members' salaries are a matter for the House and are paid in accordance with the resolution of 21 July 1987. The resolution would need to be amended if Members' salaries were to be denominated in European currency units.

PSBR

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the net public sector borrowing requirement or debt repayment for 1989-90.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The latest forecast is for a net public sector debt repayment of £12½ billion in 1989-90, as set out in the Autumn Statement.

Cigarettes

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the United Kingdom cigarette market was accounted for by cheap foreign imports in the years 1980 to 1989 inclusive; and if he will list the Budget tax increases on cigarettes for each of those years.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 20 December 1989]: Figures on cheap foreign imports are not available. The table shows the share of imports in home consumption of cigarettes in the years 1980-89 and the rates of specific excise duty in place after the Budget. An ad valorem duty of 21 per cent. of the listed retail selling price applies to all cigarettes.

Unearned Income

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate how many married women with children have unearned income.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 20 December 1989]: It is estimated that approximately 4 million married women with children have some income from investment.

Independent Taxation

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide the latest estimate of the cost of bringing in independent taxation in 1990-91 next April.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 20 December 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 18 December, Official Report, col 26, for the reduction in income tax liabilities in 1990-91 due to the introduction of independent taxation. The corresponding reduction in income tax receipts in 1990-91 is £500 million.

The estimated effect on the receipts of capital gains tax in 1990-91 is unchanged from the tentative figure of £50 million published in the 1988 Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Fixed Profit Car Scheme

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 12 December, Official Report, column 564, about the fixed profit car scheme, if he will give details of the mileage bands and car engine sizes whereby the taxable amount is fixed.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 20 December 1989]: Under the fixed profit car scheme arrangements the car engine sizes taken into account are those up to 1000cc, 1001 to 1500cc and over 1500cc. The number and width of the mileage bands vary according to the mileage allowances reimbursed under each particular employer's mileage allowance scheme. For every band a "fixed profit" is calculated and employees are taxed on the fixed profit for the band into which the mileage driven on business falls.

Whisky

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much is the United Kingdom excise duty on a one litre bottle of whisky containing 40 per cent. alcohol imported from (a) the United States of America and (b) Japan.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 20 December 1989]: A total of 630·8 pence in both cases.

Architectural Staff

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what architectural and architectural-related staff he has in the Treasury to make technical assessments of decisions by other Departments to use agents other than the Property Services Agency.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 21 December 1989]: No staff in such specialisms are currently employed in the Treasury. Where Departments are free to use agents other than PSA for building and maintenance work, it is for them to decide on value for money grounds, and after the usual tendering and contract procedures have been observed, whether such agents, or PSA, should be employed.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 9 January 1990

ENERGY

Plutonium

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to offer for full safeguards to the International Atomic Energy Agency and Euratom Safeguards Authorities all plutonium created in British Nuclear Fuels' Calder Hall and Chapelcross reactors, arising from periods when the reactors were operating on civil production cycles.

Mr. Baldry: No. These are non-safeguarded facilities.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what amount of plutonium created in civil reactors in the United Kingdom is currently allocated to the ownership of the European Community under article 86 of the Euratom treaty; and what amount of civil plutonium will be allocated to the European Community with the creation of Nuclear Electric.

Mr. Baldry: In accordance with article 86 of the Euratom treaty, all special fissile materials produced in civil reactors in the United Kingdom are the property of the Community. However, under article 87, member states or operators retain unlimited right of use and consumption. The position will not change with the creation of Nuclear Electric.

Coal (Properties)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will supply a full list of the land and properties by coal field area currently under the ownership of British Coal.

Mr. Baldry: My Department does not have this information. This is a matter for the British Coal corporation.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will provide a full list of land and properties currently owned by the Coal Industry Social Welfare Organisation.

Mr. Baldry: Details of land and property owned are a matter for the organisation's directors.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will provide a full list of all producing coal mines in the United Kingdom and the numbers of persons employed in each case.

Mr. Baldry: This is a matter for the British Coal corporation.

Nuclear Reactors

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the nuclear reactors in Britain (a) with and (b) without secondary containment.

Mr. Wakeham: All nuclear reactors in the United Kingdom are provided with defence in depth against the release of radioactivity by means of a series of barriers which differ according to the design characteristics of the particular reactor type. The term "secondary containment" usually refers to an outer, sealed, low-leakage building which houses the reactor core and primary coolant circuits. The need for such containment depends on the operating characteristics of the reactor and the coolant activity levels. The steam-generating heavy water reactor at Winfrith, and the prototype fast reactor at Dounreay have "secondary containment" buildings, and these will also be provided for the pressurised water reactor under construction at Sizewell. The operational characteristics of Magnox, advanced gas-cooled reactors, and small research reactors are such that "secondary containment" buildings are not needed to ensure their safety.

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what specialist equipment, including personal dosimeters, radial survey meters and decontamination meters are available for ambulance staff at Sellafield, Wylfa, Trawsfynydd, Oldbury, Berkeley, Hinkley Point, Winfrith, Dungeness, Bradwell, Sizewell and Hartlepool, respectively; and in each case what training staff have received;

(2) what studies have been made of the problems of evacuating all low-mobility groups in the event of a worst case atomic accident at (a) Sellafield, (b) Wylfa, (c) Trawsfynydd, (d) Oldbury, (e) Berkeley, (f) Hinkley Point, (g) Winfrith, (h) Dungeness, (i) Bradwell, (j) Sizewell and (k) Hartlepool; and giving for each study the geographical area covered;

(3) what training has been given to ambulance staff to deal with a major accident at each of the nuclear installations at Sellafield, Wylfa, Trawsfynydd, Oldbury, Berkeley, Hinkley Point, Winfrith, Dungeness, Bradwell, Sizewell and Hartlepool;

(4) whether ambulance staff have participated in the exercise of the local emergency plans at Sellafield, Wylfa, Trawsfynydd, Oldbury, Berkeley, Hinkley Point, Winfrith, Dungeness, Bradwell, Sizewell and Hartlepool; and in each case which units participated.

Mr. Wakeham: Health authorities, which manage the ambulance service locally, are required by circulars HC(85)24 and HC(89)8 in England and WHC(85)34 in Wales, to ensure that all ambulance staff are made aware of the contingency plans at civil nuclear sites and how they fit in with health authorities' major accident plans, and that they receive appropriate precautionary training.

National Health Service ambulance services have participated in exercises at Wylfa, Trawsfynydd, Oldbury, Berkeley, Hinkley Point, Dungeness, Bradwell, Sizewell and Hartlepool, and have been alerted by the police to their possible involvement during exercises at Sellafield and Winfrith. Site emergency plans provide that National Health Service ambulance service personnel should be under the direct supervision of qualified staff in all areas where they are required to enter contaminated areas, and that the necessary dosimeters and professional health physics assistance and decontamination equipment be provided to any such visiting service by site management.

The need to include the special requirements of low-mobility groups in the arrangements for evacuation of the public is recognised. Action at the scene by the various emergency services and local authorities would be co-ordinated by the police.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what studies his Department has made of evacuation procedures and other aspects of the Chernobyl disaster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: Following the Chernobyl accident a Government working group was established to review nuclear emergency planning. This culminated in the Prime Minister's statement to Parliament on 18 December 1986 at columns 612-13. This was followed by a further statement by the Prime Minister on 12 December 1988 at column 391.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when the Central Electricity Generating Board last made a safety assessment of a nuclear reactor of a type akin to that at Chernobyl.

Mr. Wakeham: No such safety assessment has been made; the Central Electricity Generating Board has not sought a licence for a reactor with characteristics similar to that at Chernobyl.

Licences

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what regulations he plans to make under section 6(3) of the Electricity Act 1989 on how applications for licences to generate, transmit or supply electricity are to be made.

Mr. Wakeham: Draft regulations and application forms have now been prepared. My Department and the Scottish Office are seeking the views of the electricity industry, including independent generators and suppliers, on these drafts. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and I intend that the regulations will be laid before Parliament as soon as possible, to give those concerned ample time to submit applications before the licensing regime provided for in section 6 of the Act comes into effect at the end of March 1990. At the same time, an order will be laid under section 5(1) of the Act as to the classes of person who will be exempt from the licensing requirement, taking into account the consultation which my Department has recently undertaken.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Rhizomania

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further measures he intends to take to stop the spread of rhizomania in sugar beet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Until this year there had been only one outbreak of rhizomania in this country and we applied restrictions to the farm concerned to isolate the infection and prevent it from spreading. Immediate measures included destruction of the infected crop and restrictions on movements on and off the farm. Longer-term measures involve restrictions on the pattern of farming. This year there have been two further outbreaks and we are applying similar measures. We are currently considering the precise extent of the longer-term restrictions in consultation with the farmers concerned.

To prevent the introduction of rhizomania to this country we operate a range of statutory controls on imports. These include restrictions on imports of beet seeds and plants, a requirement that imported seed potatoes must come from rhizomania-free areas, a strict limitation on the amount of soil attached to imported vegetables and regulation of the disposal of waste soil following the commercial processing of the vegetables. We keep this range of measures under careful review, but I do not consider that any additional restrictions are justified at present.

Inshore Fishing

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will take steps to devolve central control of the inshore fishing industry of England and Wales to a regional fisheries management organisation which would co-ordinate the work of his Ministry's fisheries inspectorate and provide the contract and administrative body for the sea fisheries committees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I have no plans to create such a regional fisheries management body, but I am looking at alternative quota management measures.

Spongiform Encephalopathies

Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action the Government are taking on the Tyrrell committee report on research into spongiform encephalopathies.

Mr. Gummer: Dr. Tyrrell of the medical research council was asked by my predecessor and the Secretary of State for Health to chair a research consultative committee of scientific experts to advise on the research work in progress, and additional work required into the disease bovine spongiform encephalopathy (BSE) and to set out the priorities for further work. Copies of the Committee's interim report have been placed on the Library of the House. The report recommends a comprehensive programme of research on the epidemiology, transmissibility and diagnosis of BSE with the aim of extending scientific knowledge about this new disease so that animal and human health can continue to be protected and the disease eventually eradicated.

The Government have considered the report very carefully and accept the recommendations of the committee. A number of the projects are covered by the substantial programme of research that is already in progress, representing spending of some £1·3 million in the current financial year. Preparatory work is in hand on the other projects which the Tyrrell committee recommended as urgent and of high priority. This represents additional funding from my Department's votes of some £2·2 million in 1990-92 and 1991-91, and £1·7 million in 1992-93. The Secretary of State for Health is setting in hand the high priority research that is within his Department's responsibility and the Secretary of State for Education and Science is considering the advice of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils on what additional allocation would be appropriate from the science budget to the agricultural and food research council in support of its proposed programme of research, including research into slow viruses.

The undertaking of such a large-scale programme of research into BSE demonstrates the Government's determination to deal with this disease.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Environmental Research

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on research sponsored by the research councils into environmental matters.

Mr. Jackson: All the research sponsored by the natural environment research council is concerned in some way with environmental matters. In addition all the other four research councils support work that is concerned with the environment. Details of research into environmental matters can be found in each of the research councils' most recent annual reports, copies of which have been deposited in the Library over the last two months.

Local Management of Schools

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list (a) those local education authorities which have had their system of local management of schools approved by his Department and (b) those local education authorities whose schemes have been refused.

Mrs. Rumbold: The following local education authorities have had their schemes for the local management of schools formally approved for introduction in April 1990 or are being consulted about proposed modifications prior to approval:

Avon
Barking
Barnet
Barnsley
Bedfordshire
Birmingham
Bolton
Bromley
Buckinghamshire
Bury Calderdale
Cambridgeshire
Cheshire
Cumbria
Derbyshire
Lancashire
Lincolnshire
Liverpool
Merton
Newcastle

Norfolk
Northamptonshire
Northumberland
Oxfordshire

Richmond
Rochdale
Rotherham
Sandwell

Devon
Doncaster
Dudley
Durham

East Sussex

Essex
Gateshead
Gloucestershire
Hampshire
Harrow
Havering

Humberside
Isle of Wight
Kent
Kingston
Salford
Sheffield
Shropshire
Solihull
South Tyneside
Staffordshire
Stockport
Suffolk
Sunderland
Surrey
Sutton
Trafford
Wakefield
Warwickshire
Westminster
West Sussex
Wiltshire

We have indicated to two authorities—Leicestershire and Hereford and Worcester—that their schemes cannot be approved in their present form and that formal implementation will therefore be deferred until April 1991.

Scientific Research

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he proposes any changes in the arrangements for funding scientific research projects.

Mr. MacGregor: The Department has today issued a consultative paper proposing changes in the method of supporting research council-funded projects in universities and other higher education institutions. Copies are being placed in the Library.

Under the current system of dual support, research sponsored by research councils in universities and other higher education institutions is funded partly from grants from the councils and partly by the institutions from their block funding. In recent years, the boundary within this system determining who pays for what has become blurred. As the ABRC has pointed out, the resulting confusion can have harmful effects—giving rise to unproductive arguments about funding responsibility, to some projects being inadequately resourced and so inefficient, and to an inadequate appreciation of the real costs of projects and ill-informed decisions on the deployment of resources.

The consultative paper proposes a new, clearer definition of the boundary. We propose that from the academic year 1991-92, universities and other institutions would continue to pay the salaries of academic staff contributing to research council projects and to provide premises free of charge. All other costs of these projects would be met by the research councils through their grants. The change in responsibility would be reflected in the amount of grant which the research councils and the institutions receive from central Government.

There would be a small decrease in the block funding provided to the institutions through the Universities Funding Council and, to a much smaller extent, the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council, and a small matching increase in funding of the research councils from the science budget. The Department will discuss with other Education Departments the potential implications for those higher education institutions in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland which are not funded by the Universities Funding Council or the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will be producing new guidance for local education authorities on staffing for pupils with special educational needs.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My Department is today issuing for consultation a draft circular containing guidance on staffing for pupils with special educational needs. The document covers both teaching and non-teaching staff in special schools and in ordinary schools. I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Library.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Service Widows' Pensions

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what plans he has to extend payment of Civil Service widows' pensions to the widows of post-retirement marriages with civil servants who retired before April 1978;

(2) what would be the cost of extending payment of Civil Service widows' pensions to the widows of post-retirement marriages with civil servants who retired before April 1978.

Mr. Ryder: I am afraid that I can hold out no hope of amendment of the Civil Service pension scheme to provide for the payment of pensions to the widows of post-retirement marriages whose husbands retired before 6 April 1978. It is rarely, if ever, possible to make retrospective improvements in pension arrangements and an exception in this particular case could not be justified. The data necessary for a reliable assessment to be made of the cost of an extension in widow's pension cover are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate expenditure of time and resources.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much value added tax was paid per annum by an average family in 1978-79; and what is the most recent estimate.

Mr. Ryder: A family consisting of a married man on average male earnings, his wife and two children would have paid approximately £130 in VAT in 1978-79 (some 2·7 per cent. of earnings) and will pay about £730 in 1989-90 (roughly 5 per cent. of earnings).

Privatisation Advisers

Mr. Morley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many officials are employed at the Treasury to advise him on estimates of privatisation proceeds.

Mr. Ryder: The Treasury's public enterprises group, responsible for privatisation and nationalised industry policy, employs 29 people. However, estimates of proceeds from individual sales are the responsibility of the Departments concerned.

Commercial Accounting and Auditing

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer why normal commercial accountancy and auditing methods do not apply to the public sector.

Mr. Ryder: Normal commercial accountancy and auditing methods are employed or are being developed in the public sector where it is considered appropriate to use them, for example where Government Departments are engaged in commercial or quasi-commercial activities.

European Bank for Reconstruction and Development

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to ensure that the proposed European Community development bank for eastern Europe will provide technical advice on the creation of free markets as well as providing financial aid.

Mr. Ryder: The details of the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development are yet to be decided. In general, the Government support the encouragement of free enterprise in eastern Europe and will be pressing for the bank to be set up so as best to promote that aim.

Flora and Fauna

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many seizures of endangered species of flora and fauna have been made at ports of entry by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in each of the past three years;

(2) how many seizures of endangered species of flora and fauna have been made at United Kingdom ports of entry by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in each of the last three years.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 8 January 1980]: The details sought are given in the following table. The figures show the number of live creatures, plants and articles derived from endangered species seized by Customs because their importation or exportation contravened the restrictions imposed by the Endangered Species (Import and Export) Act 1976 or Council Regulation No. 3626/82.

Year to 31 March	Live creatures	Plants	Articles
1987	1,604	—	6,304
1988	2,284	500	3,000
1989	1,915	7,900	9,000

NORTHERN IRELAND

Electricity Service

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list (i) the statutory requirements governing the publication of reports of the Northern Ireland electricity service, (ii) the dates on which such reports have been published in each year since nationalisation, either for existing or predecessor corporations, and (iii) indicate, if appropriate, when the report for 1988-89 will be published.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

1. Article 12 of the Electricity Supply (Northern Ireland) Order 1972.
2. Since the establishment of the Northern Ireland Electricity Service by the above Order in 1973 the Annual Reports have been published as follows:

Report for	Published on
1974	21 March 1975
1975	10 December 1975
1976	15 November 1976
1977	25 October 1977
1978	7 September 1978
1979	2 October 1979
1980	28 August 1980
1981	29 September 1981
1982	August 1982[1]
1983	8 July 1983
1984	23 July 1984
1985	22 July 1985
1986	22 July 1986
1987	6 July 1987
1988	5 July 1988

[1] Exact date not known.

3. The annual report for 1988-89 was published on 11 July 1989.

Traffic Flows

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many vehicles use Linenhall street, Limavady each day; and what is the maximum and minimum hourly flow of traffic;

(2) whether he has any estimate into the hourly vehicle capacity of Linenhall street, Limavady.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is estimated that 11,200 vehicles use Linenhall street, Limavady, over a 16-hour daily period with maximum and minimum hourly flows of 1,078 and 692 vehicles respectively. The street has an estimated hourly capacity of 1,500 vehicles.

Arts and Design

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what expenditure was made by his Department on (a) the arts and (b) design in the last financial year.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 21 December 1989]: In 1988-89 the Department of Education (NI) made direct grants of some £4·8 million to the Arts Council (NI) and other bodies in the arts field. Expenditure in support of the arts and of design, or design education, is not separately identifiable within the resources allocated to schools, colleges and universities.

Remand Prisoners

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prisoners were on remand in the prisons of Northern Ireland on 30 November 1989; what was the longest term of remand; and what were the comparable figures for the last three years.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 21 December 1989]: On 26 October 1989, the lastest date for which figures are available, there were 343 prisoners in remand custody in prisons in Northern Ireland. At that date the longest time spent in remand custody by an individual prisoner was 131 days.

Comparable figures for remand prisoners for the same day in 1986, 1987 and 1988 are 292, 313, 272 respectively. The details of longest time served for those years is not readily available and could not be produced except at disproportionate cost.

Short Bros

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if any Department for which he has responsibility retains any financial responsibility or liability for the formerly publicly owned companies of Short Bros.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 21 December 1989]: The Department of Economic Development wholly owns four aircraft financing companies which were formerly subsidiaries of Short Brothers plc and is responsible for meeting their liabilities.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Chemical Weapons

91. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made through the chemical weapons convention in achieving a comprehensive and verifiable global ban on the production and use of chemical weapons.

92. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in regard to the international negotiations concerning chemical weapons.

Mr. Waldegrave: Useful progress has been made in Geneva on a number of the complex issues involved in the negotiations on a chemical weapons convention, but much work remains to be done particularly in the crucial area of verification.

High Commissioner, Kuala Lumpur

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of telegram 597, dated 16 December 1985, from the British High Commissioner in Kuala Lumpur to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office; and if he will make a statement concerning the contents of the telegram.

Mr. Maude: No. The matter covered by the document in question is currently sub-judice.

Attorney-General, Hong Kong

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will order an independent inquiry into the performance since 1 January 1988 of the chambers of the Attorney-General of Hong Kong.

Mr. Maude: No.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the performance since 1 January 1988 of the chambers of the Attorney-General of Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I am satisfied with the performance of the Hong Kong Attorney-General's chambers since 1 January 1988.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what positions have been held in the chambers of the Attorney-General of Hong Kong by Mr. Warwick Reid; since when and on what grounds Mr. Reid has been suspended; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Mr. Reid has held the positions of Crown counsel, senior Crown counsel, deputy principal Crown counsel, and principal Crown counsel. Except for a period of 10 months in the post of assistant to the Attorney-General, his career has been spent in the prosecutions division where, until recently, he held the post of deputy Crown prosecutor. Mr. Reid was suspended from duty on 30 October 1989 following his arrest by officers of the Independent Commission Against Corruption for suspected offences contrary to the prevention of bribery ordinance.

Vietnam

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations he has made to the Vietnamese authorities concerning the continued imprisonment of (a) Nguyen Nan Tuoi and (b) Nguyen Huu Guong; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has made to the Vietnamese authorities concerning the continued imprisonment of (a) Father Dominic Tran Ninh Thu; (b) Father Joseph Nguyen Cong Doan and (c) Pastor Ho Hieu Ha; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have raised the question of political prisoners with the Vietnamese authorities both with our partners in the European Community and bilaterally. The most recent EC demarche, concerning a number of detainees imprisoned for their political or religious beliefs, was made to the Vietnamese Government on 29 December. The Twelve have also raised at the United Nations continuing reports of abuses of human rights in Vietnam, and have called on Vietnam to release, without delay, those prisoners detained without a fair trial. We shall continue to seek appropriate opportunities to raise specific cases of human rights abuses, including those mentioned by the hon. Member.

Warsaw Pact

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many officials specifically designated to deal with trade relations there were at each embassy or consulate in each Warsaw pact country in April 1989; and how many he expects to be in post in April 1990.

Mr. Maude: As of April 1989 there were 46 staff specifically dealing with commercial and economic affairs in the Soviet Union and eastern Europe countries which are members of the Warsaw pact, in addition to the ambassadors and their deputies in each post who of course have commercial roles. The distribution was as follows:

	Number
USSR	13
Poland	7
Hungary	6
Czechoslovakia	6
GDR	5
Bulgaria	4
Romania	5

There are no plans at present to increase commercial staff in these countries. The situation in each is however kept under review, in consultation with the British Overseas Trade Board and the Department of Trade and Industry.

Economic Aid

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the level of direct economic aid which Her Majesty's Government has provided (a) bilaterally and (b) through the European Community to (i) Poland, (ii) Hungary, (iii) Bulgaria, (iv) Czechoslovakia and (v) East Germany since the beginning of 1989; and whether any such assistance will be used to construct free markets.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have so far committed funds only for Poland and Hungary. Details are as follows. A great deal of our total aid is being used to encourage the development of market economies. We do not yet have programmes for the other countries of eastern Europe but stand ready to respond to their needs at the time they put into place the necessary economic and political reforms.

United Kingdom Assistance for Poland

Bilateral

Know-How Fund (50 million over 5 years)
Agricultural project (£15 million)
Short-term ECGD cover
Investment insurance through ECGD (war and expropriations risk only)

EC

Free food supplies (UK share: £4-5 million)
EC budget allocation (UK share: £9-14 million, depending on size of abatements)
Trade measures (QRs and GSP)
European Investment Bank (EIB) lending (1 billion ecu over a number of years for both Poland and Hungary)

Other International

Stabilization Fund (UK contribution: $100 million)

Prospective

Debt rescheduling in Paris Club ($4 billion in 1990, of which UK would account for about 18 per cent.)
IMF drawing (about $700 million over 18 months)
World Bank/IFC loans (up to $1 billion over a number of years)

United Kingdom Assistance for Hungary

Bilateral

Know-How Fund (£25 million over 5 years)

EC
EC budget allocation (UK share: £9-14 million, depending on size of abatements)
Trade measures (QRs and GSP)
European Investment Bank (EIB) lending (1 billion ecu over a number of years for both Poland and Hungary)

Other international
IMF drawings under last SBA (July 1988-June 1989): (Total loan 265 million SDRs ($350 million) of which 215·35 SDRs (about $275 million) were drawn)
World Bank: loans outstanding: $1,165 million (30 June 1989)
IFC: commitments: $36 million

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans Her Majesty's Government have to provide economic assistance to Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia and the German Democratic Republic.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are assisting Poland and Hungary through the know-how funds and other bilateral aid efforts, as well as our contribution to EC programmes. We, together with other OECD countries, have declared our willingness to respond positively to other countries in eastern Europe at the time they put into place necessary political and economic reforms.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make it his policy to ensure that bilateral and European Community assistance to the emerging democracies in Eastern Europe emphasises the mechanisms needed to create free markets in those countries.

Mr. Waldegrave: The know-how funds for Poland and Hungary set up by the Government aim to provide the skills needed to run free market economies and democratic societies. A great deal of EC project aid for these countries will be directed at vocational and management training.

Foreign Visits

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether it is the practice for his office to be informed of visits to foreign countries by close relatives of Ministers.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Panama

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations took place with EEC Governments before British endorsement of the United States invasion of Panama was given.

Mr. Sainsbury: Consultations with EC Governments began on 20 December as soon as we had information about the US action. A statement by the Twelve was issued on 22 December.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further information he has about injuries suffered by British subjects and damage of British-owned property in Panama as a result of the invasion by the United States of America; and what efforts he has made to establish the level of death and injuries among Panamanian civilians.

Mr. Sainsbury: So far as we have been able to establish, the only British national to suffer injury was a Reuters journalist who received medical treatment for a bullet wound in the thigh. I understand that he is now fully recovered. The British embassy residence suffered some damage to windows and walls which has now been repaired. There have been varying estimates of deaths and injuries among Panamanian civilians, which are hard to verify. The Panamanian authorities have not yet issued any official figures.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mr. Maude: The following ministerial meeting is scheduled:

22-23 January—Agriculture Council.

The following subjects are likely to be discussed:

(possibly) Presentation of 1990 agricultural price proposals.
(possibly) Bovine Semen (9729/89).
(possibly) Compound feedingstuffs (6904/88).

The Agriculture Council will meet on 22 and 23 January 1990. It may discuss health requirements applicable to bovine semen, and the marketing of compound feedingstuffs. The Commission is also expected to introduce its 1990 price fixing proposals.

Hong Kong (Refugees)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement concerning the future of the monks, nuns and priests at present in the Hong Kong refugee camps once repatriated.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 14 December 1989]: No monks, nuns or priests have been screened out as non-refugees. Any who arrived in Hong Kong before 16 June 1988, when screening was introduced, would have been granted refugee status and will be eligible for resettlement in the West. Among those still awaiting screening, the Hong Kong authorities have identified six nuns and four monks, all of them Buddhists, but no priests. When they are screened, such people would have a good claim to refugee status if they can demonstrate a well-founded fear of persecution on religious grounds. If they are found to merit refugee status, they will then be removed to a refugee camp to await resettlement.

TRANSPORT

Ethanol and Methanol Fuels

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies are being undertaken by the transport and road research laboratory into ethanol and methanol fuels for large-scale private and commercial road vehicle use.

Mr. Atkins: The energy technology support unit published a report "An assessment of bioethanol as a transport fuel in the UK" in 1988 (ETSU Report R-44). Copies will be placed in the Library. The transport and road research laboratory's vehicles and environment division keeps in touch with the work going on worldwide on alternative fuels.

Prestwick Airport

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what valuations of land and buildings at Prestwick airport, including land not needed for airport development, have been made since 1979; and what were the figures received;

(2) what valuations of the land at Prestwick airport not required for airport operations were carried out by his Department, by the British Airports Authority, or by or on behalf of his or their advisers prior to privatisation; and what were the figures received;

(3) what was the valuation of Prestwick airport, including land not required for airport operations, when last valued by the British Airports Authority prior to privatisation;

(4) when the land at Prestwick airport, including land not required for airport operations, was last valued for his Department; and what was the valuation received.

Mr. McLoughlin: The following gross current cost valuations of land and buildings have been provided by BAA plc, based on the published accounts of Prestwick Airport Limited, which was first incorporated on 6 January 1986.

Year ended March	£ thousand
1987	27,552
1988	28,556
1989	32,974

The prospectus offering shares in BAA plc for sale noted that non-operational land and buildings at the seven BAA airports were valued at 1 April 1986 by Debenham, Tewson and Chinnock at £91 million. No separate figure was given for Prestwick airport. The prospectus gave a figure of £1,400 million for fixed assets at all of the BAA airports at 31 March 1987, but again did not separately identify a figure for land at Prestwick.

The Department has no readily available record of any earlier figures.

Road Improvements (Lambeth)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what road improvement schemes are being supported in the London borough of Lambeth by a transport supplementary grant in 1990-91.

Mr. Atkins: The London borough of Lambeth will receive transport supplementary grant of £154,000 in 1990-91 towards its contribution to Londonwide urban traffic control systems and for unspecified minor works on roads of more than local importance.

Supplementary Credit Approvals

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now announce the 1990-91 supplementary credit approvals for public airport companies and local authority airports.

Mr. McLoughlin: Supplementary credit approvals totalling £59 million will be available for public airport companies and local authority airports for 1990-91. These borrowing approvals, together with other resources which public airport companies expect at this stage to invest, will assist the airports concerned to provide facilities which they estimate could cost some £117 million in 1990-91. I have today agreed to supplementary credit approvals totalling £46 million at this stage. The major projects concerned include the continuation of work on terminal 2 at Manchester airport and of infrastructure for the Eurohub terminal at Birmingham airport. Formal supplementary credit approvals will be issued as soon as part IV of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 comes into effect.

"Roads for Prosperity"

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received representations from any environmental agency or organisation which supports "Roads for Prosperity".

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 8 January 1990]: A large number of organisations, including some with environmental concerns as part of their remit, have responded to "Roads for Prosperity".

Cyclists

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to ensure that cyclists are not disadvantaged in plans for Britain's road network.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 8 January 1990]: The Department takes the needs of cyclists into account when planning new trunk roads and improving existing ones. Close attention is paid to the design of junctions and other locations where cyclists are known to be at greatest risk, and we try to enhance the safety and convenience of routes for cyclists. We encourage local highway authorities, which are responsible for the roads on which most cycling takes place, to do the same. We shall continue to promote safer cycling mainly through the publication of technical advice and guidance based on our research and application studies.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to ensure that local authorities are able to plan for cyclists within their tranportation plans; and if he will ensure that such initiatives are properly resourced.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 8 January 1990]: Decisions on allocating resources for cycling and the appropriate level of provision are for individual highway authorities to take. The current circular to local authorities on transport policies and programme submissions for 1990-91 encourages them to provide facilities which benefit cyclists. Such schemes will be considered for transport supplementary grant when they are integral to highway or traffic management schemes which are large enough to qualify for grant in their own right.

The Department makes available technical advice mainly in the form of publications which are available from our regional offices (free traffic advisory leaflets) and Her Majesty's Stationery Office (local transport notes). Copies are placed in the Library.

Car Accidents

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to reduce the level of car accidents from the current level.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 8 January 1990]: We aim to reduce road casualties, including car accidents, by a third by the year 2000. Copies of the second annual progress report "Road Casualty Reduction" are in the Library. Action covers roads, vehicles and drivers. Key features are bypasses, low-cost local safety schemes, traffic calming in residential areas, better signing and lighting, improved vehicle safety standards, effective driver training and testing and a developing framework of road traffic law and enforcement measures to foster sensible driving behaviour.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research has been undertaken into the number of fatal accidents involving two-door as against four-door cars.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 8 January 1990]: I am not aware of any specific research on this topic. The Department's database on accidents involving injuries to car occupants indicates that the ratio of two or three-door cars to four or five-door cars involved in fatal accidents follows closely their respective ratios in the car population. The following table illustrates this for the year ending 31 December 1988.

per cent.

	2/3 Doors	4/5 Doors	Estates
Total GB population (cars in 1988)	37·8	53·7	8·5
Fatal Accidents	38·9	53·4	7·7

Road Improvements

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what impact his proposals for road improvement will have on inner-city congestion; and what consultation he has had with local authorities about his planned road building programme.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 8 January 1990]: The schemes in the Government's trunk road programme are designed to deal selectively with forecast levels of demand and congestion mostly on the inter-urban network, where recent traffic growth has been highest. Inner-city roads are by and large the responsibility of local highway authorities, with which the Department maintains regular contacts.

Schemes in the trunk road programme will benefit inner-city areas by relieving traffic congestion and making them more attractive places for people to live and work.

Departmental Programmes (Representations)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the Council for the Protection of Rural England, Friends of the Earth, the Ramblers Association, Transport 2000, the Youth Hostels Association, the Environment Council, Greenpeace, the Royal Society for Nature Conservation and the World Wildlife Fund for Nature on his proposals; and what action he is taking.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 8 January 1990]: We have received copies of the publication "Roads to Ruin" from these organisations. Some have separately written to me. I am sending the hon. Member a copy of the Secretary of State's response to "Roads to Ruin".

Accident Statistics

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the total numbers of casualties, serious injuries and deaths on (a) British roads, (b) British railways during 1988.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 8 January 1990]: In 1988, a total of 322,305 persons were killed or injured in accidents on British roads. This total includes 63,491 persons seriously injured and 5,052 persons killed.

In the same year, a total of 10,963 persons were killed or injured in accidents on British railways. This total includes 596 persons who sustained major injuries and 97 persons killed.

Bottesford Bypass

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make a statement on any action which he has taken to improve safety on the A52 trunk road bypassing Bottesford, Leicestershire, since the site meeting attended by representatives of his Department on 17 May; and whether he will list the action taken in response to each of the paragraphs of the departmental minute of proceedings sent to the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton on 7 August.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 8 January 1990]: The Department is continuing to monitor the situation. Additional signs and road markings have been provided and arrangements are in hand for "soft verge" signs and for enhancing the daytime visibility of road markings on the concrete surface. I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Roadworks

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply of 21 December 1989, Official Report, column 364, if he will state by what means his Department ensures the careful programming and traffic management arrangements of works on its own roads.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 8 January 1990]: The Department oversees works carried out by its agents and seeks to ensure co-ordination in the timing and method of works. It issues departmental standards and guidance to agents on the safe design and method of carrying out works.

Road Excavations

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply of 21 December 1989, Official Report, column 363, if he will list those various organisations, other than highway authorities and the main public utilities, empowered to carry out excavation in the public highway.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 8 January 1990]: This information is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply of 21 December 1989, Official Report, column 364, how his Department encourages highway authorities to promote co-operation between organisations having statutory rights to excavate roads.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 8 January 1990]: The Department has encouraged the formation of local liaison groups between highway authorities and utilities. It has been discussing with the Association of London Borough Engineers and Surveyors the formation of a London joint utilities group. It chaired the group which last year produced a written understanding between highway authorities and utilities in London docklands on the timing and co-ordination of works.

ENVIRONMENT

Pollution Inspectorate

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 19 December, Official Report, column 126, if he will give the length of time the vacant posts in Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution have remained vacant, details of all posts on the establishment created within the past 12 months and the breakdown of field work inspection staff and support staff; what information he has on the salary scales applicable in private industry and Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution for similar levels of work.

Mr. Trippier: When HMIP was established there were 66 vacancies. Since then the staff complement has been increased by 37 posts, 13 announced in December 1988, three in January 1989 and 21 with effect from 2 October 1989. Allowing for the transfer in 1988 of 11 posts to a policy division there are currently 41 vacancies and recruitment competitions are being conducted to fill them. HMIP has 85 field inspectors supported by 29 administrative staff. The biennial remuneration survey of the Royal Society of Chemistry, carried out in January 1988, gave the income for the upper quartile of about £17,000 for members of the society at comparable levels to recruitment grade pollution inspectors. The current recruitment competition for pollution inspectors offers salaries ranging from £18,485 to £24,075, up to £2,835 higher in London.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he intends to introduce to ensure effective enforcement of the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Act 1989 including regulations.

Mr. Trippier: The Department is preparing a consultation paper to be issued in the spring.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to review the salary structure of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Mr. Trippier: The salary structure for professional staff in Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has been reviewed recently, and this has resulted in the substantial salary increases being offered in the current recruitment drive for pollution inspectors. The position will be kept under review.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what system has been agreed for the frequency of inspection of works subject to Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution control; and if he will publish the programme for inspection.

Mr. Trippier: Targets for inspection of works subject to control by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution are set annually according to management's assessment of regulation requirements and priorities. Details of HMIP's inspection programme for 1989-90 are set out in the Department's management information system return (MINIS 10), which is available in the Library of the House.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish and when is the closing date for the public consultation exercise for the regulations to be introduced under the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Act 1989.

Mr. Trippier: The enforcement of the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Act 1989 will be a matter for the waste regulation authorities. Regulations to implement the provisions of the Act will be laid as soon as possible after consultation with interested parties.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what scientific evidence will be used to formulate proposals to reduce carbon dioxide emissions following the Environment Council meeting of 28 November.

Mr. Trippier: A comprehensive assessment of the scientific evidence for climatic change and its possible impacts is being undertaken by the working groups of the intergovernmental panel on climate change. The IPCC will report later this year and its work will be considered at the second world climate conference in November 1990.

Disabled Persons' Bungalows

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of purpose-built disabled persons' bungalows owned by (a) local authorities and (b) housing associations; what plans he has to increase resources available for this work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Local authorities report the number of their dwellings that have been specially designed or adapted for use by the disabled and those owned by housing associations, in their annual housing investment programme returns (HIP1). These returns do not distinguish bungalows from other dwelling types. Preliminary estimates for April 1989 of the number of local authority wheelchair and other dwellings for the disabled appear in columns A2c1 and A2d1, respectively, of "1989 HIP1—Regional Grossing"; the small number of dwellings owned by the local authorities outside their areas are shown at columns A2c6 and A2d6. Corresponding estimates of the numbers of housing association wheelchair and other dwellings for the disabled appear in columns A2c2 and A2d2. A copy of the document is in the Library.

We have established a statutory and financial framework to enable housing associations and the private sector to increase their provision for those in housing need, including the disabled.

The Government announced last November that total provision for gross capital expenditure by the Housing Corporation will double over the next three years, rising from £818 million this year to £1,736 million in 1992-93. Detailed allocations of funds to individual types of schemes are the responsibility of the corporation.

We are continuing to promote appropriate design standards for new housing and, with the special needs of the disabled in mind, have quite recently agreed with the Housing Corporation that all new housing association schemes should conform to basic "mobility" standards.

Environmental Labelling

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of consultation on the discussion paper on the environmental labelling of consumer products.

Mr. Chris Patten: Yes. My Department received over 90 responses to the discussion paper from a wide range of interested parties and individuals. A list of responses received has been placed in the Library of the House. Copies of individual responses may be received through the Library. We are grateful to all concerned for offering their views.

Consultation has shown that there is overwhelming support for an official eco-labelling scheme operating on a European Communitywide basis which is simple, flexible, transparent and commands public respect. I was pleased that the Environment Council supported this proposal at its meeting on 19 September. We intend to work closely with the European Commission and with our European partners to maintain the momentum of this initiative, taking account of the views of interested groups in this country.

A very clear majority of consultees supported our proposal that participation by companies in a scheme should be voluntary, but concern was expressed about the adequacy of controls over the making of environmental claims more generally. Policy on the latter is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. On his behalf, I can confirm that we shall be considering these representations further, looking at the possibility both of a code of practice on environmental claims and of amending the provisions of the Trade Descriptions Act. The Department of Trade and Industry will be issuing a consultation letter for this purpose shortly.

Some useful comments were received on the approach which should be adopted in selecting product groups covered by the scheme. We agree with the view expressed by a number of respondents that the aim should be to get a scheme up and running as quickly as possible, and that it should focus on products with a significant environmental impact or where consumers most clearly need the guidance which an eco-label is intended to provide. We intend to look at the selection of product categories in line with these considerations.

Respondents were divided on questions of what product categories should be included in a scheme. We remain of the view that food and drink should be excluded, both because there are already extensive controls on misleading and false food descriptions, and because of the need to give a scheme a tight initial focus. We agree with the view often expressed by respondents, that it would be confusing to label packaging separately from products, but we consider that it should be possible for the assessment of a product's eligibility for an eco-label to take account of packaging considerations.

We are committed to establishing a scheme that is both credible and workable. These objectives are especially relevant to the assessment process which must underlie the award of an eco-label. Consultation has shown that confining that assessment to the direct environmental impact of a product during use and disposal would not be regarded as credible. We accept, therefore, that the assessment should be based on the setting of criteria reflecting the key characteristics of a product's environmental impact from cradle to grave. We also believe that the pass mark required to receive an official label should be set towards the top end of what technology permits, so as to give producers a real incentive to improve their environmental performance, but not so high as to distort the market or impose disproportionate costs on business. The aim must be to work with the grain of market forces, not against it.

There was some support among respondents for a graded approach to eco-labelling, under which progressively higher standards of improvement in a product's environmental impact could be recognised, for example, by awarding one or more stars. We consider that such an approach could complicate the process of assessment unacceptably, and that it would not have the same clear attraction for the market as a more straightforward pass/fail system.

Responses were divided on the timing of the award of an eco-label. We consider that manufacturers will need the certainty of a finite minimum period, after which the award of the label should be subject to review. We recognise, however, that the length of that period may well need to differ between product categories, depending not least on differing expectations of technological advance.

Consultation showed wide support for a strong national element in the development and implementation of a European Community scheme, and for arrangements which would involve interested groups on a continuing basis. We consider that these must be features of the organisation of a scheme.

It will clearly be necessary for agreement to be reached at the European level on the product categories to be selected, on the criteria to be used for their assessment, and on the standards to be set. It will be no less important to create national arrangements which ensure that opinion in each member state on these issues is properly represented at Community level. The practical operation of the scheme should also be nationally based through the determination at the national level of applications from companies for their products to be awarded an eco-label on the basis of the categories, criteria and standards agreed on a European basis. The award of a label to a particular product in one member state would be valid across the Community. We remain of the view that an organisation appropriate to these objectives would involve a single panel at the Community level advised by a series of national panels. We shall want to ensure that the organisation involves a minimum of bureaucracy and provides an effective response to the needs of consumers and producers. We re-emphasise our view that the scheme in operation should aim to be self-financing.

The consultation process has enabled us to take a view on the main issues that need to be addressed in getting an eco-labelling scheme under way. A lot more work needs to be done on the detail of a scheme, however. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and I therefore propose to set up a small advisory group, to be composed of individuals with experience and knowledge relevant to the subject, to provide advice on the further development of the scheme. I shall make a further announcement shortly about the membership of the group.

Radioactive Discharges

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps have been taken to apply the best available technology to minimise and eliminate any pollution caused by radioactive discharges from nuclear industries, including reprocessing plants, into the marine environment.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 20 December 1989]: Radioactive waste may be discharged from nuclear installations only if an authorisation has been issued under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 jointly by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Such authorisations are issued only after careful assessment of the environmental impact of the proposed disposals to ensure that doses to the public are below the maximum permissible limits as recommended by the International Committee on Radiological Protection. All authorisations impose a requirement on operators to minimise discharges and to carry out a programme of monitoring including the marine environment where appropriate. All such premises are subject to scrutiny by inspectors to ensure compliance with the terms of the authorisations.

Energy Conservation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list all actions taken by his Department since 1979 to encourage the inclusion of energy conservation policies in structure plans;

(2) whether his Department requires discussion of energy conservation policies to be included in structure plans;

(3) whether his Department requires discussion of energy conservation measures within the explanatory memoranda attached to structure plans.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 8 January 1990]: The memorandum attached to DOE circular 22/84 consolidated earlier advice on plan preparation, and remains the main source of guidance to local planning authorities on the content of structure plans. County planning authorities are required to have regard to current national and regional policies and to set out in the explanatory memorandum the relationship between these and the development and land use policies for the area (para 4.7). The explanatory memorandum accompanying structure plan proposals should include an indication of assumptions made about the resources likely to be available for carrying out the policies amd proposals formulated. It should "have particular regard to the conservation of resources such as land and energy"

(para 4.9).

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) which counties (a) do and (b) do not include explicit discussion of energy conservation in the explanatory memoranda attached to their structure plans;

(2) which counties (a) do and (b) do not include explicit energy conservation policies in their structure plans.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 8 January 1990]: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Downing Street

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if the public right of way through Downing street has been extinguished; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 8 January 1990]: Access to Downing street is controlled under police common law powers which allow them to take reasonable steps to preserve the peace and prevent threats to it.

The present barriers at the Whitehall entrance to Downing street which the demountable gate will replace have been in place since 1982.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what basis the decision was taken to erect railings in Downing street; and who made the recommendation for their erection.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 8 January 1990]: The purpose of the new demountable gateway is to enhance the security of Downing street. It is not the Government's practice to comment on such security measures.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost to public funds of all works associated with the erection of railings at the Whitehall end of Downing street.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 8 January 1990]: It is not the Government's practice to comment on the costing of individual security measures.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which authority gave planning permission for the erection of railings at the Whitehall end of Downing street; what notice was given to interested parties; and whether any objections were received.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 8 January 1990]: Normal procedures under DOE circular 18/84 were followed, including consultation with English Heritage and the Royal Fine Art Commission. Proposals were submitted to Westminster city council in May 1989; amended in September following consultations, and approved by letter dated 4 October.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Firearms (Gwent)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will ascertain whether the Gwent district auditor has carried out an investigation into how many fees for (a) firearm certificates and (b) shotgun certificates have been paid in respect of renewals from 1 January until the latest available date;

(2) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Gwent as to whether his officers issue a receipt for each shotgun or firearm taken into the possession of the police;

(3) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Gwent into the contents and accuracy of his letter, reference HJ/DJD, dated 7 December, regarding the whereabouts of the shotgun mentioned in the letter, which was signed by Helen Jordan, Office Manager, Firearms Administration;

(4) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Gwent as to how many (a) fees have been reimbursed, (b) photographs returned, and (c) applications for renewals of (i) firearm and (ii) shotgun certificates there have been between 1 January and the latest available date;

(5) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Gwent as to whether he has indicated to the holders of (a) firearms certificates and (b) shotgun certificates a minimum period before the expiry of their certificates in which they should apply for (i) the renewal and (ii) the normal period taken to process such a renewal application.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. Responsibility for the administration of firearm control is a matter for the chief officer of police for the area concerned.

Shotgun Certificates (Staffordshire)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the application for a shotgun certificate as issued by the Staffordshire constabulary.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Applications for the grant or renewal of a shotgun certificate may be made only in the form prescribed under the Firearms Rules 1989, a copy of which is in the Library. I understand from the chief constable of Staffordshire that the form issued by his force in addition to that prescribed by the rules has accordingly been withdrawn from use.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to investigate with the British Standards Institute the specifications for a standard for (a) firearms, (b) shotgun and (c) ammunition enclosure for use in domestic premises for the storage of (i) sporting firearms, (ii) sporting shotguns and (iii) ammunition.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that a committee of the British Standards Institution, on which the Home Office crime prevention centre is represented, is currently considering the introduction of a British standard for the safekeeping of firearms and their ammunition, and the safekeeping of shotguns.

SCOTLAND

Energy Management

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the hospitals where an energy management assessment study has been made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Detailed energy assessments have been completed for 140 hospitals and will be completed for all remaining hospitals by the end of 1990.

Health boards are encouraged to undertake surveys of energy management for all hospitals to ensure that energy is used efficiently and boards have been given detailed guidance on energy efficiency practices.

The Public Accounts Committee has set a target of reducing consumption by 1·5 per cent. per annum in the NHS and this is being achieved in Scotland.

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, what studies have been done, for Chapelcross, Dounreay, Hunterston and Torness, on the problems of evacuating all mobility groups in the event of a worst-case atomic accident, giving for each study the geographical area covered.

Mr. Lang: Within the framework of the emergency plans which must be prepared by the operators of civil installations in Scotland and of their own related contingency plans, the police are responsible for evacuation. I understand from the chief constables of the forces concerned that their contingency plans for evacuation of the population in the event of a large-scale emergency take account of the problems of evacuating low-mobility groups.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if ambulance staff have participated in exercises for local emergency plans at each of Chapelcross, Dounreay, Torness and Hunterston; and in each case which units participated.

Mr. Lang: Local ambulance units have participated in exercises to test the emergency plans at Torness and Hunterston. The ambulance service has not yet participated in any such exercises at Dounreay or Chapelcross, although each service is fully aware of its role under the respective emergency plan.

SCOTLAND

Energy Statistics

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, for each health board and the total for the National Health Service in Scotland (a) the total number of licensed vehicles at the latest available date, (b) the total amount spent on energy during the latest year for which figures are available, broken down into (i) petrol supply, (ii) electricity supply, (iii) gas supply and (iv) other and (c) the total amount spent on insulation on the National Health Service estate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 21 December 1989]: Statistics on the number of licensed vehicles and on the amount spent on energy are not held in the form requested.

Figures for the total amount spent on insulation on the National Health Service estate are not available since such costs are included in both new buildings and general renovation.

Health boards have been encouraged by Ministers to pursue energy conservation policies, and savings already achieved include a 6 per cent. reduction in hospitals' energy consumption over the last three years. Energy costs have fallen from £40·9 million in 1985-86 to £30·2 million in 1988-89.

Eye Tests

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the number of eye tests in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 8 January 1990]: Between 1 April and 30 September 1989, 281,570 NHS sight tests have been carried out in Scotland under the general ophthalmic services. No information on the number of private sight tests in Scotland is held centrally.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Residential Care

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown of board and lodging expenditure for residential care accommodation in Blyth Valley in the last financial year.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that information in the form requested is not available.

Single Parents

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state (a) the weekly benefit entitlement when not working of a single parent with two children aged eight and 12 years and (b) the weekly income of a single parent with two children, also aged eight and 12 years, with earnings of £10, £15, £20, £30, £40 and £50.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is set out in the table:

Net income after housing costs at various levels of net earnings

Net earnings (per week)	Net income after housing costs £ per week
(a) Not working	78·00
(b) £10 part-time	88·00
(c) £15 part-time	93·00
(d) £20 part-time	93·00
(e) £30 full-time	93·97
(f) £40 full-time	95·47
(g) £50 full-time	96·74

Notes:

1. The assumptions and methods are those used in the Tax Benefit Model Table, copies of which are available in the Library.
2. At earnings £30, £40 and £50 it is assumed that the person works over 24 hours a week and therefore qualifies for family credit. At these levels of part-time earnings, net income after housing costs would remain constant at £93 as the person would remain on income support.

WALES

Cattle Feed (Contamination)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what co-operation he received from the Dutch in dealing with the lead contamination of cattle feed; and if he will make a statement on the situation in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Dutch authorities acted promptly in alerting the United Kingdom Government on 1 November that contaminated feed had been imported into the United Kingdom. Subsequently there was close liaison between Dutch officials, United Kingdom embassy staff in the Hague and officials in the United Kingdom in an effort to clarify the events leading to the contamination.

In Wales, restriction orders on the movement of milk have been lifted; 159 farms remain under restriction for the movement of livestock.

Schemes have been introduced to allow animals to be released from controls, subject to satisfactory results from blood testing and on condition that the bone and offal from slaughtered animals is not used for human consumption. Since the introduction of the schemes some 8,000 animals have been cleared in Wales.

Our primary aim has been to prevent contaminated products reaching the public. An extensive research programme is under way to monitor the rate of decay of lead in animals and depending on the results it may be possible to reduce some of the controls. Restriction cannot be eased until it is absolutely safe to do so.

Upland Farms

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest assessment of economic conditions for upland farms in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am fully apprised of the economic conditions for upland farms in Wales. The economic conditions in the hills and uplands of Wales were assessed during the annual review of the hill livestock compensatory allowances (HLCAs). An announcement on the HLCA rates for 1990 will be made very shortly.

Paediatric Intensive Care Cots

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of paediatric intensive care cots available in Wales; and the number in each health authority and their locations within each health authority in 1979-80, 1983-84 and 1988-89.

Mr. Grist: Information on paediatric intensive care cots is not available centrally. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him on 18 December 1989, which provides the available statistics on special care baby unit cots.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside of 11 December 1989, Official Report, columns 473-74, on the number of people in employment in Wales, if he will provide comparable figures by Welsh county;

(2) if he will provide, in separate tables, information on the work force in employment, male and female, full-time and part-time, for each quarter since 1980 with actual and percentage changes by quarter and year for Wales, and for each Welsh county.

Mr. Peter Walker: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

PRIME MINISTER

Correspondence

Q45. Sir David Steel: To ask the Prime Minister if she will publish in the Official Report her reply to the open letter from Mr. R. W. Rowland, managing director and chief executive of Lonrho plc, dated 30 November.

The Prime Minister: No reply was sent.

Train Travel

Mr. Robert Adley: To ask the Prime Minister if she has been on a train in her official capacity during the Christmas recess.

The Prime Minister: No.

Eastern Europe

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer of 29 November, Official Report, column 318, what is the nature of the know-how advice to be given to Poland and Hungary; and what information it contains on ways to create free markets.

The Prime Minister: The Polish authorities have themselves already implemented a comprehensive economic programme which aims to move Poland towards free market conditions. We have provided economic advice to the Ministry of Finance. In addition, the know-how fund is directed partly at helping Polish managers adjust to such conditions, by means of seminars and formal and informal training.

Engagements

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 9 January.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 9 January.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 9 January.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 9 January.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 9 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministrial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Footwear

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the level of output in (a) dozen pairs and (b) numbers of full-time employees in the United Kingdom footwear industry at (i) the latest available date, and (ii) in 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The available figures are shown in the table:

United Kingdom footwear industry (SIC 4510)

Unit (i)	Year ended 30 June 1989	(ii) 1979
(a) United Kingdom manufacturers sales[1] Million pairs	119·2	149·3
Unit (i)	At June 1989	(ii) At June 1979
(b) Employees[2] Thousands	46·6	68·8

[1] Source: Business Statistics Office. For 1979 the figures relate to establishments employing 25 or more persons and for the year ended 30 June 1989 to establishments employing 50 or more persons.

[2] Source: Department of Employment. Great Britain only. Part-time employees are included. Figures are based on a small sample and are subject to some estimation error.

Merchant Shipping

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the future of British merchant shipbuilding capacity.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: British merchant shipbuilding capacity will depend on the level of demand and the industry's ability to obtain orders in the face of international competition. The Government provide substantial support to the industry to assist its return to normal competitive conditions.

Royal Mail

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what calculations have been made as to the effect of any plans to break up the exclusive privilege of Royal Mail to deliver items on (a) cost and frequency of delivery to rural households, (b) cost and frequency of delivery to businesses in rural and regional areas outside London and city centres and (c) the number of postal workers employed by the Royal Mail in rural and regional delivery services.

Mr. Forth: We keep the options under review, but have no plans to end the letter monopoly at present. However, we have made it clear that the Post Office's monopoly is a privilege, not a right, and in the event of a cessation or serious disruption of the letter service, we would consider suspending it. I should add, however, that we attach considerable importance to the maintenance of the rural delivery network.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to visit Cardiff and inspect the work of the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Ridley: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Trade has already visited Cardiff. I hope to do so myself shortly.

Electrical Engineering

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will provide an estimate of the increase in the volume of output of the electrical engineering industry since (a) 1973 and (b) 1979 less defence-related production.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is not practicable to exclude defence-related goods from the output data available. The output of the electrical and electronic engineering sector (Class 34 of the Standard Industrial Classification—not stock adjusted), was 32 per cent. higher in the three months to October 1989 than the average for 1973, and 31 per cent. higher than the average for 1979.

Competitiveness

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about the competitiveness of British Industry.

Mr. Redwood: Most of my contacts with industry and commerce involve matters having a bearing on United Kingdom competitiveness.

Hosiery and Knitwear

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the state of the hosiery and knitwear industry in the city of Leicester.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: While I acknowledge the problems being experienced by the hosiery and knitwear industry in Leicester, I believe I made the Government's position clear in the Adjournment debate initiated by my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) on 12 December.

As I stated then the Government are prepared to contribute towards collaborative research and development projects through which the textile industry can improve its efficiency and competitiveness.

I am pleased to announce, therefore, that the Government are to provide £2·8 million over three years for a major project based in Leicester designed to improve automated assembly techniques in the garment sector. The total cost of the project will be £7·3 million. It will involve 22 industrial organisations and four leading academic institutions and will be co-ordinated by Leicester polytechnic.

The work will develop an advanced manufacturing facility to address the problems associated with the integration of manufacturing processes.

A garment design and manufacturing plant located at Leicester polytechnic will be used to demonstrate the techniques developed during the three-year research phase of the project, which will offer obvious benefits for the Leicester knitted garment industry.

Manufacturing Deficit

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he intends to take to improve Britain's manufacturing trade deficit.

Mr. Redwood: The key to our trade performance in manufactures lies in sound macro-economic policy, and the maintenance of open and competitive markets at home and abroad.

FMC

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has received any information concerning proposed investment in the United Kingdom by the FMC company of the United States of America.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Any information received by the Department relating to a company's investment intentions would be commercially confidential and could not be disclosed.

Industrial Waste

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress is being made by his Department's business and the environment unit in encouraging firms to reduce and recycle industrial waste.

Mr. Forth: Since its formation in June last year, the business and the environment unit has made good progress in implementing its programme to encourage firms to reduce and recycle industrial waste. A brochure entitled "Cutting Your Losses" was published in November last year, to coincide with a major CBI/DTI/DOE conference on waste minimisation. A series of regional seminars on waste minimisation is planned for 1990. The unit has also participated in numerous other seminars, conferences and exhibitions to help spread the message that waste reduction and recycling make economic and environmental sense. I am confident that this programme, together with the work of the recycling advisory group, will bring about significant improvement in waste reduction and recycling.

European Single Market

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will list in the Official Report the short title of each of the 88 European Community directives to implement the single market which should be on the statue books of each of the European Community member states: and if he will make a statement;

(2) those European Community directives to implement the single market which have so far been enacted into legislation by (a) Belgium, (b) Netherlands, (c) Luxembourg, (d) West Germany, (e) France, (f) Italy, (g) Denmark, (h) Great Britain, (i) Eire, (j) Greece, (k) Spain and (l) Portugal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The following table lists the state of application of the 86 (not 88) legislative acts for which member states must take national implementing measures by 31 December 1989. These comprise 78 directives, four regulations and four decisions. For completeness a further two directives contained in the Commission's report (Dir 89/366 for which national implementing measures are not compulsory and Dir 85/572 which cannot be implemented until certain decisions are taken in Brussels) are also shown.

This confirms the United Kingdom's excellent record on implementation. I can confidently say that on or very shortly after 31 December we will be up to date with 76 of the 77 for which implementation is possible by the end of the year. On the one exception (Dir 88/288) we are currently seeking advice and clarification from the Commission. Three further directives which should be in force by 31 December (Dirs 85/323, 85/324 and 85/572) cannot be implemented pending decisions being taken in Brussels.

No. 73 The Commission report incorrectly claims that this Directive has not been implemented in the United Kingdom.
12. No. 82. The United Kingdom contests the Commission's view that the administrative measures taken to comply with this Decision are insufficient and that legal means are required. The Commission services are aware of this.
13. No. 83 The Commission have been informed that the United Kingdom cannot implement the Article 10 measures until a decision has been taken in Brussels on the transitional arrangements under the EC Spirits Drinks Regulations. This decision has yet to be taken.

Arthur Andersen

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the Government are pressing ahead with their De Lorean lawsuit against Arthur Andersen.

Mr. Needham: I have been asked to reply.

The Department of Economic Development for Northern Ireland is pursuing its action against Arthur Andersen.

Research

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the level of financial support for collaborative research in (a) Britain and (b) on a European scale in each year since 1979.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 21 December 1989]: It is difficult to define collaborative research which takes many forms and involves a combination of various Government Departments, industry and academic institutions etc. both in the United Kingdom and internationally. Statistics are therefore not maintained in the form requested.

However, an indicative figure for Department of Trade and Industry spend on collaborative research and development projects for each of the years since 1979 is shown in the table.

Financial year	£ million
1979-80	5·63
1980-81	15·32
1981-82	19·22
1982-83	22·00
1983-84	26·44
1984-85	29·70
1985-86	31·49
1986-87	34·36
1987-88	38·95
1988-89	40·72
TOTAL	263·97

Notes:

(i) The above figures include GICP (General Industrial Collaborative Projects), ATP (Advance Technology Programme), EUREKA and LINK plus previous schemes for collaborative Research and Development.

(ii) The above figures exclude ALVEY which will amount to around £100 million.

(iii) The figures from 1979-80 to 1983-84 are only approximate due to the uncertainty of early records.

In addition the United Kingdom currently contributes 18·7 per cent. to the EC framework programmes for research and development most of which is of a collaborative nature. These programmes have the following budgets:

	billion ecu	£ billion
1984 to 1987	3·75	2·7
1987 to 1991	5·4	3·8
1990 to 1994	5·7	4·2

Export Credits

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total capital project cost cover offered under the export credits guarantee system to (a) Saudi Arabia, (b) the Gulf states, (c) Malaysia, (d) China and (e) Brunei in each year since 1983; and what proportion was accounted for by cover for arms exports in each case.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 8 January 1990]: It is ECGD's policy not to disclose details of its exposure on individual countries for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what was the total capital project cost cover offered under the export credits guarantee system in each year since 1983;

(2) what was the total capital project cost cover offered under the export credits guarantee system in respect of arms exports in each year since 1983.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 8 January 1990]: The information is set out in the table.

Values in Millions Sterling

Year	Total capital cost insured	Total arms capital cost insured	Arms as a percentage of total business
1983	2,733·83	616·10	22·54
1984	1,679·16	199·95	11·91
1985	1,616·88	412·18	25·49
1986	1,717·54	423·80	24·67
1987	1,385·30	182·14	13·15
1988	1,863·49	625·30	33·56
1989	748·23	95·37	12·75
Total	11,744·43	2,554·84	21·75

Inland Revenue

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 19 December 1989, whether his Department was represented at any other discussions between the Inland Revenue and taxpayers or their representatives in 1988.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 8 January 1990]: Records are not kept centrally in a form which would permit meetings in 1988 between DTI, Inland Revenue and taxpayers or their representatives to be readily identified.

British Aerospace (Inland Revenue)

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hodge Hill on 19 December 1989, if he will list the advisers to his Department present at the meeting between the Inland Revenue and British Aerospace at his Department in July 1988.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 8 January 1990]: As was not uncommon in meetings between DTI and BAe, on various technical aspects of the sale of Her Majesty's Government's shareholding in Rover Group during the negotiations, representatives of Baring Brothers and Slaughter and May were present to advise the Department on financial and legal matters.

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hodge Hill, whether his Department was represented at any other meetings between the Inland Revenue and British Aerospace in 1988.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 8 January 1990]: Two meetings were held in March 1988 at which the Department of Trade and Industry, British Aerospace and the Inland Revenue were all represented.

Babcock Fata

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 21 December, whether moneys allocated under the support for innovation scheme to Babcock Fata were expended on projects which were undertaken within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 8 January 1990]: The payments made to Babcock Fata Ltd. under the support for innovation scheme were for the support of projects undertaken within the United Kingdom.

Insurance (EC Proposals)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what European Community proposals on insurance have been initiated or revised since the European Court of Justice decisions of December 1986, in particular case 205/87 Commission v. Federal Republic of Germany; and if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on this matter.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 8 January 1990]: The European Court of Justice gave its judgment in four insurance cases, including Case 205/84, the Commission v. Federal Republic of Germany, on 4 December 1986. Since that date, progress on EC insurance directives has been made as follows:

Council Directive 87/343/EEC, on credit and suretyship insurance, adopted on 22 June 1987;

Council Directive 87/344/EEC, on legal expenses insurance, adopted on 22 June 1987;

Second Directive 88/357/EEC, on non-life insurance, adopted on 22 June 1988;

Proposal for a Council directive on the annual accounts and consolidated accounts of insurance undertakings, submitted by the Commission on 21 January 1987, and amended proposal submitted on 30 October 1989;

Proposal for a Council directive on the compulsory winding-up of direct insurance undertakings, submitted by the Commission on 23 January 1987, and amended proposal submitted on 18 September 1989;

Proposal for a second Council directive on life assurance, submitted by the Commission 23 December 1988, and agreement reached in the Council of Ministers on 21 December 1989 (subject to the opinion of the European Parliament).

Proposal for a third Council directive on insurance against civil liability in respect of the use of motor vehicles, submitted by the Commission on 23 December 1988 and amended proposal submitted on 6 December 1989. The Council adopted a common position on the proposal on 15 December 1989.

Proposal for a Council directive on the freedom to provide services in repect of motor vehicle liability insurance, submitted by the Commission on 3 January 1989.

The Government continue to attach a high priority to the achievement of a genuine single market in both life and non-life insurance and welcome the Commission's intention to put forward new proposals for this purpose in the next few months.

Directorships

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the directors appointed by his Department under special share provisions, giving in each case the term of their appointment and the company to which they were appointed.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 18 December 1989]: Following are the details of directors currently appointed or nominated as Government directors under the rights attached to special shares held by my right hon. Friend.

Mr. P. G. Bosonnet was nominated as a Government director on the board of British Telecom on 1 October 1986 for two years and was re-nominated in 1988 for a further two years. Mr. G. J. Mulcahy was nominated as a Government director on the board of British Telecom on 19 October 1988 for two years.

Mr. Keith Brown was appointed to the board of British Aerospace as the Government director on 16 March 1989 for a period of two years.

Tourism

Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will appoint a Parliamentary Commissioner with a permanent remit to investigate the inadequacies, insufficiencies and failures of travel, tourism and leisure both at home and abroad so as to provide a means of examining and redressing grievances.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 21 December 1989]: The Government have no plans to appoint an ombudsman in this area. However, the idea of a tourism ombudsman scheme set up by the industry to resolve disputes between consumers and the travel industry is one which merits serious consideration and which might be a logical extension of the work of the Association of British Travel Agents. If the industry comes up with workable proposals, these would be welcomed by Government.

DEFENCE

Western Europe

12. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies he has commissioned regarding the defence of western Europe with lower troop numbers than at present.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: At the defence planning committee on 28-29 November, NATO agreed a work programme to ensure that the Alliance's defence and arms control objectives remain mutually reinforcing in support of the goal of enhanced security for all Allies at the lowest possible level of forces. The United Kingdom will play a full part in this work.

31. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with North Atlantic Treaty Organisation allies regarding the defence of western Europe with lower troop numbers than at present.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend met his NATO colleagues at the defence planning committee meeting in Brussels on 28-29 November, where a wide range of issues, including progress in the talks on conventional forces in Europe, was discussed.

Trident

14. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning the progress of the Trident programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence will announce a revised estimate of the cost of Trident shortly, and at the same time submit a report on the progress of the programme to the Defence Committee. A copy of the report will be placed in the Library of the House.

24. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has recently received about the Trident programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has received a number of letters from individuals and organisations recently about the Trident programme.

25. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further discussions he has had about the Trident system with members of the United States Administration in the last two months.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has met the United States Defence Secretary on one occasion in the last two months, during which a variety of matters of mutual interest were discussed. He has not met any other members of the United States Administration.

Conventional Forces

15. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on the defence implications of reductions in conventional forces in Europe.

38. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on the defence implications of reductions in conventional forces in Europe.

49. Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on the defence implications of reductions in conventional forces in Europe.

62. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on the defence implications of reductions in conventional forces in Europe.

Mr. Tom King: The Government are committed to seeking an agreement on conventional forces in Europe which will eliminate existing imbalances and establish security and stability at a lower level of forces. At the same time, we shall maintain the commitment to mutual defence entailed by our membership of NATO.

Chemical Weapons

16. Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress of verification of chemical weapon stockpiles.

28. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress of verification of chemical weapon stockpiles.

60. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress of verification of chemical weapon stockpiles.

68. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress of verification of chemical weapon stockpiles.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Useful progress was made last year at the conference on disarmament in Geneva on a number of complex issues including verification during the negotiations for a chemical weapons convention. However, much further work is required before a comprehensive and effectively verifiable chemical weapons convention can be achieved. The United States and Union of Soviet Socialist Republics have recently concluded a bilateral agreement for the exchange of data on chemical weapons, which we hope will throw much-needed light on the size and nature of the Soviet chemical weapons stockpile.

Berlin

20. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there are proposals to alter the United Kingdom's defence involvement in Berlin.

23. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there are any proposals to alter the United Kingdom's defence involvement in Berlin.

87. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there are any proposals to alter the United Kingdom's defence involvement in Berlin.

88. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there are any proposals to alter the United Kingdom's defence involvement in Berlin.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: British forces will continue to fulfil our responsibilities for the protection of Berlin in conjunction with those of other Allies.

Fylingdales

21. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the status of contractorisation of the Fylingdales early warning system.

48. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the status of contractorisation of the Fylingdales early warning system.

84. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the status of contractorisation of the Fylingdales early warning system.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett).

Ambulance Service

26. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost to date of the forces' operation of the ambulance service; and if he will make a statement.

51. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost to date of the forces' operation of the ambulance service; and if he will make a statement.

73. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost to date of the forces' operation of the ambulance service; and if he will make a statement.

89. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost to date of the forces' operation of the ambulance service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Up to 30 November 1989, the latest date for which figures are currently available, extra costs in the region of £0·85 million have been reported for recovery from the Department of Health, the Scottish Home and Health Department and the Welsh Office.

Nuclear Submarines

27. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent consideration he has given to the safe decommissioning of nuclear submarines.

72. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent consideration he has given to the safe decommissioning of nuclear submarines.

75. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent consideration he has given to the safe decommissioning of nuclear submarines.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Dumbarton (Mr. McFall).

Aldermaston

29. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the contractorisation of Aldermaston.

58. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the contractorisation of Aldermaston.

59. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the contractorisation of Aldermaston.

82. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the contractorisation of Aldermaston.

Mr. Neubert: Since the announcement on the future of AWE by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 5 December, approximately 37 representations have been received from hon. Members and members of the public.

Aldermaston (Police Investigations)

30. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the MoD police investigations into malpractice at Aldermaston.

79. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the MoD police investigations into malpractice at Aldermaston.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies).

Frigates

32. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications of the United Kingdom withdrawing from the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation frigate replacement for the nineties project.

55. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications of the United Kingdom withdrawing from the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation frigate replacement for the nineties project.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Pontefract and Castleford (Mr. Lofthouse).

Tain Bombing Range

33. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his proposed noise impact survey in the vicinity of Tain bombing range, with particular reference to the geographic area over which indicative readings will be taken and the proposed time scale of the survey.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The aim of the noise survey is to establish whether any homes in the vicinity of Tain bombing range are subject to noise levels of 70dB(A) or more averaged over a continuous 12-hour period. This is the qualifying level for the payment of insulation grants under the Department's existing noise compensation policy applicable to military airfields.

In advance of the survey, it will be necessary to determine the major approach and departure routes together with the numbers and types of aircraft which use the range. This information will allow the production of a computer-predicted 70dB(A) noise contour which will form the basis of the monitoring exercise.

Measurement sites will be carefully selected, in consultation with the local district council, to check the position of the computer predictions and to ensure that a representative picture of the noise environment is obtained.

It is planned that the noise survey will take place during spring this year but, as evaluation of the noise data is likely to take some time, the results are unlikely to be available before 1991.

Soviet Overflying

34. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will waive any prohibition on defence grounds of Soviet overflying of British military facilities providing the waiver is reciprocal in an open skies agreement.

36. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will waive any prohibition on defence grounds of Soviet overflying of British military facilities providing the waiver is reciprocal in an open skies agreement.

39. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will waive any prohibition on defence grounds of Soviet overflying of British military facilities providing the waiver is reciprocal in an open skies agreement.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will waive any prohibition on defence grounds of Soviet overflying of British military facilities providing the waiver is reciprocal in an open skies agreement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The detailed implementation of an open skies regime has yet to be negotiated. However, our general intention is that limitations to overflight should be made only on grounds of flight safety.

United States Defence Secretary

35. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the United States Secretary for Defence; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Tom King: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Heeley (Mr. Michie).

Volunteer Reserve Forces

37. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in recruiting volunteer reserves into the defence services following the launch of the volunteer reserve forces campaign.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks), and others, on 24 October 1989 at column 435.

Prisoners of War

40. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received during the past six months concerning the claims for compensation by former United Kingdom prisoners of war held by the Japanese at Mukden, because of germ warfare experimentation undertaken on them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: During the period July to December 1989 the only representations to the Secretary of State for Defence about compensation for British prisoners of war held at Mukden have been those made by the hon. Member himself, my right hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point (Sir B. Braine) and the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley).

Nuclear Test Veterans

41. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received about providing compensation for ex-service personnel who took part in the nuclear testing programme.

67. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received about providing compensation for ex-service personnel who took part in the nuclear testing programme.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Knowsley, North (Mr. Howarth).

British Forces (Germany)

42. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there are any proposals to change the level of British armed forces based in Germany.

69. Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there are any proposals to change the level of British armed forces based in Germany.

77. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there are any proposals to change the level of British armed forces based in Germany.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) on 21 December at column 382.

Out-of-Area Commitments

43. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel are engaged in duties related to the United Kingdom's out-of-area commitments.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: On 30 June 1989 some 17,500 service personnel were deployed outside the NATO area including those on exercise and in ships at sea. Numbers may fluctuate considerably according to circumstances.

War Widows (Pensions)

44. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on the level of war widows' pensions since the statement of 11 December 1989.

56. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received further to his recent statement on war widows' pensions.

63. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on the level of war widows' pensions since the statement of 11 December.

64. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on the level of war widows' pensions since the statement of 11 December.

Mr. Tom King: I refer to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Kirkcaldy (Dr. Moonie).

Eastern Europe

45. Mr. Heffer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the effect on the level of United Kingdom's forces of the changing situation in eastern Europe.

80. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the impact of the level of United Kingdom forces of the changing situation in eastern Europe.

81. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment of defence needs he is making in the light of political change in eastern Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Members and my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Broadgreen (Mr. Fields).

Defence Commitments

46. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will initiate an independent review of the United Kingdom's defence commitments.

Mr. Tom King: I have no plans to do so.

US Spending (Europe)

47. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his United States counterpart regarding reductions in United States military spending in Europe.

54. Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his United States counterpart regarding reductions in United States military spending in Europe.

83. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his United States counterpart regarding reductions in United States military spending in Europe.

Mr. Tom King: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Heeley (Mr. Michie).

Terrorists (Equipment Sales)

50. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about sales of military equipment and technology to terrorist organisations.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department from time to time receives inquiries and representations from hon. Members, individual members of the public and organisations about the Government's policy on defence exports, including sales to terrorist organisations. Government policy is under no circumstances to sell military equipment and technology to terrorist organisations.

NATO

52. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the Secretary General of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation; and what matters were discussed.

57. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the Secretary General of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation about the United Kingdom's contribution to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

76. Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the Secretary General of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation about the United Kingdom's contribution to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

85. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the Secretary General of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation about the United Kingdom's contribution to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend met Dr. Woerner at the defence planning committee on 28-29 November when they discussed a range of business, including the annual review of national contributions to NATO. The communiqué issued after that meeting has been placed in the Library of the House.

Dartmoor National Park

53. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he is having with the Duchy of Cornwall regarding the renewal of the licences of 1991 for live firing of ammunition in the Dartmoor national park.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence is in regular contact with officers of the Duchy of Cornwall over the administration of the licence governing the use of Duchy-owned land on Dartmoor for military training and other matters. No formal discussions have yet taken place over the renewal of the current licence, which does not expire until 29 September 1991.

European Fighter Aircraft

61. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received regarding radar equipment for the European fighter aircraft.

66. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received regarding radar equipment for the European fighter aircraft.

71. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received regarding radar equipment for the European fighter aircraft.

86. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received regarding radar equipment for the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend and I have received a number of written and personal representations on the competition for the radar for the European fighter aircraft.

Warsaw Pact

65. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent evidence he has of reductions in capability by the Warsaw pact.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The unilateral force reductions which have been announced by the USSR and some other Warsaw pact countries appear to be taking place. Even when these are fully implemented, however, the Warsaw pact's conventional forces in Europe will substantially outnumber NATO's.

Safety Information

70. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will allow open public access to information on matters of safety in respect of his Department's responsibilities.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not possible to permit open public access to information on matters of safety in the Ministry of Defence because of the practicable impossibility of separating such information from classified information about the Department's activities and weapons systems. The Ministry of Defence is subject to the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, and subordinate legislation, except where specific exemptions are given in the legislation. Even where such exemptions are given it is the Department's policy to observe the same standards of safety which are required of others.

Low Flying

74. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will review the amount of low flying carried out by the Royal Air Force.

78. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will review the amount of low flying carried out by the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Departmental Establishments (North-East)

90. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends to visit his Department's establishments in the north-east of England.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has no current plans to visit Ministry of Defence establishments in the north-east of England.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Local Management Schemes

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list those authorities whose schemes as submitted for his approval for the local management of schools contained insufficient information for determination.

Mrs. Rumbold: All schemes for the local management of schools, as first submitted, contained insufficient information for the purposes of statutory approval. By the end of last year all but seven local education authorities, from whom this additional information had been sought, had provided it.

Environment

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what initiatives his Department has promoted on the raising of environmental consciousness and environmental protection in schools, colleges and universities.

Mrs. Rumbold: In the course of the last 12 months, Her Majesty's inspectors of schools published "Environmental Education: 5-16", a booklet which offers advice to schools on the planning of environmental education, and the Department, in conjunction with the World Wide Fund for Nature and the Laura Ashley Foundation, launched the environmental enterprise award scheme for schools and colleges. The award scheme aims to encourage children and young people to bring their enterprise and practical ingenuity to bear in protecting or enhancing the environment.

Environmental education has also been indentified as an important theme which should run through the whole school curriculum, including the core and other foundation subjects of the national curriculum.

The natural environment research council, which receives grant-in-aid from the science budget, also played its part in raising young people's consciousness of environmental processes, the role of international scientific research, and Britain's contribution to it by circulating to secondary schools the information booklet "Our Future World".

Nuclear Physics and Engineering

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students of nuclear engineering and nuclear physics are currently registered at United Kingdom universities and polytechnics; how many places in these disciplines are presently unfilled; and if he has made any assessment as to whether the present number of students being trained in nuclear physics and engineering will be sufficient for future needs.

Mr. Jackson: Courses in nuclear physics are not separately identified in centrally available statistics. There are two first degree courses in nuclear engineering: one is at Manchester university, on which a total of 28 students were enrolled in 1988-89, the most recent year for which such statistics are currently available; the other, which had its first intake in autumn 1989, is at Queen Mary college, London university. Statistics on unfilled places on individual courses are not centrally available. I know of no evidence to suggest any current or future shortfall in the supply of highly qualified manpower to the nuclear power industry.

Human Frontier Science Programme

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on developments since the 1987 economic summit in Venice on the institution of the human frontier science programme; where it will be administered; what United Kingdom contribution will be made to the first phase of the project; and how the programme will benefit United Kingdom research institutions.

Mr. Jackson: The human frontier science programme (HFSP) for research in molecular biology and neuroscience was inaugurated in November 1989, and is administered from Strasbourg. The secretary general of the new organisation is Sir James Gowans, former secretary of the Medical Research Council. The United Kingdom is represented on the HFSP council of scientists and board of trustees. The United Kingdom is contributing to the first phase through the linking of a number of fellowships and workshops to the programme. Given the quality of United Kingdom science, our research institutions will be hoping to benefit from the award of grants for research, fellowships and workshops. An announcement is expected in March of the first awards under the programme.

Sports (London)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science why his Department has refused an application for funding from the Inner London Federation of School Sports Associations on behalf of its member organisations; and what other grants have been made under the 1990-91 special scheme for the headquarters of Londonwide education voluntary organisations.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The purpose of the Department's special grant aid to Londonwide headquarters bodies is to offer, following the demise of ILEA, some temporary funding to help maintain their programmes of work until arrangements have been developed for funding from the new Inner London councils. While the Department recognises the value of the work undertaken by the individual school sports associations, the modest operating costs of these individual bodies renders them ineligible for consideration under these grant arrangements. Because of the high administrative costs involved in considering small grants, the Department is unable to provide grants of less than £5,000. The role of the Inner London Federation of School Sports Associations (ILFSSA), in co-ordinating the work of these bodies, was not considered to be sufficiently well developed within the programmes of work submitted, to be accepted for grant aid.

The organisations that have received a provisional offer of grant are listed in the table:

Special grants to headquarters of Londonwide voluntary organisations

Name of organisation:
Association of Combined Youth Clubs
Association of Jewish Youth
Boys Brigade
Commonwealth Youth Exchange Council
Duke of Edinburgh's Award Scheme
Diocese of London Lay Ministry
Friends for the Young Deaf
Girl Guides
Handicapped Adventure Playground Association
Inner London Pre-school Playgroup Association
Inner London Youth Matters
Inter-Action
London Adventure Playground Association
London Federation of Boys Clubs
London Union of Youth Clubs
London Voluntary Services Council
Methodist Association of Youth Clubs
National Federation of Gateway Clubs
Parents in Partnership
Physically Handicapped and Able Bodied
Roman Catholic Diocese of Westminster
Scout Association
SENSE-National Deaf/Blind and Rubella Association
Southwark Diocesan Board of Education
United Reformed Church
Volunteer Reading Help
Woodcraft Folk
Young Women's Christian Association

Science Budget

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the distribution of the science budget for 1990-91.

Mr. MacGregor: I have considered the advice of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils and have decided that the £897 million science budget for 1990-91 should, subject to approval by Parliament of the Estimates in due course, be allocated as follows:

	£ million
Agricultural and Food Research Council	86·57
Economic and Social Research Council	36·17
Medical Research Council	185·71
Natural Environment Research Council	136·05
Science and Engineering Research Council	437·12
The Royal Society	13·94
The Fellowship of Engineering	1·19
Science Policy Studies	0·23
Centre for Exploitation of Science and Technology	0·08

At £897 million, the science budget in 1990-91 is £189 million higher than expenditure in 1988-89—an increase of 27 per cent. over two years. Over the last two public expenditure exercises the Government have increased provision by £490 million; and expenditure in real terms in 1990-91 will be more than 28 per cent. higher than in 1979-80. This is further evidence for the scientific community of the importance which the Government attach to civil science in the research councils and the universities.

The increased provision next year should enable the research councils to sustain the momentum created by the substantial increase in science funding in 1989-90. Over £17 million is available towards the construction costs of the royal research ship James Clark Ross, £2·8 million towards the cost of the remote sensing instruments associated with the earth remote sensing-2 satellite and the polar platforms, and £6 million towards the cost of the refitting of the royal research ship Discovery, all of which will make important contributions to the United Kingdom's programme of global environmental research. The natural environment research council is particularly prominent in this field, and the provision made will enable the council significantly to enhance its contribution to the world ocean circulation experiment.

I am also pleased that the settlement will mean that the research councils are able to sustain and strengthen their current initiatives to maintain an adequate supply of highly qualified manpower; and that the AFRC will be able to press ahead with the restructuring of its institutes and to establish a programme on slow virus research with particular relevance to bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

I am publishing the board's advice today. Copies are being placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Firearms Licence

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of a new firearms licence for a shotgun in January 1986 and January 1990.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The fee for the grant of a shotgun certificate in England and Wales was £12 on both dates.

Broadcasting

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many representations he has received, and from whom, since 1987 concerning (a) advertisements on commercial television, (b) independent television news reports, (c) television censorship, (d) private television stations, (e) repeats on BBC television, (f) video nasties and (g) certificates awarded to cinema films; and if he will make a statement on each of the above subjects;

(2) how many representations he has received, and from whom, since 1987 concerning (a) access to broadcasting for deaf people, (b) Ceefax, (c) Oracle, (d) Prestel, (e) the Peacock report and (f) the inclusion of broadcasting responsibilities in an Arts Ministry; and if he will make a statement on each of the above subjects;

(3) how many representations he has received, and from whom, since 1987 concerning (a) Channel 4 television, (b) a proposed fifth channel for television, (c) 24-hour television, (d) schools programmes on television, (e) schools programmes on radio, (f) funding for experimental television projects and (g) American television programmes shown in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement on each of the above subjects;

(4) how many representations he has received, and from whom, since 1987 concerning (a) cable television, (b) satellite television, (c) BBC television, (d) the IBA, (e) BBC radio, (f) independent radio and (g) pirate radio stations; and if he will make a statement on each of the above subjects.

Mr. Mellor: Since 1987 many representations have been received on these and other broadcasting topics. Details could be given only at disproportionate cost. The broadcasting White Paper and more recently the Broadcasting Bill set out the Government's policies on broadcasting issues.

Salisbury Guildhall (Coat of Arms)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Wiltshire about the disappearance of the royal coat of arms from the magistrates court in Salisbury Guildhall.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the chief constable of Wiltshire that the disappearance of the royal coat of arms has not been reported to police as a loss or theft. It is the property of Salisbury district council and was removed when the Crown court moved from Salisbury Guildhall. It will be replaced by a new royal coat of arms.

Dementia

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about his policy towards prisoners suffering from dementia.

Mr. Mellor: This is a medical matter. The director of prison medical services has not thought it appropriate to issue guidance on the subject to prison medical officers, all of whom are registered medical practitioners and are able to take specialist advice on the management of individual cases.

Radio Frequencies

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the progress being made by the Metropolitan police in transferring their radio frequencies from the VHF commercial broadcasting frequencies to new transmision frequencies; and if he will list for each police force the date by which they propose to complete their transfer to non-commercial frequencies.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Metropolitan police completed the transfer in December 1989. All other police forces in England and Wales completed their transfer by the end of July 1989, some five months before the deadline of 31 December 1989 agreed at the world administrative radio conference in 1979.

Single European Market

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many non-British subjects will have the right to work and to set up business in the United Kingdom after 1992 as a result of the realisation of the single European market; and how many of these will come from overseas territorities and associated territories of other member states.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: European Community law already confers upon nationals of most other member states the right to work or to set up in business in the United Kingdom. By virtue of the transitional provisions in the treaty of accession of Spain and Portugal to the European Communities, nationals of those countries will not enjoy the same rights in Community law to take employment in this country until 1 January 1993. Except for this incidental change the rights of nationals of European Community states to work or to establish themselves in business in another member state will not be affected when the internal market is completed after 1992. Nor will the establishment of the single European market itself affect controls on the entry to this country of non-EC nationals who wish to work or set up business here.

It is, of course, possible that improved opportunities for business between Community states after 1992 will increase the mobility of workers in the Community. Although the numbers involved cannot be estimated, in respect of movement either from the member states or from the few overseas and associated territories to which the free movement provisions of the EC treaty apply, increased migration from and to other member states is likely to occur primarily among skilled and professional workers.

May Inquiry (Assessors)

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has appointed lay assessors to Sir John May's inquiry into the Guildford and Woolwich and Maguire cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General and I have, at the request of Sir John May, appointed three assessors to assist the work of his inquiry. They are Sir Richard Barratt, currently HM chief inspector of constabulary, Mr. Alastair Graham, the director of the Industrial Society and Professor J. C. Smith, professor in legal science at Cambridge university.

DNA Tests

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the arrangements are for conducting DNA tests in criminal and civil cases which come before the courts; and what progress is being made in DNA testing techniques.

Mr. John Patten: ICI holds the worldwide rights to the DNA profiling technique using "multi locus" probes developed by Professor Jeffreys at Leicester university.

So far as DNA testing in criminal cases is concerned, Cellmark Diagnostics (a subsidiary of ICI) is contracted by the Home Office to deal with criminal paternity cases and cases involving the mass screening of large numbers of individuals. The Home Office forensic science service and the Metropolitan police forensic science laboratory deal with all other criminal cases in England and Wales. A contract for the provision of DNA profiling services on this basis, and for the purchase of materials from ICI for use by the forensic science service, was agreed with ICI in 1988 and has been renewed for a further year. DNA technology is continually developing and more sensitive techniques are now being implemented within the Home Office forensic science service and the Metropolitan police laboratory.

Arrangements for carrying out civil paternity tests directed by a magistrates court are governed by regulations made under the Family Law Reform Act 1969. There is a panel of approved testers, which includes employees of Cellmark Diagnostics, any of whom can carry out tests.

Electronic Monitoring

Mr. Knowles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the circumstances with regard to the ending of the trial of electronic monitoring in Nottingham; and if there are plans for the introduction of monitoring on a trial basis in other areas.

Mr. John Patten: The Nottingham electronic monitoring trial contract was let to run from 14 August 1989 to 29 January 1990. The trial will be ending, as originally planned, on that date. Existing participants will continue to be monitored after that date. The results of the trial will be carefully evaluated, but it is already clear that the technology can be put to practical use and that the procedures for fitting the equipment and monitoring defendants are practicable. It would now be desirable to test the use of electronic monitoring on a trial basis in a larger area in which substantial numbers are likely to be eligible for its application as a condition of bail. Meanwhile other trials which started on two different later dates in the north Tyneside and Tower Bridge areas are proceeding as planned.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the average rate support grant allocated to local authorities in (a) 1979 and (b) 1989.

Mr. Chope: In 1979-80 there were 405 local authorities in England eligible for rate support grant. The total amount of rate support grant paid was £4,624,902,834.

In 1988-89 there were 425 local authorities in England eligible for rate support grant. The total amount of rate support grant paid was £9,076,759,236.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he is giving to community chargepayers who receive communications from local authorities under the heading "Poll Tax"; and what action he intends to take.

Mr. Chope: The Department continues to explain that "poll tax" is a misleading and erroneous term for the community charge and is encouraged by research which suggests that very few people are deceived. Whenever necessary, local authorities are reminded of the need for communications to be accurate and that certain formal notices to community chargepayers could be invalid if they do not conform to the requirements of regulations made under the 1988 and 1989 Acts.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the per capita levels of expenditure that he assesses for (a) Northampton district and (b) Northamptonshire county council for 1990-91; and what is the impact on the community chargepayer for each £1 per capita that either authority spends in excess of this level.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment proposed on 6 November 1989 standard spending assessments of £103 per adult and £688 per adult for Northampton district and Northamptonshire county council respectively. Each £1 per adult spent by either authority in excess of these figures would result in a £1 increase in the community charge.

Palace of Westminster

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy in the absence of Crown liability to ensure immediate replacement of faulty light bulbs in the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Chope: As I advised the hon. Member on 7 December, column 323, the established practice is to ensure that light bulbs are in working order.

Disabled People (Housing)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amount of money has been spent for each of the past five years for adaptations to council houses for disabled people.

Mr. Chope: The cost of work to make local authority dwellings suitable for disabled persons which was completed in 1986, 1987, 1988 and the first half of 1989 appears in table 2.20(a) of "Housing and Construction Statistics Part 2" No. 38. Figures for earlier years appear in table 7.5(a) of "Housing and Construction Statistics 1978-1988". Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Housing Development

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ensure that the description set out in new release 515 and his accompanying statement will be included in the final planning policy guidance note on housing development and the special presumption when it is released to the planning inspectorate and local authorities.

Mr. Moynihan: As my hon. Friend will know, the consultation period on the draft planning policy guidance note on housing has just concluded. We shall bear his comments in mind as we consider the precise wording of the final version of the guidance note.

EC Grants

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a list of the organisations within his area of responsibility which receive grants from the EEC.

Mr. Moynihan: Within the Department of the Environment's area of responsibility, EEC grants are made in the form of assistance from the European regional development fund for certain infrastructure schemes. In accordance with criteria laid down or established by the European Commission, assistance is available for schemes wholly or substantially financed by public authorities, or by other organisations responsible in a similar way, for the carrying out of infrastructure works. A list of such organisations is not available, but they include local authorities, transport undertakings and certain charitable organisations.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many official properties are currently the responsibility of the Property Services Agency; and how many are vacant.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 8 January 1990]: The Property Services Agency currently has responsibility for 8,653 official properties, of which 161 are vacant.

Microwave Ovens (Palace of Westminster)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to ensure that each of the microwave ovens in the Palace of Westminster is suitable for any uses to which it may be put.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 18 December 1989]: The microwave ovens are purchased after discussions with the users about their needs. Copies of the manufacturers' instructions are supplied, but the onus for ensuring that ovens are used correctly must rest with the local management. The Parliamentary Works Office does however arrange for the ovens to be tested regularly by a specialist contractor.

Community Charge Booklet

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date the decision was taken to reprint in a new edition the community charge booklet on second homes; when stocks are now expected; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 21 December 1989]: All our community charge leaflets are revised as necessary to take account of policy developments. In the case of the leaflet dealing with the community charge and second homes, there were a number of such developments during the last Session which had to be reflected in the leaflet in order to keep it up to date. The revised leaflet will be available later this month.

TRANSPORT

M1/A1 Link Road

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what are the reasons for the current delay in the construction of the western section of the M1/A1 link road;

(2) what is the daily traffic flow on the A427 between Market Harborough and Lutterworth at the latest available date; and what is the projected flow (a) in five years' time, and (b) in 10 years' time, in the absence of an M1/A1 link;

(3) when he now expects to commence construction of the M1/A1 link road between Kettering and Lutterworth.

Mr. Atkins: The western section of the link road from Catthorpe to Kettering is divided into four contracts. Those for the Catthorpe interchange and the Rothwell-Kettering section are to be let shortly. Further progress on the two intermediate contracts is subject to the outcome of a public inquiry in February into objections to draft supplementary orders.

Approximate traffic flows on the A427 without the M1-A1 link road would be as follows:

Vehicles per day

Present	1995	2000
9,000-10,000	10,000-12,000	11,000-14,000

A5

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the accident record for the A5 within one mile of its proximity with the village of Newton, near Rugby.

Mr. Atkins: Accidents in recent years on this length of trunk road involving personal injury and reported to the police have been as follows:

	Fatal	Serious	Slight
1986	Nil	1	1
1987	Nil	Nil	2
1988	Nil	1	Nil
[1]1989	Nil	1	2

[1] to end of November

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans exist for improvements to the A5 where it passes close to the village of Newton, near Rugby.

Mr. Atkins: Changes to white lining and signing are to be carried out shortly at the junction of the A5 with the B5414. This will provide a right-turning lane for southbound vehicles turning towards Newton and Clifton-on-Dunsmore.

The section of A5 trunk road near Newton is included in a scheme identification study in the 1989 White Paper "Roads for Prosperity". Consultants are to be appointed shortly and work will commence this spring. The study report is expected in spring 1991. Any schemes identified by this study will be considered for addition to the trunk road programme but the time scale for construction will depend on priority and statutory procedures.

Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received the annual report of the disabled persons transport advisory committee.

Mr. Atkins: The committee's third annual report was submitted to me in November. Copies have already been placed in the Libraries.

NATIONAL FINANCE

European Monetary System

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received concerning British participation in the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations on this subject.

Free Postage

Mr. Stern: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will reinstitute free postage between taxpayers and the Inland Revenue.

Mr. Lilley: It was decided in January 1988 that—from April 1988—the provision of reply-paid envelopes by the Inland Revenue should be confined to demands for payment of tax and to a few other special instances. Treasury Ministers approved this change because it helps the Inland Revenue to keep its administrative costs as low as possible consistent with effectiveness and efficiency. The overall saving in Revenue running costs from the change was £2 million in 1988-89 and a change in the existing arrangements would not be justified.

Home Income Plans

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of elderly home owners who have taken out home income plans and similar mortgage options.

Mr. Lilley: About 4,000 elderly people took out home annuity loans qualifying for tax relief in 1988-89.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to extend tax relief on the interest payable on home income plans and similar schemes.

Mr. Lilley: Tax relief is already available for interest paid by people aged 65 or more on loans up to the £30,000 limit which are secured on their homes and used to buy a life annuity.

Tax Revenue

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will ensure the Inland Revenue publishes in its annual report on tax information summary details of High Court cases in which the Inland Revenue has sought to recover £1 million or more of tax revenue.

Mr. Lilley: Details of High Court cases in which the Inland Revenue is involved are already available to the general public.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the results of those High Court cases in the last two years in which the Inland Revenue has sought to recover £5 million or more of tax revenue.

Mr. Lilley: The Inland Revenue does not keep statistics of the tax involved in High Court cases. The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

European Tax Legislation

Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the coverage of the proposed tax legislation on European economic interest groupings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The Government have received a number of representations on the taxation of European economic interest groupings. The Inland Revenue has discussed these with interested parties. Further to these discussions, the Inland Revenue is today issuing, with my agreement, a press release and a consultative document including a draft clause and schedule.

Comments on the consultative document and draft legislation should be received by 28 February 1990. We shall carefully consider all comments and representations which are made before introducing the necessary legislative provisions in the 1990 Finance Bill. I have placed copies of the document including the draft clause and schedule in the Library.

British Aerospace (Inland Revenue Discussions)

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Inland Revenue attended any discussions with British Aerospace or other taxpayers at the Department of Trade and Industry in 1988 additional to those referred to in his reply of 19 December 1989 to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hodge Hill.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 8 January 1990]: In addition to the discussions referred to in my reply of 19 December 1989 to the hon. Gentleman, Inland Revenue officials attended one discussion with British Aerospace at the Department of Trade and Industry in March 1988. There was also a further discussion that month at the Inland Revenue. Records are not kept centrally in a form which would permit discussions involving the Department of Trade and Industry, the Inland Revenue and other taxpayers to be readily identified.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Sri Lanka

88. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has held with his Sri Lankan counterpart regarding the teaching of English in Sri Lanka.

Mrs. Chalker: Britain provides substantial assistance in English language teaching to Sri Lanka. Discussions on the programme and its possible development are held regularly by representatives of our two Governments.

Angola

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid is currently provided by the United Kingdom to (a) the MPLA and (b) UNITA in Angola.

Mrs. Chalker: We provide no aid for either the MPLA or UNITA. Our bilateral aid programme with the Government of Angola focuses mainly on English language training.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Northern Ireland Court Service

Mr. Lee: To ask the Attorney-General whether any changes have been made to the class XI vote 8 cash limit and running costs limit for the Northern Ireland court service.

The Attorney-General: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for class XI vote 8 will be increased by £1,640,000 from £14,746,000 to £16,386,000. The increase arises because of additional costs incurred in respect of judicial removals and bomb damage to a number of court buildings. The running costs limit for the Northern Ireland court service will as a result be increased by £120,000 from £11,721,000 to £11,841,000.

WALES

Straw Burning

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received since the announcement on banning straw burning in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: None.

Algal Blooms

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce), 19 December 1989, Official Report, column 124, what is the cause of toxic forms of algal blooms in Wales; what action he is taking; how he proposes to reduce their occurrence; and if he will make a statement;

(2) pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Gordon, 19 December 1989, Official Report, column 124, if he will list, by Welsh county, the locations of toxic forms of algal blooms in Wales, identified during 1989.

Mr. Grist: This is a matter for the National Rivers Authority. However, the authority has advised me that it is not aware of any toxic forms of algal blooms having occurred in Wales during 1989.

DEFENCE

Al-Yamamah Defence Contracts

90. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions have taken place with Saudi officials about the financing of the Al-Yamamah defence contracts.

Mr. Alan Clark: My officials are in constant touch with representatives of the Saudi Arabian Government during which a range of Project Al Yamamah issues, including finance, are reviewed and discussed.

Conventional Forces in Europe

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the Secretary General of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation to discuss progress at the talks on conventional forces in Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend last met the Secretary General of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation at the meeting of the defence planning committee on 28-29 November 1989, when a wide range of defence matters, including progress at the talks on conventional forces in Europe, were discussed.

Armed Forces (Germany)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the total overseas exchange costs of all British forces in Germany and the net cost after offsetting expenditure in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The estimated foreign exchange cost of British forces in Germany in 1989-90 is £1,331 million. While no direct offset payments have been made by the Federal Republic of Germany since 1980, property and certain public services continue to be provided free of charge along with some tax and duty concessions.

Lasers

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many non-targeting laser devices are currently fitted to Royal Navy vessels;

(2) what is the maximum amount of power that could be used by non-targeting laser devices currently fitted to Royal Navy vessels.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to disclose information of this nature.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what circumstances non-targeting laser devices fitted to Royal Navy vessels would be used.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As a non-lethal means of self-defence by HM ships.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what heading in the Supply Estimates the expenditure on the non-targeting laser devices currently fitted to Royal Navy vessels was included.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Vote 2 sub head F (Sea Systems).

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of procuring the non-targeting laser devices currently fitted to Royal Navy vessels.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The cost of procurement is commercially confidential.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of the project definition phase of the procurement programme for the non-targeting laser devices currently fitted to Royal Navy vessels.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There was no project definition phase.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any of the non-targeting laser devices currently fitted to Royal Navy vessels have ever been used operationally.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which company supplied the non-targeting laser devices currently fitted to Royal Navy vessels.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Irwin Desman Limited.

Risks at Sea

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Her Majesty's Government were, prior to the signature of the agreement signed between the United States and Soviet Governments on the reduction of risks at sea in 1989, consulted by either of the two Governments concerned.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United States Government kept their NATO allies fully informed on progress towards their conclusion of an agreement with the Soviet Union last year on the prevention of dangerous military activities.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Auditing Practices Committee

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how the membership of the Auditing Practices Committee is determined.

Mr. Redwood: As I explained in the replies I gave on 27 November at columns 92-93, 18 December, at columns 22-23, and 21 December, at columns 392-93, to questions by the hon. Member, membership of the Auditing Practices Committee is a matter for the Consultative Committee of Accountancy Bodies.

Information Technology

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the United Kingdom's current balance of trade in information technology.

Mr. Redwood: According to provisional figures published by the Central Statistical Office the United Kingdom had a crude trade deficit (i) in electronics and information technology manufactured goods (ii) of £3 billion for the year to June 1989.

Notes:

(i) Exports (fob) less imports (cif).

(ii) Principal products of activity headings 3301, 3302, 3441, 3442, 3443, 3444, 3453 and 3454 of the Standard Industrial Classification (revised 1980).

West Germany (Manufactured Goods)

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current balance of trade in manufactured goods with West Germany.

Mr. Redwood: In the first 11 months of 1989 imports of manufactures from the Federal Republic of Germany exceeded United Kingdom exports to that country by £9 billion.

Alvey Programme

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had regarding a successor to the Alvey programme.

Mr. Forth: Support for a successor to the Alvey programme was announced in the January 1988 White Paper "DTI—The Department for Enterprise" (Cm. 278). The information engineering advanced technology programme was launched in mid-1988, and is continuing.

Association of Consulting Engineers

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Association of Consulting Engineers to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Redwood: The application was considered by my noble Friend the Minister for Trade and approved by him on 21 November 1989.

Eastern Europe

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what advice the Government are giving to British businesses contemplating joint ventures in eastern Europe.

Mr. Redwood: The Government are well seized of the new trading opportunities opening up in eastern Europe. To assist United Kingdom industry in making commercial decisions about participation in joint venture projects in eastern Europe, the Department of Trade and Industry has produced a comprehensive guide which contains advice on the merits and difficulties of establishing joint ventures in that area.

Copies of the guide are free available from the DTI and it gives details of contact points with whom United Kingdom companies can discuss further the opportunities for joint venture projects. I am arranging for copies of the guide to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses today. In addition, officials are very willing to advise companies on specific proposals if requested.

Golden Shares

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the names, dates of appointment, remuneration and other directorships of all directors appointed by him or his predecessors under special or golden share provisions.

Mr. Redwood: Government directors appointed to the board of British Aerospace under the special share provisions, together with the dates of their appointment, have been Mr. K. M. Bevins CBE TD (1 May 1985); Mr. C. B. Gough (19 October 1987); and Mr. K. C. Brown (16 March 1989).

Government directors appointed or nominated to the board of British Telecom under the special share provisions, together with the dates of their appointment or nomination, have been Mr. G. D. W. Odgers (20 September 1984); Mr. J. M. Raisman (20 September 1984); Mr. P. G. Bosonnet (1 October 1986, and re-nominated on 1 October 1988); Mr. G. J. Mulcahy (19 October 1988).

Remuneration is a matter for the individual companies. Both companies' articles of association state that each director (including Government directors) shall receive a level of remuneration as decided by the company board subject to a maximum level agreed by shareholders.

Details of other directorships as specified in section 289 of the Companies Act 1985 are held in the register of directors maintained by each company in accordance with section 288 of the Act. Details are also publicly available from the Registrar of Companies.

Voting Rights

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times in the last five years he has used his powers to disenfranchise voting rights in the shares of United Kingdom companies; and in how many of those cases the shares have been identified as being held by beneficial or nominee owners based in (a) Jersey, (b) Guernsey, (c) the Isle of Man, (d) the Netherlands Antilles, (e) the Cayman Islands and (f) Liechtenstein.

Mr. Redwood: Seven orders imposing restrictions (since removed) on shares, including the prohibition of the exercise of voting rights, have been made during the period, all in relation to the current section 442 Companies Act 1985 investigation into Consolidated Gold Fields plc. In one case the restrictions were imposed on shares registered in the name of a United Kingdom company and held by it to the order of a Cayman Islands company. The investigation is continuing and it would be inappropriate for me to comment further.

Tax Avoidance

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will ask the Director General of Fair Trading to investigate the extent to which competition is distorted by certain United Kingdom companies being involved in transactions, the purpose of which is solely or mainly to avoid or evade taxation, with companies' trusts and individuals based in (a) the Cayman Islands, (b) the Netherlands Antilles, (c) Guernsey, (d) Jersey, (e) the Isle of Man and (f) Liechtenstein.

Mr. Redwood: I will consider any evidence of the distortion of competition which the hon. Member may wish to put to me. Taxation issues are however a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, rather than for me.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will assess the case for keeping records of United Kingdom companies owned or controlled by Netherlands Antilles or Cayman Island companies in order to assist in preventing tax avoidance and evasion.

Mr. Redwood: All companies registered in Great Britain, whatever their ownership, are required to file records at Companies House. These include lists of shareholders and, for subsidiary companies, identification of the ultimate holding company.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those company investigations in the last 10 years carried out by his Department where the conclusions have alleged wrong doing or fraud or illegality and the reports refer to business transactions involving companies, trusts or individuals based in (a) the Cayman Islands, (b) the Netherlands Antilles, (c) Guernsey, (d) Jersey, (e) the Isle of Man and (f) Liechtenstein.

Mr. Redwood: The following published inspectors' reports contain references to business transactions involving companies, trusts or individuals based in the countries listed in the table:

Company
Saint Piran Ltd	Cayman Islands; Netherlands Antilles
Minet Holdings plc/WMD Underwriting agencies Ltd [interim "Unimar" report]	Netherlands Antilles
Westminster Property Group plc	Isle of Man
Equity & General plc (formerly Emray plc)	Jersey
Milbury plc/Westminster Property Group Ltd	Netherlands Antilles
Summer International plc (formerly Sumrie Clothes plc)	Isle of Man; Jersey

For further information, I would refer my hon. Friend to the reports, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will initiate an inquiry into the extent of business transactions between United Kingdom companies and companies, trusts and individuals based in (a) the Cayman Islands, (b) the Netherlands Antilles, (c) Guernsey, (d) Jersey, (e) the Isle of Man and (f) Liechtenstein in order to determine the purposes of those transactions and the degree to which those transactions are in the public interest;

(2) what proposals he has to prevent frauds or breaches of company law involving United Kingdom companies as a result of their directors, shareholders or other interested parties (a) creating transactions between those companies or (b) controlling some or all of their share capital through companies, trusts or individuals based in (i) the Cayman Islands, (ii) the Netherlands Antilles, (iii) Guernsey, (iv) Jersey, (v) the Isle of Man and (vi) Liechtenstein.

Mr. Redwood: There are no plans for special treatment of companies owned by, or trading with, such companies, trusts or individuals. There is a system of enforcement already in place to deal with frauds and breaches of company law. The Companies Act requires notification, in the annual accounts, of any ultimate holding company and its location, and for large companies, a breakdown of turnover by geographical area, where material. This information is available from Companies House, on a company-by-company basis.

Dixons (Takeover)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will refer the proposed takeover of Dixons stores group plc by Kingfisher plc, to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 9 January 1990]: The proposed acquisition by Kingfisher plc of Dixons is currently being considered by the Director General of Fair Trading who has a duty to advise the Secretary of State on whether or not it should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. It would not be appropriate for me to comment on the proposed acquisition in anticipation of the director general's advice.

Paleontological Exports

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what distinctions his Department makes between paleontological discoveries and coal, in relation to export licences;

(2) what statement was made by his Department on 22 December 1989 in relation to the legal position regarding paleontological exports.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 8 January 1990]: My Department is guided by the provisions of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1987, (S.I. 1987 No. 2070) as they apply to exports of antiques, collectors' items and so on. My Department stated on 21 December that it had concluded that group B of the order should not be interpreted as bringing within export control fossils which are not the remains of man-made objects. Such fossils therefore do not require a licence under the order for export to any destination.

Tariffs

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made since 1979 in reducing the overall level of tariffs affecting imports into and exports from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Redwood: United Kingdom imports are subject to the common customs tariff of the European Communities, whose rates have been reduced by approximately 34 per cent. overall since 1979, mainly as a result of the Tokyo round of GATT negotiations. A similar reduction has taken place in the tariffs of the United Kingdom's major trading partners. Comparable figures for other markets are not available.

The tariff negotiations in the GATT Uruguay round, which is scheduled to end in December 1990, aim to achieve reductions at least as great as the 34 per cent. resulting from the Tokyo round, and in particular to reduce high tariffs. These reductions would be phased in over a period to be agreed.

Consumer Protection

Mrs Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has plans to strengthen legislation on consumer protection.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 8 January 1990]: We intend to improve the protection given to consumers in a number of ways including the introduction of an order under the Prices Act 1974, as amended, on price indications and unit pricing, and changes to other legislation affecting consumers' interests.

Poland

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the Government have had any direct contact with the Polish Privatisation Minister; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have been asked to reply.

We are actively using the know-how fund to support privatisation in Poland. We organised a seminar on privatisation in Warsaw last year. A major consultancy report commissioned by the know-how fund, has recommended a number of future projects and programmes, including privatisation, within the Polish financial sector. These activities involve regular contact with the Plenipotentiary for Ownership Change and his office within the Polish Ministry of Finance.

Soviet Union

89. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what provision is made towards assisting British firms to exploit commercial opportunities in the Soviet Union.

Mr. Redwood: The DTI in conjunction with the Foreign Office, offers a wide range of services to help United Kingdom exporters sell more overseas, including the Soviet Union. Through the export service initiative, we provide practical assistance, advice and support for exporters at each stage of the exporting process. Approximately 150 trade inquiries about the Soviet Union are received by the DTI each week.

The Government also support 14 joint British/Soviet working groups covering several different industrial sectors, including agriculture, energy, healthcare and chemicals. They provide a framework in which United Kingdom companies can meet their Soviet counterparts and develop mutually beneficial opportunities. Companies are also represented on ministerial visits in each direction and at intergovernmental meetings such as the annual joint commission on trade and economic co-operation.

Net Book Agreement

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to reconsider the acceptability of the net book agreement.

Mr. Redwood: I have no such plans. Under the relevant existing legislation, the review of arrangements such as the net book agreement is a matter for the restrictive practices court, on application by the Director General of Fair Trading.

After looking at the case for making an application, the director general concluded in August 1989 that the basis for doing so was insufficiently strong. Although there had been many changes in book publishing and retailing since the court originally upheld the agreement in 1962, he felt that they were unlikely to be of such magnitude as to lead the court to reverse its previous finding that the agreement does not operate against the public interest.

The director general also had in mind the proposals in the Government's White Paper "Opening Markets: New Policy on Restrictive Trade Practices" published in July 1989, under which agreements such as the NBA previously upheld by the court would be automatically reviewed against a new exemption test modelled on article 85(3) of the EEC treaty.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fisheries Council

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which Ministers represented the United Kingdom at the European Economic Community Fisheries Council meeting in Brussels on 18 and 19 December; and which Minister represented the interests of the fishing industry in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Curry: Together with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, my noble Friend the Minister of State, Scottish Office and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food I represented the United Kingdom at the Council of Fisheries Ministers on 18 and 19 December. The interests of all parts of the United Kingdom were equally defended.

Food Safety

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations he has had with consumer organisations about food safety; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My Ministry continues to consult a wide range of organisations, including those representing consumers, on food safety matters.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement on the operation of the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Curry: The United Kingdom Government have for many years insisted on the need to take action to reform the common agricultural policy (CAP), and I am glad to say that considerable progress has been made.

Of particular importance were the measures agreed at the February 1988 European Council, introducing a legally binding limit on agricultural expenditure and stabiliser mechanisms for the main commodities. The Government's policy is to build on these reforms which are creating a more rational and sustainable CAP, and to pursue agricultural policy reforms internationally through the GATT.

National Fruit Collection

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has taken as a result of the hon. Member for Linlithgow's communication with the Minister of State, the noble Baroness Trumpington, of 3 January, about the evidence of Dr. John Ingram, former director of national fruit trials, concerning the proposed move of the national fruit collection from Brogdale to Wye college in relation to trees allergic to frost-holes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The potential for frost damage raised by the hon. Member with my noble Friend during their telephone conversation, was fully considered, together with a number of other important issues, when the decision was taken to move the national fruit collection to Wye college. In general the soils on the site at Wye are well suited for fruit growing. Radiation frost should not be a problem although there is some risk from wind frost to the fruiting potential of trees in an exceptionally severe year because of the site's elevation and exposure. The site is not at the bottom of a frost bowl. However, the risk from wind frost at Wye is less than at the present site at Brogdale and could, if necessary, be ameliorated by the planting of shelter screens as has been done at Brogdale. This will be one of the factors taken into account as the detailed arrangements for the transfer are made. The risk of exposure to frost is, of course, of less significance for the collection than it would be for a commercial orchard, given that the collection's main purpose is as a scientific, genetic and educational resource.

Pesticides

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many applications for the approval of new active ingredients for pesticides he has (a) received and (b) approved for each year since 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 21 December 1989]: The information requested is set out as follows. It relates to the applications submitted to my Ministry, although approval is required jointly by six Departments. Applications for which the Health and Safety Executive is primarily responsible have not been included.

	1987	1988	1989
(a) Received	23	12	15
(b) Approved (Fully/provisionally)	11	2	3
(c) Only approved for experimental use	—	3	2
(d) Rejected/withdrawn	1	—	1

Pwllpeirian Experimental Husbandry Farm

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of Pwllpeirian experimental husbandry farm Cwmystwyth.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ashford (Mr. Speed) on 14 December 1989 at columns 800-02.

SCOTLAND

Japan (Visit)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what subjects he discussed with the Japanese during his visit in the summer recess.

Mr. Rifkind: The bulk of the discussions held during my visit to Japan were the existing and potential inward investors. Meetings were also held with senior Government Ministers, to discuss trade links and other matters of mutual interest, including Scotch whisky exports.

Scottish National Health Service

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the value of the allocation to Scottish National Health Service services for 1982-83 to 1990-91 both at current and standard prices; and if he will indicate the value of the allocation in standard prices on a per capita basis.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is set out in the following table:

Total National Health Service Expenditure in Scotland

	Outturn £ million cash	[1] Adjustment	[2] Expenditure
1982-83	1,660	2,401	465
1983-84	1,773	2,450	476
1984-85	1,901	2,502	486
1985-86	2,015	2,518	490
1986-87	2,144	2,591	506
1987-88	2,328	2,672	523
1988-89	2,591	2,772	544
[3]1989-90	2,821	2,821	553
[4]1990-91	3,041	2,896	568

[1] Adjusted by the GDP deflator to 1989-90 prices.
[2] Expenditure per head of population adjusted by the GDP deflator to 1989-90 prices.
[3] Projected outturn.
[4] Provisional allocation.

Hospital Cleaning and Catering

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to the reply of 20 December 1989 to the hon. Member for Eastwood about standards of cleaning and catering in hospitals in Scotland, Official Report, column 289, he will place a copy of the report referred to in the Library.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Yes.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Eastern Europe

2. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the present situation in eastern Europe.

Mr. Hurd: The whole House will welcome the momentous changes in eastern Europe which give promise of democracy and longer-term prosperity throughout the region. We hope in 1990 to see these gains consolidated. We shall do all we can to support these countries in accordance with their individual needs and stages of development.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the respective powers of (a) democratically controlled Ministers and (b) Community bureaucrats with regard to the initiation of European Community policy with regard to eastern European issues; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Under the EC treaties it is the Commission which has the responsibility to put forward proposals for Community action. Formulation of policy in European political co-operation is co-ordinated by the presidency. In both areas decisions are taken by Ministers. We have taken a prominent part within the Community in ensuring that the EC has responded generously and quickly to reforming countries in eastern Europe.

80. Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance his Department is giving in the process of exchanges with parliamentarians from eastern Europe.

Mr. Waldegrave: We welcome the increased scope which now exists for useful contacts between Members of this House and eastern European parliamentarians. We have assisted the Great Britain-East Europe Centre in setting up successful seminars for Polish and Hungarian politicians and are involved in a similar seminar for GDR politicians in March.

We hope that future direct links and contacts within the IPU framework will encourage the further development of democracy in eastern Europe.

63. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance the United Kingdom will offer for environmental improvements in eastern Europe.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government are fully committed to improving the environment in Europe, including eastern Europe. Environmental problems are best tackled through international co-operation, and we are working within the EC to establish how best we can help in eastern Europe. The £210 million EC assistance budget for 1990 to Poland and Hungary includes the environment as a priority area. The G24 countries, which are co-ordinating their assistance for eastern Europe, are also looking at ways to help.

54. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is being made available to encourage the process of reform in eastern Europe.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government are committed to supporting economic and political reform in eastern Europe, and have played a leading role in encouraging the positive response of the EC and its member states to the emerging democracies in Poland and Hungary. For both these countries we have established know-how funds and provide assistance through the EC's trade, aid and other measures. We will respond positively to other countries in eastern Europe at the time they put into place necessary political and economic reforms.

22. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet his European Community counterparts to discuss the developments of the Community and relations with eastern European countries.

Mr. Maude: The next formal meeting of the Community Foreign Affairs Council will be on 5 and 6 February, the first under the Irish presidency. The agenda is not yet known but is likely to include further discussion of eastern Europe, given the continuing pace of developments in those countries. The FAC will be preceded by an extraordinary meeting of the EC Foreign Ministers, called by the Irish presidency on 20 January, specifically to discuss eastern Europe.

24. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in setting up know-how funds to assist countries in eastern Europe.

56. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made by Her Majesty's Government in providing know-how funding for east European countries emerging from one-party rule.

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in setting up know-how funds to assist eastern European countries emerging from totalitarian regimes.

Mr. Waldegrave: A know-how fund for Poland was established in June, and it has subsequently been doubled in value to £50 million to be spent over five years. The aim of the fund is to help political and economic reform. To date, some 40 separate activities have been approved and £2·1 million committed. A fund of £25 million over five years for Hungary will start in April. Help for the Poles and Hungarians to prepare for democratic elections is one of the central objectives of both funds. We are considering further help for other eastern European countries.

Vietnamese Boat People

16. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Vietnamese boat people have been repatriated from Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: A total of 925 Vietnamese boat people have been repatriated from Hong Kong. Eight hundred and seventy-four of these volunteered to return. The remaining 51 were the subject of the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 12 December. I have nothing to add to what was said then.

71. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on the forced repatriation of Vietnamese from Hong Kong.

Mr. Maude: We have received a number of representations on the repatriation of the first group of non-volunteer boat people to Vietnam, As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs said in his statement on 12 December, no force was used. The repatriation was conducted in line with procedures used worldwide to remove people refused permission to remain in a territory.

66. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to monitor the treatment in Vietnam of forcibly repatriated boat people.

Mr. Maude: No boat people have been forcibly repatriated. Normal removal procedures, which are applied worldwide in returning people refused permission to remain, were used. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs envisaged in his statement on 12 December, Her Majesty's embassy in Hanoi has monitored the conditions of the group of non-volunteers who have returned, both in the transit camp in Hanoi and in the villages to which they have subsequently returned. In addition, my right hon. Friend the Member for Aylesbury (Mr. Raison) and Lord Ennals are visiting Vietnam from 7 to 11 January as independent observers to report on the conditions of those who have returned.

61. Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many non-refugee Vietnamese boat people have been returned to Vietnam to date; and with what result.

Mr. Maude: A total of 925 non-refugee Vietnamese boat people have returned to Vietnam. The monitoring undertaken by the UNHCR and Her Majesty's embassy in Hanoi has shown that none has been detained or punished for having left Vietnam.

Chile

17. Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the restoration of democracy in Chile.

44. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the restoration of democracy in Chile.

53. Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the restoration of democracy in Chile.

65. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the restoration of democracy in Chile.

Mr. Sainsbury: We warmly welcome the exemplary conduct of the presidential and congressional elections in Chile and, with our partners in the Twelve, look forward to working closely with the new democratic Government there.

60. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to meet the President-elect of Chile.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs hopes to have an early opportunity to meet the President-elect of Chile, but has no definite plan to do so at present.

Cambodia

19. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his current policy with regard to Cambodia.

Mr. Hurd: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe (Mr. Lester) on 8 November in which I made plain the Government's repugnance for the Khmer Rouge and set out our policy towards Cambodia.

Middle East

21. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Government involvement in the middle east peace process.

50. Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to advance the peace process in the middle east.

51. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he will take to assist the development of the peace process in the middle east; and if he will make a statement.

74. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in promoting peace in the middle east.

86. Sir Dennis Walters: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on progress towards a middle east peace settlement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have been closely involved in the efforts being made to establish direct contact between Israel and a representative Palestinian delegation as an important step towards an overall settlement.

30. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on implementation of the peace plan put forward by President Mubarak of Egypt.

Mr. Waldegrave: President Mubarak deserves great credit for his efforts to help establish direct contact between Israel and a representative Palestinian delegation.

Poland

23. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Poland and its efforts to build up democratic institutions.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have close and friendly relations with Poland. We admire the courage with which the Polish Government are tackling their economic problems and will continue to give substantial help to ease the transition to democracy and a market-based economy.

48. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met a member of the Polish Government; and what was discussed.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs met the Polish Foreign Minister, Mr. Skubiszewski, at the Group of 24 ministerial meeting in Brussels on 13 December, when further Community assistance to Poland was discussed. He also met Lech Walesa, chairman of Solidarity, on 30 November. They discussed the internal situation in Poland and economic assistance.

29. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to meet the Polish Prime Minister or members of the Polish Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs certainly hopes to meet the Polish Prime Minister in 1990. No date has yet been fixed. He met the Polish Foreign Minister at the Group of 24 ministerial meeting in Paris on 13 December and had talks with Mr. Lech Walesa, chairman of Solidarity, on 30 November.

We are delighted that a programme of economic reform has now been agreed with the IMF, and will continue to support the Polish Government's efforts in all appropriate ways, including through a contribution to the stabilisation fund.

Ethiopia

25. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about peace talks in Ethiopia.

Mr. Waldegrave: We welcome the continuing peace talks between the Ethiopian Government and, respectively, the Eritrean People's Liberation Front and the Tigrayan People's Liberation Front. We urge all involved to work seriously for a negotiated settlement which offers the only lasting solution to these long-standing conflicts.

27. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the present state of United Kingdom relations with Ethiopia.

42. Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the present state of United Kingdom relations with Ethiopia.

Mr. Waldegrave: Our relations with the Ethiopian Government enable us to maintain a dialogue on such issues as famine relief, human rights, the peace process and economic policies.

Vietnam

26. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he discussed the American trade and aid embargo against Vietnam during his recent meeting with the United States Secretary of State; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The subject was not raised during my right hon. Friend's talks with Mr. Baker on 11 December.

84. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last had discussions with his Vietnamese counterpart; and what was their content.

Mr. Sainsbury: The then Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs met the Vietnamese Foreign Minister, Mr. Nguyen Co Thach, on 28 June 1989. Their discussions focused on the return of the Vietnamese boat people and other bilateral issues.

59. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards Vietnam.

82. Mr. Strong: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on relations with the Government of Vietnam.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have normal diplomatic relations with the Socialist Republic of Vietnam. We expect Vietnam to meet its responsibilities towards its neighbours and its own people before we consider further development of our relations.

40. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to meet representatives of the Government of Vietnam; and what subjects he proposes to discuss.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no current plans to meet representatives of the Government of Vietnam.

East Germany

28. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the prospects for reform in East Germany following the meeting of the four powers in Berlin.

37. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the prospects for reform in East Germany following the meeting of the four powers in Berlin.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are greatly encouraged by the steps Mr. Modrow's Government are taking to introduce real democracy into the GDR. We hope for further progress in the run-up to the elections planned to take place next May.

Kuwait

31. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to further strengthen the United Kingdom's ties with Kuwait.

Mr. Waldegrave: Our bilateral relations remain excellent. I am pleased to say that Shaikh Sa'ad Abdullah Al Sabah, the Crown Prince and Prime Minister of Kuwait, has recently accepted an invitation to visit the United Kingdom as a guest of the Government later this year.

Somalia

32. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Somalia ambassador; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has not had the opportunity of an official meeting with the Somali ambassador since taking up his present appointment. Senior Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials are in frequent contact with the ambassador about developments in Somalia.

Czechoslovakia

33. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for United Kingdom policy of the prospects for reform in Czechoslovakia.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are confident that recent events in Czechoslovakia will allow much closer bilateral relations. Once the necessary economic and political reforms are in place, we will consider economic assistance at international and bilateral level.

India

34. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement concerning United Kingdom relations with India.

Mr. Sainsbury: Our relations with India are excellent. We are looking forward to developing them still further in co-operation with the newly elected Indian Government.

83. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to meet his opposite number in the newly elected Government of India.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs looks forward to meeting and working closely with Mr. Gujral, the new Indian Minister for External Affairs, but he has no specific plans for a meeting at present.

Israel

35. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's current relations with Israel.

Mr. Waldegrave: Relations with Israel are good.

South Korea

36. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about relations with South Korea.

Mr. Sainsbury: Our relations with the Republic of Korea are excellent. They were further strengthened by the successful visit of President Roh Tae-woo from 27 to 30 November 1989.

CSCE Review

38. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, what has been Her Majesty's Government's response to President Gorbachev's proposal to bring forward the next conference on security and co-operation in Europe review conference.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Soviet Union has modified President Gorbachev's original suggestion of holding a CSCE summit meeting to launch a Helsinki follow-up meeting brought forward from 1992 to 1990. Mr. Shevardnadze has since said, on a number of occasions, that the Soviet Union does not want the CSCE summit, which the Soviet Union has proposed for 1990, to interfere with the programme of intersessional CSCE meetings arranged in 1990-92, nor with the holding of the Helsinki follow-up meeting in 1992. We are willing to consider the suggestion of a CSCE summit in 1990. A successful meeting would require careful preparation and clarity as to its intended purpose and goals.

Drugs

39. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts are being made to co-ordinate international action against the drugs trade.

Mr. Sainsbury: International co-operation against the drugs trade takes place in a number of fora, notably the United Nations, the European Community and the Council of Europe. In my statement to the United Nations General Assembly in November, I called for greater resources for the United Nations drugs effort; and for a restructuring of the United Nations drugs bodies to make them more effective. The General Assembly has now called on the secretary-general to convene an expert group to review these issues. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs hopes to attend a United Nations special session on drugs in New York next month. The Government will also host a world ministerial summit in London in April 1990 to look at ways of reducing the demand for drugs and combating the cocaine threat.

Overseas Staff (Commercial Activities)

41. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of his Department's front-line staff resources overseas are devoted to commercial activities.

Mr. Maude: Nearly 30 per cent.

Namibia

43. Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's relations with Namibia.

70. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's current relations with Namibia.

81. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's relations with Namibia.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are delighted by progress towards successful completion of the United Nations plan for Namibian independence, and look forward to close relations with Namibia.

78. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of the current political situation in Namibia.

Mr. Waldegrave: The constituent assembly has made substantial progress towards agreeing a draft constitution. On this basis, we believe Namibia will achieve independence within the timetable of the United Nations plan.

Malta

45. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to visit Malta.

Mr. Maude: No.

Nicaragua

46. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to visit Nicaragua during the forthcoming elections.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is being provided to the Nicaraguan authorities in connection with that country's forthcoming election.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 29 November at column 698.

India-Nepal Dispute

47. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representation he has received on the Indo-Nepalese trade and transit dispute; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have received many representations. We have been very concerned at this dispute, and its effects on the people of Nepal, and are therefore much encouraged by the new Indian Government's statements about the need to improve relations with Nepal, and by the news that the two Foreign Ministers will meet soon.

Central America

49. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representation he has made to the Government of the United States of America concerning peace plans for central America.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have regular discussions with the United States Administration on a wide range of issues, including central America.

EC Integration

52. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the development of further integration in the European Community following the declaration of Heads of Government at Strasbourg on 10 December.

Mr. Maude: We want to continue and to extend the process of integration, to which the main practical contribution is at present being made by the programme to complete the internal market.

Falkland Islands (Fishing Rights)

55. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if officials of his Department have entered into discussions with representatives of the Argentinian Government concerning the possible resumption of fishing of Argentinian fishing vessels in Falkland waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Talks on fisheries between British and Argentine representatives took place in a working group in Paris on 18 and 19 December 1989. Officials discussed ways of exchanging information, in order to improve both sides' understanding of fishing questions and promote the conservation of fish stocks. The report of the working group will be considered at the next substantive meeting to discuss relations between the two countries in Madrid on 14 and 15 February.

The question of fishing in the Falkland Islands interim conservation and management zone by Argentine vessels did not arise.

Cyprus

57. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new initiatives are proposed by Her Majesty's Government to bring about a resolution of the Cyprus problem.

Mr. Maude: We believe that the United Nations Secretary-General's initiative offers the best hope of settling the Cyprus dispute. We strongly support it, and do not propose any new initiative ourselves which might cut across it.

87. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will next visit Cyprus.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no present plans to visit Cyprus.

South Africa

58. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to meet representatives of the African National Congress in London to discuss the situation in South Africa.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Dalai Lama

62. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now meet the Dalai Lama.

Mr. Maude: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 16 November 1989 to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) at column 498.

Arms Reductions (Verification)

64. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he accepts without serious reservation the recommendations presented in the report on force comparisons which was approved by the WEU assembly on 6 December; and what role he envisages for the Western European Union in the pursuit of verification of arms reductions.

Mr. Waldegrave: We welcome the support expressed in this report for NATO's agreed arms control priorities. But we cannot endorse all its specific proposals. In particular, the report's recommendations on short-range nuclear forces differ from the Alliance's agreed position as set out in the comprehensive concept. We consider that the WEU can provide useful support for NATO's work on conventional arms control verification by helping to ensure that the European contribution is as effective as possible.

Romania

67. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what approaches he has made to the British Broadcasting Corporation external services concerning the situation in Romania.

Mr. Waldegrave: We regularly review with the BBC world service the hours of broadcasting to Romania and other countries. In view of the situation in Romania, the FCO and the BBC agreed to increase the evening broadcast by 15 minutes a day, Monday to Saturday, from 21 December, and to introduce additional dawn transmissions of 15 minutes a day on Saturdays and Sundays from 23 December.

77. Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the state of current relations between Her Majesty's Government and the Republic of Romania.

Mr. Waldegrave: Her Majesty's ambassador in Bucharest has had cordial meetings with members of the new Government of Romania. We look forward to developments in Romania which will make close and fruitful relations possible.

75. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for United Kingdom policy of the current situation in Romania.

Mr. Waldegrave: We were encouraged by the commitments made by the new Government of Romania to pluralism, democracy and respect for human rights. If such commitments are fully realised it will be possible to develop cordial and close relations with Romania.

European Monetary Union

68. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out his responsibilities in relation to European Community negotiations on monetary union.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has overall responsibility for policy towards the European Community. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer is responsible for economic and monetary issues.

El Salvador

69. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of El Salvador concerning abuse of human rights in that country.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has not met Salvadorean Ministers recently. The importance which we attach to respect for human rights was emphasised to both President Cristiani and Foreign Minister Pacas on the occasion of their visit in September last year.

Colombia

72. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support he is providing for President Barco of Colombia's war on the drug barons.

Mr. Sainsbury: We fully support the efforts of President Barco in combating the activities of the illegal drugs traffickers in Colombia. As my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs announced on 27 September in New York, the Government are providing a substantial package of practical assistance to the Colombian authorities. This includes the provision of non-lethal equipment, technical expertise and training in a number of areas including bomb disposal, close protection of VIPs, secure communications, police data processing and riverine patrolling. Royal Naval vessels in the area are periodically deployed to provide surveillance assistance to Colombia.

European Development Bank

73. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in negotiations towards achieving the creation of a European development bank.

Mr. Maude: The European Council in Strasbourg on 8 and 9 December agreed in principle to set up a European bank for reconstruction and development. Follow-up discussion has continued within the Council. A substantive follow-up meeting of interested parties will take place in Paris on 15 and 16 January 1990. This is consistent with the timetable set by the European Council. The Strasbourg Council set a target for negotiations to open in January 1990.

Tibet

76. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make an official visit to Tibet in 1990.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no such plans.

Australia

79. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if has any plans to visit Australia.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs would like to make a visit to Australia in order to maintain the valuable dialogue that we now have with the Australians on a wide range of international issues. No decision has yet been made on the timing of such a visit.

Southern Africa

85. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to visit southern Africa in 1990.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no current plans to do so.

Albania

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he plans to meet representatives of the Government of Albania.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Colombian Amazon

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the book "The Colombian Amazon: Policies for the Protection of its Indigenous Peoples and their Environment", by Peter Bunyard.

Mr. Sainsbury: The publication "The Colombian Amazon: Policies for the Protection of its Indigenous Peoples and their Environment", by Peter Bunyard has been ordered by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office library.

Angola

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what is his Department's policy towards support for President Mobutu Sese Seko in mediations between the MPLA and UNITA in Angola;

(2) whether he has made any recent representations to the MPLA-PT in Angola concerning any response which it may make to the peace proposals placed before it in October by President Mobutu Sese Seko.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have consistently stressed the need for a political settlement in Angola. The terms of such a settlement are for the MPLA Government of Angola and UNITA to decide. We support President Mobutu's work as mediator and trust that this will lead to an early end to the fighting and to negotiations without pre-conditions between the two sides.

Extradition

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Britain will ratify the European convention on extradition.

Mr. Sainsbury: We intend to introduce the necessary Orders in Council under the Extradition Act 1989 during the present Session. Subject to the approval of Parliament, signature and ratification of the convention will then follow.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether there is currently a prima facie requirement in respect of requests for extradition to the United Kingdom from those countries which have ratified the European convention on extradition.

Mr. Sainsbury: Requests for extradition to the United Kingdom from those countries party to the convention with which we have bilateral extradition treaties must be supported by evidence or particulars sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the relevant treaty.

EC Grants

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to require any public bodies receiving grants from the EEC to declare this in the publications of these bodies.

Mr. Maude: Individual departmental chapters of the public expenditure White Paper already refer to any significant receipts from the EC in respect of the Department's programme. The Government expect all public bodies to publish details of significant grant receipts from the EC.

Hong Kong

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance he has given to unaccompanied minors from Vietnam currently residing in Hong Kong's refugee camps.

Mr. Maude: The Hong Kong Government are discussing with UNHCR the establishment of special procedures under the comprehensive plan of action for dealing with unaccompanied minors, with the aim of identifying the most humane and appropriate course in each individual case. This might mean repatriation where the child's parents or closest relatives are in Vietnam or resettlement elsewhere where the nearest family ties are overseas.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Capital Limits

Ms. Clare Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many additional people would qualify for the following benefits if the capital limits were increased to (a) £8,000, where applicable, (b) £10,000, (c) £12,000 or (d) abolished; and what would be the full year cost of each of these changes at current benefit levels (i) income support, (ii) family credit, (iii) National Health Service benefits, (iv) housing benefit, (v) community charge benefit and (vi) the social fund.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The estimates are as follows (assuming in each case that the present rules for imputing a weekly income to capital holdings of more than £3,000 are maintained):

Upper capital limit	Additional people qualifying (Thousands) IS	FC	HB	CCB	Full year cost at current rate (£ million) IS	FC	HB	CCB
£8,000	10	[1]—	—	—	25	[2]—	—	—
£10,000	20	[1]—	25	35	45	[2]—	20	10
£12,000	30	[1]—	30	55	55	[2]—	25	15
Abolished	40	[3]1·5	40	85	65	[4]1	50	20

[1]Denotes less than 1·5 thousand people.
[2]Denotes less than £1 million.
[3]Approximately.
[4]Around.

Because most expenditure from the social fund is discretionary, it is not possible to estimate the effect on the fund of implementing the changes.

Qualification for the NHS low income scheme depends not only on the patient's financial circumstances but on the nature and level of the particular charge or expenses incurred. Therefore meaningful estimates of the effect of changing the capital limits are not possible.

Social Fund

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart) of 19 December on the social fund, he will publish (a) his revised social fund budget for 1990-91 and (b) the names of the benefit offices which have come under exceptional pressure and are to receive an increase in their allocation for that social fund budget during 1989-90.

Mr. Scott: With regard to the budget for 1990-91, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 10 November at column 812. We are considering the basis on which the 1990-91 budget should be allocated to individual local offices and will announce the allocations in due course. Details of the revised allocations for 1989-90 are in the Library.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have been assisted by the independent living fund since it was established; how many people he estimates will be assisted in the 1990-91 financial year; how much money is to be allocated to the fund for the 1990-91 financial year; if he envisages the fund being established on a permanent basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Up to the end of December 1989, the independent living fund had made 3,391 awards, including a small number of one-off payments. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security announced on 25 October 1989, provision of more than £20 million, twice the 1989-90 level, has been allocated to the fund for the 1990-91 financial year. The wider arrangements for care in the community proposed in Cm 849, "Caring for People", to take effect in 1991 envisage care packages devised by local authorities on an individual basis. We would therefore expect that people seeking help after that date should generally be able to look to local authorities. We are consulting the fund's trustees, the Disablement Income Group and DIG (Scotland) on the experience gained from running the fund and examining whether there might be a very small group of people for whom supplementary arrangements may be necessary.

Family Credit

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing the proposed family credit ceilings in 1990-91 for each of (a) a married couple with one child under five years, (b) a married couple with two children under 11 years, (c) a married couple with two children over 11 years, (d) a married couple with three children under 11 years, (e) a married couple with three children over 11 years and (f) a married couple with two children under 11 years and two children over 11 years.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: At the new benefit levels proposed for April 1990, the family credit ceiling represented by the highest amount of net earnings and other relevant income a family can have and still qualify for family credit at the minimum payment of 50p will be as follows:

Married couple with one child under 5 years	120·60
Married couple with two children under 11	132·39
Married couple with two children over 11 (but under 16)	149·24
Married couple with three children under 11	144·17
Married couple with three children over 11 (but under 16)	169·46

Income Support

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to increase the £500 capital limit in income support for help with interest on loans for necessary repairs and improvements to the home.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I am pleased to announce our intention to abolish this rule from April 1990.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Firearms Certificates

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of a new firearms licence for a shotgun in January 1986 and January 1990.

Mr. Cope: A new firearms certificate cost £33 in January 1986 and £46 in January 1990. A firearms certificate covers all types of firearms.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average amount of time a civilian worker in the Royal Ulster Constabulary firearms section spends on the processing of (a) an application, (b) a variation and (c) the renewal of a firearms certificate in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 9 January 1990]: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average amount of police time it takes to process (a) an application, (b) a variation and (c) the renewal of a firearms certificate in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 9 January 1990]: It is difficult accurately to calculate the average amount of time spent processing a firearms certificate, as individual cases may require prolonged investigation.

However the police authority has informed me that the most recent agreed figures estimate the average amount of time spent by police officers in divisions on processing firearms certificates as follows:

(a) An application—100 minutes
(b) A variation—85 minutes
(c) A renewal—40 minutes

The figures do not include the time spent by police officers in RUC headquarters, firearms branch.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the numbers, ranks and salaries of the Royal Ulster Constabulary officers employed in the Royal Ulster Constabulary firearms section; and what were the numbers, ranks and salaries five years and 10 years ago.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 9 January 1990]: The information on staffing levels and average salaries as at 31 December 1989 and five years and 10 years ago is as follows:

Permanent headquarters staff

	Superintendent	Chief Inspector	Inspector	Sergeant	Constable
1989	1	1	1	1	1
1984	1	1	1	1	1
1979	1	1	1	1	1

1979	9,060	6,610	5,880	5,180	4,150

[1] Average pay for the grade or rank excluding allowance and overtime.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) applications, (b) renewals and (c) variations of firearms certificates were granted in Northern Ireland in each of the last six years; and how many in each category and year were refused.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 9 January 1990]: The Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary has informed me that the information is as follows:

Year	Firearm certificate granted (a)	Firearm certificate renewed (b)	Firearm certificate varied (c)
1984	4,011	30,066	8,574
1985	4,222	22,463	7,082

1986	308	43	320
1987	308	53	420
1988	262	62	471
1989	299	84	565

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many firearms certificates are held in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 9 January 1990]: The Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary has informed me that there were 88,410 on 1 January 1990.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) handguns, (b) shotguns, (c) .22 rifles, (d) larger than .22 calibre rifles and (e) other firearms are currently held on firearms certificates in Northern Ireland; and what were the figures five years and 10 years ago.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 9 January 1990]: The Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary has informed me that the information is as follows:

	At 31 December
	1989	1984	1979
(a) Handguns	10,978	10,188	9,946
(b) Shotguns	83,593	79,845	72,843
(c) .22 rifles	12,161	12,395	12,469
(d) Full bore rifles	1,172	1,259	1,370
(e) Other firearms	19,139	17,459	14,154

HEALTH

NHS Accounts

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish the National Health Service Accounts for 1987-88.

Mr. Freeman: Publication of the annual series of House of Commons papers on the National Health Service accounts is the responsibility of the National Audit Office. However, we understand that the papers for 1987-88 are to be published shortly. In the meantime my hon. Friend may wish to refer to the Department's annual booklet "Health Authorities Annual Accounts—National Summary (England)"—copies of which have been placed in the Library.

National Assistance Act

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department has issued revised guidelines concerning section 29 of the National Assistance Act 1948; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Circulars were issued to local authorities in 1974 following changes made by the Local Government Act 1972. It has not been found necessary since then to issue revised guidelines.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he intends to take to ensure that (a) there is a statutory duty upon local authorities to assess the needs of disabled people before discharge from long-term treatment in hospital and (b) that such a duty extends to people with physical or sensory disabilities as well as people with mental illness or mental handicap; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Department issued detailed guidance to health and local authorities in February 1989 —LAC(89)7 and HC(89)5, copies of which are in the Library—emphasising the particular role and responsibilities of health and local authorities in ensuring that people do not leave hospital without adequate arrangements being made for their support in the community. Our recent White Paper "Caring for People" (Cmnd. 849) announced improved machinery for collaboration between health and local authorities in the provision of community care, and reaffirmed the responsibility of health authorities to ensure that discharge procedures are in place and agreed with the local authority so that people can return home with the support they need or move to appropriate care.

NHS Pay

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement concerning the pay levels of trained home staff in the National Health Service.

Mr. Freeman: The pay of staff in the National Health Service is generally determined either following the advice of the pay review bodies, or through direct negotiation in the Whitley councils.

Dr. Philip Silver

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further use the National Health Service has for the unpaid honorary services of Dr. Philip Silver, chemotherapy consultant to Wigan health authority; how much equipment has been contributed over the last four years from Dr. Silver's fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I understand Dr. Philip Silver has held an honorary consultant contract with Wigan health authority for 10 years since he retired in February 1980 and that it has agreed with Dr. Silver that his cancer care endowment fund will continue in his name and that he will be a trustee of that fund. Dr. Silver will continue to make a valuable contribution through his administration of the fund but the authority does not consider it appropriate to extend his honorary contract beyond the age 75. Arrangements have been made for his cancer patients to be treated at the Royal Albert Edward hospital. Over the last five years, equipment has been purchased for the treatment of cancer patients from Dr. Silver's fund, including:

Radiation

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out the terms of reference and future work programme of the independent expert committee on medical aspects of radiation in the environment, COMARE.

Mr. Freeman: The committee on medical aspects of radiation in the environment was established in 1985 to advise Government on the health effects of natural and man-made radiation in the environment and to assess the adequacy of the available data and the need for further research. The Government are grateful to COMARE for the three reports the committee has produced so far (1, 2, 3).

The Committee's future work programme will include:

(i) an update and review on cancer incidence in young people in the vicinity of BNFL Sellafield, in the light of emerging epidemiological work commissioned by Government in 1984 and other relevant work;

(ii) an assessment of the feasibility of advising Government on the evidence relating to leukaemia incidence in young people around Scottish nuclear sites and over Scotland as a whole;

(iii) follow-up of the results of work recommended by the Black advisory group (4) and COMARE's second and third reports (2, 3);

(iv) an overview of the evidence relating to the incidence of childhood cancer around nuclear installations once the results of studies of the geographical distribution of childhood cancer incidence on a nationwide basis become available.

In addition, COMARE will assess evidence relating to the health effects of domestic exposure to radon as further data become available. More generally, the committee will continue to review other relevant information on the health effects of ionising and non-ionising radiation in the environment and to advise Government accordingly.

Regional Allocations

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how, in making his allocations to National Health Service regions for 1990-91, he took into account (a) population, (b) health-related deprivation such as occupation, unemployment and low incomes, (c) standard mortality ratios, (d) morbidity, (e) the needs of the elderly, (f) the needs of the mentally handicapped, and (g) the numbers of adult single-person households both with and without dependants stating in each case the indicators used, and how each indicator was weighted against the others.

Mr. Freeman: The White Paper "Working for Patients" sets out the principles of the new allocation formula. The 1990-91 revenue allocations are based on the new weighted capitation formula, but in such a way that the full redistributive effects are phased over three years to 1992-93. Under the new formula regions receive their main allocations on basis of their resident population, adjusted for morbidity and the relative costs of providing services within each of seven age bandings. Weighted standard mortality ratios (SMRs) for people under 75 years of age are used as measure of relative morbidity (the weighting is achieved by using the square root of the SMR). Allocations also take account of the higher costs of providing services in London by means of allowances for London weighting and market forces, and an additional 3 per cent. for the Thames regions. No other factors are taken into account.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the (a) cross-boundary flow adjustments and (b) any pre-planned adjustments in spending allocation between the Northern National Health Service region and Scotland for each year from 1983, indicating any planned provision of services between the north and Scotland.

Mr. Freeman: There have been no cash adjustments between England and Scotland in respect of patients crossing the border for treatment. However, Northern RHA has received recognition through the RAWP formula for treating patients from outside England. The amount attributable to Scotland cannot be separately identified centrally.

For the financial year 1990-91, as all regions move towards a simpler funding formula based on resident population, a cost for the net inflow of patients from Scotland has been estimated, and an adjustment made to the RHA's cash limit to cover this cost.

Dentists

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to publish the report on the three-year trial of a capitation system for paying dentists for the treatment of children.

Mr. Freeman: The report on the clinical trial of a capitation system for remunerating dentists for treatment of children is published today by Macmillans Press as supplement No. 1 1990 to the "Community Dental Health Journal". Copies of the report will be placed in the Library.

Health Expenditure

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether, pursuant to the answer, 18 December, Official Report, column 81-82, he will state (a) the average, and (b) the range of expenditure per patient in each family practitioner committee area of the Northern health region for two previous quarters to the one ended June to August 1989.

Mr. Freeman: Information about individual patients is not collected. The range of expenditure per patient in each family practitioner committee area is available only on a general practitioner practice basis and by basic price of prescriptions. Basic price takes no account of discount, dispensing costs or fees and therefore does not represent actual expenditure. The information that is available on this basis is set out in the tables:

	Average basic price per patient £	Range of basic prices per patient Lowest cost practice £	Highest cost practice £	Quarter ending

Notes:

1. The figures are based on patient list sizes of 500 or more of prescribing doctors within the family practitioner committee. Lists of less than 500 and of dispensing doctors are not included.

2. The figures are net ingredient cost (basic price) of prescriptions dispensed in response to prescriptions written by practices within the family practitioner committee. They take no account of discount, dispensing costs or fees and therefore do not represent actual expenditure.
3. The family practitioner committees are divided into three streams for reporting purposes. Each stream has a different quarterly cycle. Aggregated annual data is not available.

Cochlear Implants

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he intends to approve supraregional funding for cochlear implant operations to be made available in Manchester on the National Health Service as part of a national funding programme for such operations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I was very pleased to be able to announce on 4 January the provision of central funding for a cochlear implant programme. A total of £1 million is being made available in 1990-91 and similar sums will be made available in each of the following two years. Regional health authorities have been asked to submit bids for funding on behalf of units in their area. Up to six centres will be funded. Previously there was no way of alleviating the deafness of profoundly deaf people. Cochlear implants help with lip reading, improve control of voice volume and intonation, restore self-confidence, and remove their sense of isolation.

HIV Infection

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received in regard to people who acquired HIV from blood transfusions; what reply he is sending; if there is any action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Department has received two inquiries about people who have become infected with HIV as a result of blood transfusions.

The special financial help which the Government have made available for haemophiliacs with HIV recognises the wholly exceptional circumstances of those persons. We have no plans to extend those arrangements to those recipients of blood transfusions who have become HIV infected.

Creutzfeldt Jakob Dementia

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his research programme into Creutzfeldt Jakob dementia.

Mr. Freeman: The Department of Health will be supporting Dr. R. G. Will of the department of clinical neurosciences, Western General hospital, Edinburgh in the establishment of a national register of Creutzfeldt Jakob diseases cases. This study is that recommended in the Tyrell report, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Ambulance Personnel

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many ambulance workers there are per 1,000 head of population in each regional health authority.

Mr. Freeman: The information is given in the table:

Visual Handicap

Mr. Aspinwall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, when White Papers are published which have profound implications for disabled people, particularly the visually impaired, he will consider having the documents published not only in print form but also on tape or in braille.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 14 December 1989]: We are considering a number of options for communicating our messages in a variety of languages and formats to meet the needs of particular groups, including the needs of visually impaired people.

Health Authorities

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the estimated cost of the backlog of maintenance work in each district health authority in England in 1988-89.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 8 January 1990]: The first returns of information about the stock of buildings of each district health authority, under the Korner requirements, are now being collected although complete information for all districts will not be available until the figures for 1989-90 are received.

The table of the preliminary information available from 133 health authorities, gives the cost of bringing the NHS estate to an overall condition which exhibits only minor deterioration. It includes property which is due to be replaced within three years, buildings which are not used for patient care, property which is awaiting planned preventive maintenance and property which is awaiting disposal.

EMPLOYMENT

Social Fund

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table for each year since 1979 of his Department's allocation of the European social fund by percentage and amount in relation to the United Kingdom's total allocation.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not available for years 1979 to 1982 and separate figures over the period are not available for my Department. Figures and percentages for the allocation to all Government Departments for other years are as follows:

	£ million	Per cent.[1]
1983	276	86
1984	236	67
1985	159	51
1986	158	56
1987	323	74
1988	263	65
1989	236	56

[1] of national allocation.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate how many jobs would be lost were existing law on Sunday trading to be enforced throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholls: No such estimates are available.

Wages Council Inspectors

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many establishments were checked by a visit by wages council inspectors in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Dundee, East (Mr. McAllion) on 21 December, Official Report, column 450.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current rate of unemployment in the United Kingdom; and what is the current European Community average.

Mr. Nicholls: In October 1989, the latest available date, the rate of unemployment in the United Kingdom was 6·2 per cent. compared with an EEC average of 9·1 per cent. Over the past two years the unemployment rate in the United Kingdom has fallen faster than in any other major industrialised country.

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the fall in unemployment since June 1986.

Mr. Nicholls: Since June 1986 unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in the United Kingdom has fallen by 1,480,500. Unemployment has now fallen for 40 consecutive months to the lowest level for over nine years.

Training

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans for further training initiatives.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government set out their plans for improving the quantity and quality of the national training effort in the December 1988 White Paper "Employment for the 1990s" (CM 540). My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to announce further initiatives.

A further expansion of the compacts initiative was announced on 21 November. Funds are being made available immediately to assist the establishment of compacts in the following inner-city areas: Barnsley, Burnley, Lambeth, Nottingham, Rotherham, Wandsworth and Wigan. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales will shortly announce details of further compacts in Wales.

Breast and Cervical Screening

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce legislation to enable all female employees to be allowed paid leave in order to receive breast and cervical screening.

Mr. Nicholls: No. The Government believe that such matters are best settled by direct agreement between employers and employees according to their own priorities.

Industrial Disputes

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received about the employment implications of recent industrial disputes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend receives representations about various aspects of industrial disputes from time to time. Disputes that lead to industrial action are to be regretted because they put jobs at risk.

Construction Industry

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment at what level of turnover building firms will be required to begin contributing to the financing of the construction industry training board.

Mr. Nicholls: The Industrial Training Act 1982 requires that levy proposals must include proposals exempting any employer with a small number of employees from the payment of levy. The Industrial Training Levy (Construction Board) Order 1989 exempted firms with a payroll of less than £15,000, equivalent to one employee.

One of the priorities we have set for the new construction industry training board, is that more small firms should be given protection from the burden of levy.

Closed Shop

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions he has had with the Trades Union Congress regarding the closed shop; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend regularly meets representatives of the Trades Union Congress to discuss a wide range of employment issues. He has not, however, been involved in any recent meetings with them to discuss the closed shop.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what further proposals he has to outlaw the closed shop.

Mr. Nicholls: The Employment Bill published on 21 December 1989 makes it unlawful to refuse to employ a person because he is or is not a trade union member and provides that any person refused employment for such a reason may complain to an industrial tribunal. This measure, together with the protections afforded by the Employment Act 1988, will make all forms of the closed shop unenforceable in law.

Skilled Workers (Holidays)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to the average number of days' holiday per year for skilled workers in (a) France, (b) West Germany, (c) Italy and (d) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholls: No reliable information is available.

Weekly Pay Limit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate he has made of the effect on the unemployment total of the introduction of the £43 limit on weekly pay introduced on 10 December.

Mr. Nicholls: The estimated effect on the unemployment total is negligible.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consideration he has given to ensuring that disabled people will not be disadvantaged in qualifying for bonus or performance-related funds in the plans for training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Eggar: There will be a system of performance-related funding for training and enterprise councils (TECs). This is designed to give an incentive for good performance by TECs in achieving objectives. The needs of people with disabilities will be recognised when objectives for TECs are agreed.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what resources he has set aside to ensure that disabled people are not disadvantaged by the establishment of training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Eggar: Training and enterprise councils (TECs) will be expected to meet the needs of people with disabilities from within their agreed budgets. Each TEC will set out how it intends to provide for the needs of people with disabilities in its business plan. This will form the basis of its contract with my Department.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make arrangements to ensure that training and enterprise councils seek expert support from appropriate agencies when dealing with disabled trainees.

Mr. Eggar: Training and enterprise councils (TECs) will be expected to consult and work with appropriate agencies which have the expertise necessary to meet the special needs of people with disabilities.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether funding proposals for training and enterprise councils will take into consideration the additional administrative costs likely to be incurred by voluntary sector organisations in negotiating with more than one training and enterprise council.

Mr. Nicholls: A central administrative unit has been established within my Department to facilitate negotiations and administrative arrangements between training and enterprise councils and national training providers. Voluntary sector organisations are, of course, welcome to use this facility.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to empower local training and enterprise councils to cash-limit their provision.

Mr. Nicholls: The TECs will operate under a contract with my Department which sets out targets and other outputs to be achieved together with an agreed budget. It will be for individual TECs to decide how they will negotiate provision with training providers.

Youth Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people in each separate ethnic group finished their training before the end of their scheme in (a) Greater London, (b) Manchester, (c) Birmingham and Solihull and (d) Coventry and Warwickshire.

Mr. Nicholls: The table shows the number and percentages of YTS leavers in each ethnic group who left YTS before the end of their YTS training entitlement:

	White	Black/Afro Caribbean	Indian Sub-continent	Other	Prefer not to say
Greater London

Percentage	67	71	69	67	50

Training Schemes

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action is taken by his Department to ensure that an objective assessment of a quango-supported Government training scheme is provided by a Government advisory service.

Mr. Nicholls: The training standards advisory service, set up in September 1986, carries out detailed scrutiny of the design, management, delivery and outcomes of training in YT and ET on behalf of the Training Agency. From 1 September 1989 the service has been reorganised on a regional basis to reflect the greater emphasis on local autonomy under the TEC arrangements.

Minimum Wages

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how he intends to enforce minimum wage protection in Wales.

Mr. Nicholls: The level of compliance with wages orders in Wales is, as in the rest of Great Britain, very high. My right hon. Friend is satisfied that the present policy of targeting the resources of the wages inspectorate towards those employers most likely to underpay is the most effective way of enforcing minimum wage legislation.

Employment Training

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment his Department has made of the additional administrative costs incurred by the voluntary sector under the special training provision of employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: The funding rules for special training provision provide for the additional administrative costs incurred in arranging an individualised training programme to be met by the Training Agency.

Earnings

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set out the real earnings figures for 1970, 1979 and 1989 from which each of the percentage increases was calulated in his answer to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell), of 13 December 1989, Official Report, columns 658-59.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 8 January 1990]: The information is provided in the table:

TRANSPORT

A45 Highway

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the approximate number of cars, heavy goods vehicles and passenger service vehicles that he estimates have used the A45 highway between Cambridge and the Haven ports of Ipswich and Felixstowe during each of the past 10 years; and how many he expects to use this stretch of road over the next 10 years.

Mr. Atkins: The estimated annual average daily flow of vehicles on the A45 between Cambridge and the Haven ports of Ipswich and Felixstowe in 1988 is as follows:

	Number
Heavy goods vehicles	4,500
Cars and taxis	14,500
Buses and coaches	100

Estimates of traffic levels on individual roads are made annually but the margins of error are too great to allow growth trends to be deduced.

No specific forecasts have been made for growth of traffic on this road. It is forecast by my Department that traffic in Great Britain will grow by between 20 and 35 per cent. betweeen 1990 and 2000.

Shipping Accidents

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents have taken place during the last 12 months around the coastline of Great Britain, that have involved (a) United Kingdom registered vessels and (b) foreign registered vessels; and what are the comparable figures for (i) five years and (ii) 10 years ago.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is only available for United Kingdom vessels on a worldwide basis. The numbers of accidents to United Kingdom registered vessels worldwide for 1979, 1984 and 1988 (the latest year completed statistics are available) are 421, 261 and 178 respectively. The information in respect of accidents to foreign registered vessels around the coastline of Great Britain is not kept in statistical form and is not therefore readily available.

Solar-powered Cars

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he has made any study of the contribution that could be made to the reduction of carbon dioxide releases from transport from the introduction of solar-powered cars;

(2) what research his Department has initiated to evaluate the potential for solar-powered cars for short urban journeys.

Mr. Atkins: The Department keeps in touch with the various developments world wide on applying solar power to transport. At present the potential for solar powered cars to reduce carbon dioxide emissions in the United Kingdom is small.

Car Alarms

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to ensure car alarms automatically switch off 10 minutes after activation.

Mr. Atkins: Car alarms are already required by regulations to stop emitting continuous noise after five minutes. Limiting the time of intermittent sounding of alarms would have to be agreed in the European Community. We propose to seek Community agreement for tighter standards for car alarms.

A1

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what ongoing monitoring of the condition of the recently resurfaced stretch of the A1 in west Yorkshire, immediately to the north of its junction with the M62, will be undertaken by his Department.

Mr. Atkins: The condition of the A1 is monitored regularly. The Department has initiated a regime of surveys and inspections to ensure that safety and structural integrity are monitored.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who were the analysts responsible for sampling and testing materials used in the major resurfacing work recently undertaken on the A1 in west Yorkshire immediately to the north of its junction with the M62.

Mr. Atkins: Under the Department's specification, the onus for bulk testing falls upon the contractors. Certificates of compliance are issued to the engineer who also arranges check tests. The engineer's analysts were Messrs. Sandberg of 40 Grosvenor gardens, London, SW1W 0LB.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who were the contractors responsible for the major resurfacing work undertaken on the A1 in west Yorkshire immediately to the north of its junction with the M62.

Mr. Atkins: The contractors were Tilcon Ltd., of Cleckheaton road, Low Moor, Bradford, BD12 0QH.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what period the contractor responsible for the resurfacing work undertaken recently on the A1 in west Yorkshire immediately to the north of its junction with the M62 will remain responsible for its condition.

Mr. Atkins: The contractor will be responsible for the work for a period of 12 months from the issue of the certificate of completion on 15 December 1989.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the materials used during the major resurfacing work recently completed on the A1 in west Yorkshire immediately to the north of its junction with the M62 were properly tested and sampled; and with what results.

Mr. Atkins: All materials were sampled and tested in accordance with the Department of Transport specification for highway works. Results showed that the requirements were satisfied.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made off the adequacy of the supervision of the contract for the major resurfacing work undertaken on both carriageways of the A1 in west Yorkshire immediately to the north of the junction with the M62.

Mr. Atkins: The works were supervised by Frank Graham and Partners as the Department's agents for maintenance works in this area. There is no reason to doubt that the contract was adequately supervised in accordance with the agreement between the Department and Frank Graham and Partners.

Two-Point Rollers

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's policy towards the use of two-point rollers on motorway and major trunk road resurfacing work.

Mr. Atkins: The method of achieving the Department's specification for highway works is a matter for the contractor concerned.

M65 Extension

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received representations from (a) the Lancashire Trust for Nature Conservation, (b) the Council for the Protection of Rural England and (c) Save the Heart of Lancashire, opposing the M65 extension.

Mr. Atkins: Representations have been received from all three organisations. These will be put before the inspector at the public inquiry which is due to commence on 13 February.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the estimated indirect costs in improvements to connecting roads and other areas to be borne (a) by his Department and (b) Lancashire county council, as a result of the construction of the M65 extension.

Mr. Atkins: The cost of alterations to side roads directly affected by the M65 Blackburn southern bypass is included in the capital cost of the scheme. Improvements to other local roads are a matter for the Lancashire county council, as highway authority, to consider.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated direct cost to be borne by his Department of the M65 extension proposal.

Mr. Atkins: The current estimate is £117 million for works and land.

Roads for Prosperity

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is yet in a position to give a precise date when the full roads report, referred to in paragraph 32 of the White Paper, Roads for Prosperity, will be published.

Mr. Atkins: The roads report will be published shortly.

Greater Manchester Relief Road

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what dates consultants were appointed for each section of the greater Manchester western and northern relief road.

Mr. Atkins: The information is as follows:
M6 to M56: 8 June 1988.
M56 to M62: 12 October 1989.
M62 to M66: Preliminary investigations into this section of the relief road are being carried out by consultants who were appointed on 14 October 1987 to advise on the widening of the M62 motorway between junctions 12 and 18.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated construction cost of each section of the greater Manchester western and northern relief road at prices consistent with those indicated in the White Paper, Roads for Prosperity.

Mr. Atkins: The estimated construction cost of each of the three sections at November 1987 prices is as follows:
M6 to M56: £45 million
M56 to M62: £105 million
M62 to M66: £150 million

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the next stage in the public consultation process for the proposed section one M6 to M56, of the greater Manchester western and northern relief road.

Mr. Atkins: Public consultation has just ended. We are now considering all the comments received. The next formal stage will be the announcement of a preferred route as a basis for orders under the Highways Acts.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the attendance by interested persons at each of the public consultation meetings regarding the proposals for section one M6 to M56 of the greater Manchester western and northern relief road.

Mr. Atkins: Fifty representatives of local authorities attended a preview of the public exhibition; 1,272 members of the public attended the exhibition which was held over three days.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when it is anticipated that section three M62 to M66, of the greater Manchester western and northern relief road will be open for public consultation.

Mr. Atkins: Next year.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the current plan for the greater Manchester western and northern relief road, as indicated in the White Paper, Roads for Prosperity, was first conceived, and what is the date envisaged for the completion of its construction.

Mr. Atkins: The greater Manchester western and northern relief road was conceived in its present form in 1988 during our review of trunk road needs leading to the publication of the 1989 White Paper "Roads for Prosperity". It is too early in the planning process to say when construction might be completed.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the consultants' brief for the centre section of the greater Manchester western and northern relief road allows for access and egress to be provided at the A57.

Mr. Atkins: Connection to the A57 is not specifically provided for in the consultants' brief. This will be a matter for consideration when the consultants report.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport with which organisations his Department has had consultations regarding the greater Manchester western and northern relief road, prior to and since the publication of the White Paper, "Roads for Prosperity".

Mr. Atkins: Twenty-six organisations have been consulted about proposals for the section of the greater Manchester western and northern relief road between the M6 and M56 motorways. These are listed as follows:

Cheshire County Council
Macclesfield Borough Council
Trafford Borough Council
Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food
Ministry of Defence
Countryside Commission
Nature Conservancy Council
National Trust
Manweb
British Geological Society
British Gas
British Coal
North West Water Authority
CEGB
Cheshire Constabulary
Warrington Borough Transport
Shell UK
British Telecom
Norweb
British Waterways Board
Civil Aviation Authority
Devaway Travel
Cheshire Bus
Starling Travel
Crosville Motor Services Ltd.
Smith Shearing Ltd.

Regional Road Construction Units

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date the regional road construction units were abolished.

Mr. Atkins: On 26 October 1981.

ENVIRONMENT

Agricultural Land

74. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much agricultural land was released for residential development in 1988 and in 1978.

Mr. Moynihan: My Department's land use change data show that in 1988 the Ordnance Survey recorded 3,700 hectares of land in England as changing from agricultural to residential use. Figures for 1978 are not available in this series. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Chope), gave my hon. Friend some MAFF data for earlier years, including 1978 on 14 December 1988 but the two sets of data are not directly comparable.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in rank order those local authorities whose 1990-91 standard spending assessments are less than 5 per cent. more than their 1989-90 grant-related expenditure assessments, showing their standard spending assessment, grant-related expenditure assessment and the percentage variation.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have today laid before the House the population report (England), the revenue support grant report (England) 1990-91, the revenue support grant distribution report (England) and the revenue support grant transition report (England). I have also laid the special grant report which makes provision for paying three special grants: towards community charge preparation costs in 1989-90; for areas of low rateable values for 1990-91 and for inner London education, also for 1990-91. Together these form the basis of the local authority grant settlement for 1990-91.

In all, local authorities will receive £23·1 billion of external support in 1990-91, an increase of 8·5 per cent. over the comparable figure for 1989-90. Of this, £9·490 billion will be revenue support grant. In order to ensure that authorities have adequate cash flow at the start of the new system, I propose to pay £2·373 billion (25 per cent) of this grant in April and May. This is about £800 million more than they might have expected to receive in these two months—a considerable cash flow advantage.

I have considered carefully the representations made to me about the consultation proposals issued in November. I have decided to confirm, and to embody in these reports, the main the proposals which I described in my statement on 6 November and put forward in the consultation paper. These proposals were the result of extensive work and discussions with the local authority associations. They are based on total standard spending of £32·8 billion and aggregate exchequer finance of £23·1 billion. This gives a community charge for standard spending of £278.

The standard spending assessment (SSA) methodology set out in the distribution report is substantively the same as that in the draft report issued on 6 November. I have, however, incorporated a revised formula for the highways maintenance SSA which properly reflects my desired treatment of winter maintenance.

As I proposed in November, there will be an area safety net giving protection against losses of more than £25 per adult, measured on the basis of various assumptions and definitions set out in the transition report. This will be paid for by gaining areas deferring part of their gain for a year.

I have placed in the Library a revised version of the exemplifications issued on 6 November.

The community charge figure shown in table 2 of the exemplifications is not a prediction of what the community charge will be in each area. It is my calculation of what the charge would be if each authority sought to raise from its residents an amount consistent with its behaviour in 1989-90 and with total standard spending of £32·8 billion for 1990-91. I intend that this assumed charge will also be used for the purposes of the transitional relief scheme.

There are a number of reasons for the differences between these figures and those published on 6 November. I have made a charge to the highways maintenance SSA; I have also been able to incorporate later figures for 1990-91 credit approvals in the capital financing SSA; I have also incorporated a better figure for budgeted expenditure by the receiver for the Metropolitan police district. There have been a few other minor changes to SSA data.

As I foreshadowed in November, grant entitlements, business rate income, safety nets and charge levels have been affected by the replacement of the population figures used earlier, based on data from the registrar general, by figures based on information from authorities' own charge registers, in accordance with the population report.

Authorities will now have all the information they need to press ahead with their budget setting and charge setting. These tables show that with the amount of external finance available to them the average community charge need be no more than £278, although of course charges will vary around that figure, as table 2 shows. The actual charge levels will depend on authorities' own decisions on spending and service provision.

I firmly believe that authorities should be able to keep their spending down in line with TSS of £32·8 billion. If they do not, the extra spending will fall on community charge payers and will have to be justified to them. I hope that charge payers will take the opportunity of the introduction of this much more accountable system to take a good look at what their authorities are spending. It is right that where this is more than the SSA, charge payers should be able to seek an explanation. And it is right that authorities should bear in mind the effects on charge payers when they make their budget decisions.

I will write to my hon. Friend.

Disabled Facilities Grants

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he intends to begin consultations on regulations concerning the proposed test of resources for disabled facilities grants under the Local Government and Housing Act 198. ;

(2) which organisations he plans to consult on regulations concerning the proposed test of resources for disabled facilities grants under the Local Government and Housing Act 1988.

Mr. Chope: Draft regulations on the test of resources for the new disabled facilities grant are currently being prepared. I propose to consult the local authority associations, professional institutions interested in housing, and bodies representing the views of disabled people.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he anticipates that Peat Marwick McLintock will report on its study into the administrative costs of the community charge transitional relief scheme.

Mr. Chope: I expect Peat Marwick McLintock to report soon on the costs of setting up and administering the community charge transitional relief scheme.

Common Land

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what steps he intends to take to ensure that registered commons in England and Wales, which have no registered common rights or only one right, are not deregistered;

(2) whether he will introduce legislation to safeguard common land.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 27 November 1989 to my hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Sir J. Farr), Official Report, Vol. 162, column 89.

Homelessness

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has recently consulted any housing pressure groups on the problems of homelessness and what solutions were discussed.

Mr. Chope: Following publication of our review of the homelessness legislation, we have continued to visit and consult voluntary organisations concerned with the relief and prevention of homelessness and the local authority associations. We have discussed the whole range of issues involved, but one of our main concerns has been to make progress with implementing the conclusions of our review.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will commission a study into the effect of controlled tenancies on homelessness;

(2) what assessment he has made of the effect of planning regulations and rent controls on homelessness.

Mr. Chope: The Housing Act 1988 is designed to encourage the supply of privately rented accommodation through deregulation of new tenancies. At the same time the Government are committed to retaining the rights of existing tenants with regulated tenancies. We will commission any necessary research on the effects of the Act in due course and continue to investigate and consult on the effect of planning regulations.

Environmental Matters (Information)

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Billericay of 14 December 1989, Official Report, column 754 if Her Majesty's Government intend to take additonal powers to require companies and individuals to provide information on environmental matters.

Mr. Trippier: In terms of the United Kingdom's contribution to the proposed European Environment Agency, Her Majesty's Government do not intend to take additional powers to require companies and individuals to provide information on environmental matters. The aim, shared by our Community partners, is to improve the co-ordination and comparability of existing information in a spirit of free co-operation to inform and support Community environmental policy. Any requests by the agency for new information will be subject to contractual agreements between the agency and the relevant contributors or individuals involved.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report those local authorities in England which have not submitted their waste disposal plans to his Department.

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many waste disposal authorities in England have now deposited waste disposal plans with his Department, pursuant to the Control of Pollution Act 1974, and how many have not yet done so.

Mr. Trippier: Forty-four authorities have now submitted either completed or draft plans while 15 single or groups of authorities have yet to submit a plan in any form. These 15 are listed below:

Essex
Nottingham
Shropshire
North London WA
City of London
City of Westminster
Tower Hamlets
Bexley
South London Waste Disposal Joint Committee
(London Borough of Bromley, Croydon, Kingston upon Thames, Merton and Sutton)
Greater Manchester WDA
Barnsley
Doncaster
Rotherham
Sheffield
West Midlands Joint Committee
(Birmingham, Coventry, Dudley, Sandwell, Solihull, Walsall and Wolverhampton District Councils)

I am considering further steps to ensure completion of the remaining plans.

Rechem International

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce his decision on the appeal by Rechem International against the licence conditions imposed by Hampshire county council.

Mr. Trippier: The appeal is being considered in the light of the exchange of representations, now completed, and the recent report of a site visit by an official from the Department.

"Closer to the People"

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received the report prepared by the National Association of Local Councils and the Association of District Councils, entitled "Closer to the People"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend has received the report. He has made it clear that major changes to the structure of local government are not on the Government's agenda.

Subsidence

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by location for (a) Severn-Trent Water and (b) Yorkshire Water, the number of subsidence claims that are outstanding with British Coal and the value of the claim against each location.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: This information is not held centrally.

Single-tier Local Government

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce a single tier of local government in the near future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend has no such plans.

Housing

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the output figures for (a) private industry and (b) public sector dwelling-units constructed in England and Wales for 1960, 1967, 1970, 1974, 1978, 1979, 1980, 1985 and 1988.

Mr. Chope: Housebuilding completions in England and Wales are given in the table:

Thousands

	Private enterprise	Housing associations	Local authorities, new towns and government departments
1959	146·5	1·1	101·8
1960	162·1	1·7	105·5
1967	192·9	4·8	165·2
1970	162·1	8·2	136·9
1974	129·6	9·4	102·1
1978	134·6	21·6	97·8
1979	125·3	17·3	78·1
1980	115·9	20·2	78·5
1985	140·6	11·9	24·4
1988	170·6	9·9	16·8

Greenhouse Effect

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any recent report on the contribution made to the greenhouse global warming effect from (a) leaks and (b) deliberate venting to the atmosphere of natural gas from the United Kingdom's domestic, commercial and industrial uses.

Mr. Trippier: Estimates of emissions of methane from gas leakage and oil and gas venting were formally made on a national basis for the first time in 1989 and will be published in the Department's annual "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics" early in 1990.

Sheltered Accommodation

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many units of local-authority-provided sheltered accommodation for the elderly currently exist in England.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 20 December 1989 to my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Brandon-Bravo) [Official Report, vol 164, columns 332-33].

Protection of Archives

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he intends to review his procedures on the protection of archives in the light of the accidental destruction of 12,000 archive files held by his Department.

Mr. Chris Patten: A review of our procedures and practices is being undertaken with the assistance of the Public Records Office.

Landfill Sites

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much of the special capital allocations set aside by his Department in order to deal with the problems of gassing landfill sites have so far been taken up by local authorites.

Mr. Trippier: A specific capital allocation for England of £33 million for remedial works in 1990-91 was announced on 15 November by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. Local authorities will shortly be invited to make bids. Five million pounds was also reserved for urgent remedial work in 1989-90 but was not taken up.

Land Tenure

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals have been made by the European Commission for the harmonisation of the systems of land tenure in the Community; and what response Her Majesty's Government have given.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am not aware of any such proposals.

Revenue Support Grant, Leicestershire

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the recent ministerial meeting with representatives of Leicestershire county council to discuss the county's revenue support grant allocation; what response the Under-Secretary of State made to the representations by the county council that the standard spending assessment was less than the uplifted grant-related expenditure assessments; and what action he has taken since the meeting in that regard.

Mr. Chope: The representatives of Leicestershire county council were provided with an explanation of the factors which led to significant differences between the county's grant-related expenditure assessment and its proposed standard spending assessment for 1990-91. All the representations made have been carefully considered by my right hon. Friend before he took his decisions on the settlement.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, in calculating the standard spending assessment for Leicestershire for the purposes of revenue support grant, he took account of the authorised increase in police manpower for the county in 1990-91; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Each authority's police component of its standard spending assessment (SSA) is its share of the total the Government are allowing nationally for the police service. In deciding this total my right hon. Friend took account of the increase in police manpower authorised for 1990-91. Each authority's share has been calculated in proportion to its police establishment as approved by the Home Secretary as available at 29 September 1989.

Sport and Active Recreation

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is (a) the estimated total cost and (b) the estimated cost to public funds of the review group for sport and active recreation provision in the inner cities including the cost of the report published in December 1989; and what is (i) the estimated total cost and (ii) the cost to public funds of the report.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 8 January 1990]: The estimated total cost of the review of sport and active recreation in the inner cities, including the cost of publishing the review report, is £80,500, of which £62,500 will be met from public funds and £18,000 from private sector sponsorship. The review group concluded that existing resources need to be targeted more effectively, with the private sector playing a greater role in partnership with the public and voluntary sectors. The Government will be giving careful consideration to appropriate follow-up action and are encouraging other organisations to do likewise. The cost implications of the report will depend on the way in which all these organisations decide to take forward implementation and are therefore not quantifiable at this stage.

Single European Market

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the changes in responsibility and activity of local authorities in consequence of the EEC's 1992 measures.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 10 January 1990]: Local authorities will be affected across a wide range of their activities by the completion of the internal market in 1992, which is aimed at removing physical, technical and fiscal barriers to trade in goods, services, capital and the movement and employment of people.

Local Government International Bureau

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contact he maintains with the Local Government International Bureau of 35 Great Smith street, London SW1; and if any public funds are made available by Her Majesty's Government and by the EEC to that body for its information programme on the 1992 programme or for any other purpose.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 10 January 1990]: My Department has frequent contacts with the Local Government International Bureau. Various central organisations serving local government, including the bureau, are part-funded by grants deducted from the total of revenue support grant which the Government make available to local authorities. I understand that the bureau also receives some European Community funds in support of its activities.

Pollution Inspectorate

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take in respect of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in response to the MINIS 10 report.

Mr. Chris Patten: MINIS provides an annual system for determining aims and objectives, setting targets and reviewing performace for each major activity undertaken by my Department. I shall be reviewing the performance targeted in Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution MINIS 10 in MINIS 11, which is now commencing.

English Heritage

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a list of all those documents belonging to English Heritage which have been destroyed as a result of a clerical error.

Mr. Chris Patten: English Heritage and my Department are looking into this matter and will inform the hon. Gentleman of the outcome of our review.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Malawi

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs further to his answer of 27 November, Official Report, column 91, if he will provide a breakdown of the use to which British aid to Malawi was put (a) in 1987 and (b) in 1988.

Mrs. Chalker: Following is the further information requested. Figures are calculated on the same basis as for my previous reply.

United Kingdom aid to Malawi 1987 and 1988

£'000

	1987	1988
Project Aid	2,342	6,144
Aid and Trade Provision	1,657	1,410

THE ARTS

UNESCO Convention

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts in the light of the representations of the Society of Antiquaries on the theft and sale of works of art, whether he will now sign the UNESCO convention.

Mr. Luce: I am not convinced that signing the UNESCO convention would help to overcome the particular anxieties of the Society of Antiquaries.

Works of Art (Export)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the referral to the review committee on the export of works of art of the case of the 340 million-year-old Bathgate paleontological finds.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 8 January 1990]: The Bathgate fossil, popularly known as "Lizzie the Lizard", was referred to the reviewing committee on 8 December 1989. However, it was subsequently decided that fossils are not covered by the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1987 (SI 1987 No. 2070) and the Department of Trade and Industry notified the interested parties on 21 December to this effect.

DEFENCE

HMS Talent

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the accident which caused a spillage of cooling liquid from the nuclear submarine HMS Talent at the VSEL shipyard in Barrow on 4 December; what volume of radioactive liquids were released; and what were the health implications for Royal Naval personnel and the general public in south Cumbria.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the spillage of contaminated cooling liquid from HMS Talent at the VSEL shipyard at Barrow-in-Furness; what precautions were taken; what health risks arose; and whether any civilian or service personnel were treated in hospital.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There was a leak of coolant water from HMS Talent at Barrow, at 4.40 am on 4 December. The level of radioactivity in the water was extremely low. The coolant was being pumped to an external tank when a pipe split and approximately 140 litres were released into the dock. There was no danger to the submarine's reactor. Monitoring of the water in the dock failed to detect any radiation above the normal background and there are no health implications for either Royal Navy personnel or the general public. The incident has been fully investigated and appropriate action taken.

Ambulances

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many armed forces ambulances based overseas have been withdrawn from service, and used in the ambulance dispute in the United Kingdom; what countries they came from; and where they were deployed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Transport of Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from members of the public and local organisations about the transport of nuclear weapons through the Doncaster metropolitan borough council area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am aware of no recent representations on this subject received by my right hon. Friend.

Search and Rescue Helicopters

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will institute an inquiry into the incident on 3 January when a search and rescue helicopter from HMS Gannet diverted to Glasgow in the course of a rescue mission in order to pick up a television crew before proceeding to the search area.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The circumstances of the incident have been investigated. On Thursday 4 January, a Royal Navy Sea King helicopter from HMS Gannet was asked to assist a mountain rescue team with a preplanned search operation for three civilians lost on Ben Nevis. Shortly before departure, an ITN camera team asked HMS Gannet if they could be picked up at Glasgow airport and be taken along to film the search. Since Glasgow was on the direct flight path from HMS Gannet to Ben Nevis, authority for this was given with the agreement of the rescue co-ordination centre at Pitreavie on the conditions that carrying the camera team would in no way prejudice the helicopter's ability to carry out its task and that its rendezvous with the mountain rescue team at Fort William would not be delayed beyond the agreed time of 0830. There was considered to be sufficient flexibility in the flight plan for this to be possible and the commitment to pick up the ITN crew was undertaken on this basis.

However, in the event, a radio breakdown delayed the departure from HMS Gannet and the helicopter was some 45 minutes late on arriving at Fort William. The embarkation of the ITN crew at Glasgow airport added only marginally to the delay as weather conditions on the route taken were significantly better than on the normal, coastal route to Ben Nevis. The search was successful and the three civilians were recovered by the helicopter.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards search and rescue helicopters carrying journalists and television crews while flying rescue operations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Our policy is to consider favourably such requests from the media, but only on the condition that their carriage in no way prejudices the rescue mission.

RAF Molesworth

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the future of RAF Molesworth.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: RAF Molesworth has been placed on a care and maintenance basis since the USAF 303rd tactical missile wing was disbanded in January 1989.

The base was specially developed in 1985-87 to house the ground-launched cruise missiles of the 303rd tactical missile wing. Both the military and domestic infrastructure remain in excellent condition and there are a number of specialist facilities on the base which it would be difficult and expensive to remove. Some of these facilities are subject to inspection by the Soviet Union for the next 11 years under the terms of the INF treaty. However, the INF treaty does not prohibit the use of former GLCM bases for other military purposes.

The Government have been discussing with the United States and NATO authorities alternative military roles for RAF Molesworth which would make good use of the existing facilities while remaining consistent with the terms of the INF treaty. As a result of these discussions the Government have agreed that, subject to the normal planning procedures, the United States European Command may develop the site as its joint analysis centre. The role of this unit is to process and analyse military information from a variety of sources for the benefit of the United States, the United Kingdom and NATO.

The joint analysis centre will be constructed on a fresh site within the base at RAF Molesworth and will not be subject to Soviet inspection. Major construction work is planned to start in 1991 and completed in 1995. In addition, many of the existing facilities at the base will be modified to support the joint analysis centre and this work is planned to start shortly.

Eventually some 700 United States personnel, some of whom are currently located at RAF Alconbury and some in West Germany, will be assigned to Molesworth. This is a similar number to those stationed at the base with the 303rd tactical missile wing.

In addition, certain buildings at RAF Molesworth will be converted to accommodate the Northern region command centre, the wartime headquarters for the United States Third Air Force, while other buildings will be used for administrative purposes as an annex to RAF Alconbury. The Government consider that these developments will make optimum use of a valuable military installation for the benefit of the United States, the United Kingdom and NATO.

RAF Greenham Common

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the extinguishment of commoners' rights at RAF Greenham Common.

Mr. Neubert: As my hon. Friend the Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman) explained on 29 April 1988, col. 310, it had been decided to negotiate fair compensation for the legal extinguishment of the rights of common over land owned by the Ministry of Defence at Greenham and Crookham commons, which the Department intended to pursue under the provisions of the Defence Act 1854. There is no general right of access for the public over this land; and the only people enjoying such rights are the 64 commoners. However, in view of the commoners' concerns about the loss of these rights, the Ministry of Defence has since been discussing with them a compromise solution which would have preserved their rights over a substantial area of the base while meeting essential legal and defence requirements. If the commoners would agree not to exercise their rights over the remainder of the area for as long as the base is required for defence purposes, my Department would be prepared only to extinguish their rights over those parts of the base upon which development for defence purposes has already taken place or might take place. This would leave a substantial area of the Ministry of Defence land in question subject to common rights.

Such an arrangement could be put into effect only if agreed by all the commoners and the Department has been anxious to give the commoners every opportunity to consider the proposal. However, more than a year has passed since the original offer was made, and the commoners were informed on 14 December 1989 that there would be no alternative but to proceed as originally proposed unless they had all signed the agreement by 5 January. On that date three of the 64 registered commoners had failed to sign the agreement and we have regrettably been forced to conclude that agreement on the basis of the compromise solution to full extinguishment will not be possible. The Ministry of Defence now, therefore, intends to proceed with the legal formalities to extinguish all rights of common over the MOD property on both commons.

This action is being taken to remove a legal obstacle to construction on MOD property. It is legally quite distinct from the question of the legality of the bye-laws at RAF Greenham Common which is being pursued separately through the courts. No decisions have yet been taken on any alternative roles for the base once the cruise missiles are withdrawn, but RAF Greenham Common has been designated as a NATO standby operating base for many years and we envisage that this role will continue.

ENERGY

Civil Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, in formulating his response to the Energy Committee report on British Nuclear Fuels plc Report and Accounts

1987-88, paragraph 6, page vi, on the safeguards arrangements for civil plutonium, he took into account the proposals set out in the closing submission by the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament (CND-5) to the Hinkley C inquiry.

Mr. Baldry: My Department took into account all relevant information before preparing its response.

Oil Exports (South Africa)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the scope for co-operation with the United Nations monitoring group covering oil shipping to South Africa.

Mr. Wakeham: The United Kingdom opposed the 1986 United Nations General Assembly resolution which called on the Security Council to introduce a mandatory oil embargo against South Africa and established the oil shipment monitoring organisation. Our policy is unchanged.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will place in the Library the United Kingdom's guidelines prohibiting crude oil exports to South Africa.

Mr. Wakeham: The Government have made clear to companies exporting North sea crude oil that they expect them to do so in the markets of our European Community and International Energy Agency partners, or where there is an existing pattern of trade. South Africa does not come within any of those categories. The guidelines were announced by the then Secretary of State for Energy on 31 January 1979 [Official Report, col. 461].

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what factors have affected the time taken by his officials to investigate the alleged breach of the United Kingdom's guidelines prohibiting crude oil exports to South Africa by the tanker Almare Terza;

(2) when his officials started their investigation into the alleged breach of the United Kingdom's guidelines prohibiting crude oil exports to South Africa by the tanker Almare Terza; and when he expects this investigation to be completed.

Mr. Wakeham: Some progress has been made in following the chain of events. Investigations into complex matters of this sort necessarily take time to complete and it is not possible to put a date on the completion of these inquiries.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he takes to monitor United Kingdom involvement in oil shipping to South Africa.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department receives notification of every cargo of exported UKCS crude oil, including the name of the ship, the date of departure, and intended destination. However, it is not possible for me to monitor accurately the final destination of every barrel.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what were for each year since 1985 the volume and the value of petroleum products exported to South Africa, broken down by type of petroleum product.

Mr. Wakeham: Exports of petroleum products to South Africa since 1985 were as follows:

United Kingdom petroleum product exports to South Africa
(by volume and value)

National Energy Foundation

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the outcome of his meeting with the director and trustees of the National Energy Foundation on 20 December 1989.

Mr. Wakeham: I had a most interesting and useful meeting with representatives of the National Energy Foundation. Among the topics discussed where the foundation's plans for the development of an energy rating system for housing (which would indicate the energy efficiency of houses by means of a rating scale) and proposals for a national energy centre at Milton Keynes.

I welcomed the opportunity to discuss the foundation's plans, and look forward to a constructive working relationship between the foundation and my Energy Efficiency Office.

Electricity Bills

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) how estimated electricity bills to domestic consumers are calculated;

(2) if he will give for each year since 1979 and for each area board the number of electricity bills to domestic consumers which have been estimated;

(3) if he will give for each year since 1979 and for each area board the number of complaints from domestic consumers about estimated electricity bills;

(4) if he will give for each year since 1979 and for each area board the number of electricity bills to domestic consumers which have recorded credits due to over-estimation in the use of electricity in previous bills.

Mr. Wakeham: These are matters for the electricity supply industry. I will ask the chairman of the Electricity Council to write to the hon. Member.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision is to be taken by the post in Islamabad on the application of Mr. Rashad Mahmood, who was born in 1968, Ref. IASP/P/40627; serial No. 81159, to join his wife in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: In accordance with the guidelines on the handling of representations by Members of Parliament in immigration cases, issued to Members on 14 December 1988, I have referred the question to the correspondence unit of the migration and visa department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The hon. Member will receive a reply from the unit as soon as possible.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the post in Islamabad adopted a policy of expediting settlement applications in cases when DNA test results were positive and there were no other factors affecting an application being considered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: In Islamabad, or at any other overseas post where a DNA test is undertaken, first-time applicants producing DNA-positive evidence are dealt with in their turn in the queue. As I stated in my letter of 21 December 1989, re-applicants producing DNA-positive evidence are fast-streamed when:

(i) there is no issue to address other than confirmation of the claimed relationship, for example, in right-of-abode cases; or

(ii) proof of relationship confers British nationality on other members of the same family; in such cases, in order to keep families together, applications for entry clearance and British passports are considered at the same time.

Where, however, other requirements of the immigration rules need also to be satisfied, such as support and accommodation, re-applicants will continue to wait their turn in Q4.

These arrangements have been in force since the early part of last year.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the post in Islamabad received instructions to issue a passport to Shamim Ayaz, Ref. H 162359; Imm/15031, enabling him to join his father in the United Kingdom; how many times Shamim Ayaz has been invited to call at the post in Islamabad; why he has not, to date, been issued with a visa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department on 8 January to the hon. Member.

Radioactive Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans there are for the disposal of radioactive waste arising from the joint Hong Kong-Guangdong nuclear power plant at Daya Bay.

Mr. Maude: These are matters for the Chinese authorities. Nevertheless, I understand that the intention is for there to be initial treatment and storage on-site followed by transfer off-site to permanent storage or disposal facilities.

Refugees

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of British aid for refugee camps on the Thai-Cambodian border is spent on employing protection officers under the auspices of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees to prevent refugees being disturbed by political or military groups.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is not possible to identify the percentage of British aid for refugee camps spent on employing protection officers. UNHCR has responsibility for two refugee camps on the Thai-Cambodian border and employs 12 officers who carry out protection and other duties. Funding for these officers comes from the general pool of UNHCR money.

Human Rights

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information on the human rights situation in other countries is regularly compiled by his Department; and whether such information is made public.

Mr. Sainsbury: We compile a wide range of information on such situations on a continuing basis.

We do not publish all the information that we collect. Much of its is, in any case, already publicly available.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what training on details of international human rights standards and on the monitoring and assessment of the human rights situation in the country in which they are working is given to British diplomats overseas.

Mr. Sainsbury: Before a posting overseas, diplomats are given comprehensive briefing on all aspects of life in that country, including the human rights situation. In addition, officers whose duties specifically include human rights issues get more detailed briefing, including from non-governmental organisations.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether British embassies and overseas missions are required to report regularly to his Department on the human rights situation in their country.

Mr. Sainsbury: Yes.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether military and police training given by Britain to other countries always includes training in the protection of human rights.

Mr. Sainsbury: Respect for human rights is fundamental and underlies all British police and military training. It is therefore integral to the training of overseas students.

Hong Kong

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Chief Police Officer in Hong Kong sought permission from the Governor and Ministers of Her Majesty's Government in advance of using force and tear gas on Vietnamese on Lantau island, in the Crown Territories of Hong Kong after Christmas.

Mr. Maude: The operation was carried out only after protracted efforts by the Hong Kong Government and UNHCR and voluntary agency staff to persuade the boat people to allow the camp to be searched for weapons. When it was clear that the boat people would not co-operate, those in charge of the operation were authorised to use the minimum force necessary to ensure its success. Over 700 home-made weapons were subsequently found.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Steel

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent communications he has had with the chairman of British Steel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: In the past few months, I have had communications with the chairman of British Steel in connection with a number of European issues affecting the steel industry, including the Community's voluntary restraint agreement with the United States of America and about British Steel's proposed acquisition of C. Walker and Sons.

Mergers and Acquisitions

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress is being made in removing the barriers to British firms seeking to pursue mergers and acquisitions within the European Community.

Mr. Redwood: At the December Internal Market Council the Commission undertook to bring forward proposals by the end of March 1990 for the reduction and elimination of a range of practices that serve as barriers to takeovers. The Council undertook to examine the proposals in due course, taking particular account of the objective of completing the internal market. The DTI has commissioned and published a report by Coopers and Lybrand—which is available in the Library—which sets out the range of barriers that need to be addressed.

Passenger Liners

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many passenger liners are currently being built in the member countries of the EEC; and if he will publish a list of the number of such vessels ranging in displacement from 3,500 tonnes upwards that are due to be launched in 1990, indicating in each case the countries where they are being built.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Twenty four passenger ships—other than ferries—were on order books of EC shipyards at the end of the third quarter of 1989. The other information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Engineering Industry

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many new jobs have been created in the engineering industry in the west midlands since 1986.

Mr. Forth: There are no official statistics available to show the extent of job creation in the engineering industry over the period in question. Since the beginning of 1986, however, a total of 944 offers of regional selective assistance have been made to engineering companies in the west midlands and those are expected to lead to the creation of 20,000 new jobs.

Securities and Investments Board (Chairman)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next plans to meet the chairman of the SIB; and what will be discussed.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 21 December 1989]: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of the Securities and Investments Board as frequently as is necessary. I expect to meet him shortly when a range of topics concerning the regulation of financial services will be discussed.

Internal Market

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the number of European Community directives issued consequent to the decisions to complete the internal market by 1992; and what is the number of such directives passed into the domestic law of each member state respectively as at 31 December 1989.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 8 January]: By 31 December 1989 the Council had adopted some 140 directives in the context of the Commission's programme for completing the single market, of which 77 are required to be in force in member states. Details on the state of implementation of those 77 measures in the individual states was given in a reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Corby (Mr. Powell), Official Report, 9 January, columns 600-08.

Since publication of that answer the following directives have been implemented in the United Kingdom:

(i) Tractors and Agricultural Machines: Implementation of Dir 74/150, weight dimensions etc Dir 89/173.

(ii) Other Items: Cosmetics Dir 88/667.

British Flag

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many vessels of more than 10,000 tonnes displacement now operate under the British flag.

Mr. Patrick McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply. At the end of November 1989, the numbers of vessels of more than 10,000 deadweight tonnes registered under the British flag were:

	Number
United Kingdom registry	111
Isle of Man or Channel Island registries	43
Dependent territory registries	269

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Letter Board

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is his estimate of the cost incurred by the House of hon. Members having to use franked envelopes to communicate with colleagues when they have reached their limit of six unposted letters on the Members' letter board; whether he will consider establishing a more convenient and inexpensive system; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: It is not possible to estimate the cost of postage incurred by hon. Members who wish to communicate with their colleagues other than by means of the letter board. The efficiency of the letter board system depends on a limit of acceptance of six letters daily from each hon. Member. I have asked the authorities of the House to discuss alternative distribution systems with the hon. Member.

Mail

Mr. Snape: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will introduce a system for delivery of post for those hon. Members requesting it to a central location in the various outbuildings of the Palace of Westminster for collection on Monday to Friday.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Mail for hon. Members may be redirected by the House of Commons post office to the parliamentary outbuildings on application to the Postmaster, but this service would result in a delivery some hours later than mail is available at the House post office. Alternatively, correspondence may be addressed direct to the oubuildings and the full addresses of individual buildings are available from the Postmaster. The policy for the distribution of mail within the precincts is a matter for consideration initially by the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee of the Services Committee and the hon. Member may wish to write to the Chairman about it.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Sunday Trading

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Attorney-General if he has received any representations following the European Court of Justice decision on Sunday trading made on 23 November 1989; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I commonly receive representations from diverse sources on the enforcement of the legislation relating to Sunday trading, and I have continued to receive such representations since the European Court of Justice gave its judgment in case 145/88 on 23 November 1989.

The task of interpreting the judgment of the European Court of Justice now falls to the national courts both in the case in which the judgment has been given and in any other cases to which it may be relevant. I understand that a very large number of cases were adjourned to await the decision of the European Court. The way is now open for those cases to proceed to a conclusion.

A duty to enforce the Sunday trading legislation was expressly imposed on local authorities by section 71 of the Shops Act 1950. I said in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Orpington (Mr. Stanbrook) on 17 April 1989 that in my view local authorities did not cease to be bound by that duty while the decision of the European Court was awaited, and they continue to be under that duty now that the decision of the European Court has been given.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Growth

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps his Department is taking to help increase the net contribution to employment growth among firms with between 20 and 50 employees.

Mr. Eggar: The Government's policy is to create a beneficial climate for small businesses generally, mainly by encouraging conditions of fair competition and minimising regulation, and by providing a complementary range of fiscal, financial and advisory measures.

Within this policy, my own Department's services include the loan guarantee scheme, action to improve Government purchasing opportunities, the small firms service and a wide range of training schemes for small businesses. All these services offer particular benefits to firms with growth potential, including those with more than 20 employees.

Among the training schemes the new business growth training programme, introduced in April last year, contains a number of options which are particularly relevant to this group and which are designed to help them plan and manage their growth.

I have also taken action to alert small business organisations to recent research published by my Department showing a relatively poor job creation record by firms employing 20 to 49 staff. These firms face substantial market, management and technological challenges which they can meet more successfully with the support of the network of organisations representing or providing a service to small businesses.

Overseas Spending

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate he has as to the amount spent overseas by United Kingdom residents during 1989; and what was the figure for the previous 12 months.

Mr. Nicholls: It is estimated that United Kingdom residents spent £8,370 million overseas during the first 10 months of 1989, the latest period for which estimates are available. During 1988 as a whole, United Kingdom residents spent an estimated £8,228 million overseas.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of its planned programme of basic inspections the Health and Safety Executive area offices (a) 01 south-west, (b) 02 south, (c) 03 south-east, (d) 05/06 London north and south, (e) 07 East Anglia, (f) 08 northern home counties, (g) 09 east midlands, (h) 10 west midlands, (i) 11 Wales, (j) 12 Marches, (k) 13 north midlands, (l) 14 South Yorkshire and Humberside, (m) 15 West and North Yorkshire, (n) 20 Scotland east and (o) 21 Scotland west have achieved in the half year from 1 April to 31 October 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: The plan of the Health and Safety Executive's factory inspectorate is based on proportions of time to be spent on different aspects of its work. The information requested is given in the table:

Preventive inspection visits made as a percentage of the total number of visits it was estimated would be carried out in the half year 1 April 1989 to 30 September 1989

Area	Per cent.
01 South West	88·6
02 South	106·4
03 South East	107·5
05/06 London North and South	79·8
07 East Anglia	93·8
08 Northern Home Counties	80·3
09 East Midlands	103·5
10 West Midlands	109·5
11 Wales	99·6
12 Marches	108·8
13 North Midlands	89·7
14 South Yorkshire and Humberside	87·5
15 West and North Yorkshire	93·9
20 Scotland East	98·1
21 Scotland West	75·1

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the establishment of a training and enterprise council in Hampshire.

Mr. Eggar: An application for development funding of a TEC in Hampshire was approved on 12 July 1989. The TEC board is working on the corporate plan and I expect the TEC to be fully operational in the summer of 1990.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consideration he has given to ensuring that training and enterprise councils are not financially disadvantaged by taking on disabled people who may have greater difficulty in meeting outcome targets.

Mr. Eggar: The number of people with disabilities who have special training needs will be an important consideration when a TEC's funds are agreed. The difficulties that some people with disabilities may face in achieving outcomes will be taken into account when targets are negotiated.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consideration he has given to the establishment of a national training and enterprise council to meet the specific needs of disabled people.

Mr. Eggar: I have no plans to establish a national training and enterprise council to meet the specific needs of people with disabilities. Every TEC will be required to set out in its plans how it intends to meet the needs of people with disabilities in its area.

Redundant Mineworkers' Payments Scheme

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the numbers and percentages of unemployed persons removed from all English and Welsh unemployment registers as a result of changes that took effect in August 1989 in the redundant mineworkers' payments scheme, by region.

Mr. Nicholls: The latest estimates of the number of mineworkers who have decided to take advantage of the change in the redundant mineworkers' payment scheme are given in the following table. There has been little or no effect in the Greater London, south-east, East Anglia, and south-west regions.

Region	Estimated effect[1]	Percentage effect[2]
West Midlands	500	0·3
East Midlands	4,500	4·3
Yorkshire and Humberside	3,500	2·0
North West	500	0·2
North	2,000	1·5
Wales	500	0·5

[1]These estimates are derived from latest available information and are subject to revision.
[2]Using August 1989 unadjusted unemployment totals.

Ko Hsuan School, North Devon

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many work permits have been issued to foreign nationals to work at the Ko Hsuan school in Chawleigh, North Devon.

Mr. Eggar: We have no record of any work permits being issued to this school.

Earnings

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of national average earnings was earned by the lowest paid decile of workers in each decade since 1960; and what are the comparable figures, so far as available for (a) France, (b) Germany, (c) the United States of America, (d) Sweden, and (e) Japan.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information for Great Britain is published in table 15 of part A of the NES reports for 1979 and 1989, copies of which are in the Library. Comparable data for the other countries are not available.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

National Curriculum

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of documents relating to the national curriculum are issued on recycled paper.

Mrs. Rumbold: National curriculum subject orders and associated documents under section 4 of the 1988 Education Reform Act are published in ring-binders made of recycled paper. The Department is continuing to look for opportunities for using recycled paper.

Supply Teachers

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to remove the discretion by local education authorities in England and Wales as to the scale point used in the payment of supply teachers.

Mrs. Rumbold: No.

Education Support Grants

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the increased volume of underspending on education support grants 1988-89 shown in Class XII Vote 1; and what changes have been made for 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The size of each year's Vote for education support grants (ESGs) depends not on the overall total for that year's ESG programme, but rather on the amount of grant still to be paid in respect of previous years' ESG programmes as well as the amount expected to be paid within the financial year on the current year's programme. The size of the underspend on a given year's Vote will reflect both the success of local education authorities in submitting grant claims promptly, and the size of successive ESG programmes. To increase the proportion of grant paid during the financial year in which the expenditure is incurred, authorites will from this year on be invited to submit, before the end of the financial year in question, a claim for expenditure incurred during the last quarter, 50 per cent. of which may be paid before the year end.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a list of those local education authorities which, in respect of education support grant claims for 1988-89 (a) have claimed significantly less than the maximum allocated amount for that year or (b) have not yet made either final claims for all quarters of 1987-88 or a provisional end-of-year claim, showing for each of (a) and (b) the amount underspent or apparently unclaimed.

Mr. Alan Howarth: It is for individual local education authorities to determine whether they wish to claim all the education support grant (ESG) allocated to them. Among the 90 authorities in England who have to date submitted final claims for the 1988-89 programme, the average rate of claim is over 90 per cent. of expenditure approved. But 15 of those authorities have claimed grant on less than 85 per cent. of expenditure approved. The details are:

Amount of approved expenditure not spent

LEA	£
Barnet	132,138
Enfield	268,731
Haringey	156,627
Newham	160,300
Birmingham	417,246
Walsall	152,365
Sefton	241,707
Tameside	146,750
Wigan	286,400
South Tyneside	257,770
Berkshire	394,718
Buckinghamshire	299,131
Devon	427,668
Kent	591,877
Lincolnshire	235,627

In addition, seven local education authorities have not yet submitted a final claim. They are:

Amount of approved expenditure on which grant has not yet been claimed

Local education authorities	£
Merton	97,459
Waltham Forest	175,655
Leeds	392,800
Hertfordshire	765,707
Norfolk	367,590
Northamptonshire	999,860
Oxfordshire	384,519

All authorities have now submitted final claims for 1987-88.

Teacher Training Grants

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the increased volume of underspending on in-service teacher training grants 1988-89 shown in Class XII, Vote 1, 12; and what changes have been made for 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Vote provision for the local education authority training grants scheme, which was introduced on 1 April 1987, is for the payment of grant to local education authorities in response to claims submitted by those authorities in respect of training that they have provided. Vote provision for this purpose in 1988-89 was £130 million, expenditure was £89·2 million and the underspending was £40·8 million. The corresponding figures for 1987-88 were provision, £105 million, outturn £79·4 million and underspending £25·6 million.

The underspend in 1987-88 resulted from local authorities submitting claims later than expected outside the year to which they related. This was also the case in 1988-89 when, in addition, authorities were late in submitting audit certificates for 1987-88 without payments for claims under the 1988-89 programme submitted after 1 October 1988 could not be made.

The provision for 1989-90 is £130 million. Late claims for previous years of the scheme will continue to be paid from the Vote provision as soon as possible after their submission. No changes have been made to the arrangements for payments in 1989-90 and no decision has yet been taken on the arrangements for 1990-91.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a list of those local education authorities which in respect of in-service teacher training grant claims for 1988-89 (a) have claimed significantly less than the maximum allocated amount for that year or (b) have not yet made either final claims for all quarters of 1987-88 or a provisional end-of-year claim showing for each of (a) and (b) the amount underspent or apparently unclaimed.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The following LEAs underspent by 5 per cent. or more in 1988-89:

Local Education Authority	Total amount unclaimed	Underspend as percentage of total maxima
Bromley	183,000	16·7
Haringey	[1]421,315	44·5
Kent	534,000	9·0
Liverpool	[1]497,400	20·9
Oldham	[1]52,528	5·0
Walsall	[1]76,555	5·9

[1] provisional end-of-year claims only.

Newham has not yet submitted an end-of-year claim for 1988-89; the total amount yet to be claimed is £371,889.

There are no authorities that have not yet made either final claims for all quarters of 1987-88 or a provisional end-of-year claim for that year.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what amount and proportion of the 1987-88 Vote provision for the in-service teacher training grant scheme realted to (a) areas of national priority and (b) areas of local priority; what amount and proportion of claims made for 1987-88 relate to each of (a) and (b); what further information is available as to the breakdown of expenditure claims between separate national priorities; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what amount and proportion of the 1988-89 Vote provision for the in-service teacher training grant scheme related to (a) areas of national priority and (b) areas of local priority; what amount and proportion of claims made for 1988-89 relate to each of (a) and (b); what further information is available as to the breakdown of expenditure claims between separate national priorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The level of Vote provision in 1987-88 was based on an estimate of the likely claims by local education authorities under the local education authority training grants scheme in 1987-88, and the in-service teacher training grants scheme, which preceded the local education authority training grants scheme, for the years prior to 1987-88. The level in 1988-89 was based on a similar estimate covering that year and previous years. Because Vote provision is calculated to meet local authorities' overall claims, no further breakdown is made between the areas of training to which the claims relate. such an analysis could be made only at disproportionate cost. Local authorities have been told that delays in submitting claims will be taken into account in setting their allocations of grant for future years.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the expenditure on in-service teacher training grants 1988-89 shown in Class XII Vote 1, 12 includes any amount relating to late claims made for 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Yes. A total of nearly £5 million expenditure relating to late claims for local education authority expenditure in 1987-88 was included in the expenditure for 1988-89.

Ko Hsuan School, North Devon

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will instigate an investigation into the operation, teaching curriculum, and control of students at the Ko Hsuan school in Chawleigh, north Devon.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The proprietor of the Ko Hsuan school has already been asked for a full explanation of the events leading to the death of one of its pupils, and of all facts and circumstances relating to those events. My right hon. Friend will decide in the light of the response what further action, if any, may be appropriate.

Independent Schools

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what powers he has to investigate and to control the teaching curriculum, teaching methods, staff qualifications and control of pupils at independent schools.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend has powers under section 71 of the Education Act 1944 (as amended) to serve a notice of complaint upon the proprietor of an independent school if he is satisfied that a school is objectionable on certain specified grounds. These include instances where efficient and suitable instruction is not being provided or the proprietor or any teacher is not a proper person.

Failure to comply with a notice of complaint will cause the school to be deleted from the register of independent schools. It is an offence to act as proprietor of or a teacher in an independent school while disqualified by an order made by the Secretary of State following a notice of complaint. A school has a right of appeal to the independent schools tribunal against a notice of complaint.

In addition, under section 77(2) of the Education Act 1944, my right hon. Friend may also cause a special inspection of any school to be made whenever he considers such an inspection to be desirable.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Private Medical Insurance

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the cost to the Exchequer of tax reliefs on private medical insurance.

Mr. Lilley: The 1989-90 Financial Statement and Budget report estimated that the cost of tax relief for private medical insurance for those aged 60 and over will be about £40 million in 1990-91.

Philip Core

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the outcome of the investigation by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise of the material they intercepted belonging to the late Philip Core; and where are its present whereabouts.

Mr. Ryder: Goods imported into the United Kingdom by post for Mr. Philip Core were intercepted and examined by Customs. They contained a book and photographs which were considered to be obscene under section 42 of the Customs Consolidation Act 1876 and accordingly they were seized as forfeit. Mr. Core appealed against seizure and condemnation proceedings were instituted under schedule 3 to the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979. On Thursday 9 November 1989, condemnation proceedings were commenced in Wells Street magistrates court, but adjourned until 20 November for consideration of certain legal points.

Sadly, Mr. Core died on 13 November and, at the adjourned hearing on 20 November, it was disclosed that he had died intestate. The case was adjourned to 11 January 1990 when it will be decided whether Mr. Core's administrators wish to continue the proceedings.

In accordance with normal practice, the offending material is still in the possession of Customs pending the outcome of court proceedings.

Commercial Borrowing

Mr. Speller: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to bring down the cost of commercial borrowing by smaller business industry and home owners.

Mr. Ryder: The Government will not reduce interest rates until that can be safely done without risk to inflation. Everyone has far more to fear from a resurgence of inflation than from a period of higher interest rates.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the latest retail prices index figure; what percentage of this covers the mortgage interest element; what were the comparable figures in 1975 and 1976; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The table summarises the information requested:

	All-items RPI annual inflation rate	Contribution of the mortgage interest payments component to the RPI inflation rate per cent.	per cent. points
November 1989	7·7	2
November 1976	15·0	¼
November 1975	25·2	Not available

Taxation

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will investigate the extent of tax avoidance and evasion through the creation of business transactions carried out solely or mainly for tax reasons between United Kingdom based trusts, companies and individuals and trusts and companies based in (a) Jersey, (b) the Isle of Man, (c) Guernsey, (d) the Netherlands Antilles, (e) the Cayman Islands and (f) Liechtenstein during the last five years;

(2) if he will make it his policy to review all high court cases involving the Inland Revenue in seeking to recover £1 million or more of tax revenue and to bring in legislation to prevent the loss of such tax revenue where it has been lost as a result of transactions created between United Kingdom based companies, trusts and individuals and companies or trusts or individuals based in (a) Jersey, (b) the Isle of Man, (c) Guernsey, (d) the Netherlands Antilles, (e) the Cayman Islands and (f) Liechtenstein;

(3) if he will publish an annual table of information about tax avoidance and tax evasion by United Kingdom based trusts, individuals and companies through transactions created with trusts and companies in (a) Jersey, (b) the Isle of Man, (c) Guernsey, (d) the Netherlands Antilles, (e) the Cayman Islands and (f) Liechtenstein;

(4) if he will set up a system requiring the prior notification to the Inland Revenue of business transactions between United Kingdom-based trusts, companies and individuals and trusts and companies based in (a) Jersey, (b) the Isle of Man, (c) Guernsey, (d) the Netherlands Antilles, (e) the Cayman Islands and (f) Liechtenstein;

(5) what proposals he has to prevent tax revenue being lost to the Exchequer through the use of business transactions created solely or mainly for tax reasons between United Kingdom-based trusts, individuals and companies and trusts and companies in (a) Jersey, (b) the Isle of Man, (c) Guernsey, (d) the Netherlands Antilles, (e) the Cayman Islands and (f) Liechtenstein;

(6) if he will make it his policy to bring forward amendments to company law to prevent tax avoidance and evasion by United Kingdom companies through the creation of business transactions solely or mainly for tax purposes with companies, trusts and individuals based in (a) the Cayman Islands, (b) the Netherlands Antilles, (c) Guernsey, (d) the Isle of Man, (e) Jersey and (f) Liechtenstein; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 10 January 1990]: The Inland Revenue devotes substantial resources to countering tax avoidance and evasion including the kind of offshore transactions involving tax havens to which the questions refer. Where appropriate the Government would not hesitate to bring forward such further legislation as was found to be necessary.

To require general notifications of business transactions with tax havens would, however, impose a substantial and unreasonable burden on business.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Eastern Health Board

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much of the additional £50,000 allocated by the Eastern health board to the North Down and Ards unit of management was intended for the wages of home helps and how much for the salaries of clerical and administrative staff.

Mr. Needham: The allocation will be used to provide an additional 15,000 home help hours in a full year. None of it will be used for the salaries of either clerical or administrative staff.

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northen Ireland what effect he estimates the appointment of a manager for each unit of management in the Eastern health board area will have on the cost of administration and the numbers of staff.

Mr. Needham: As part of the management restructuring exercise being undertaken by the Eastern health and social services board the present 14 units of management are being reorganised to form nine units with effect from 1 April 1990. A unit general manager has been appointed to each and the cost of the introduction of the new structures will be met within the board's overall provision for management costs.

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the number of full-time clerical and administrative staff employed by the North Down and Ards unit of management of the Eastern health and social services board in the years 1986-87 to the present day; and what was the total cost of their salaries and associated expenses.

Mr. Needham: The information requested in respect of clerical and administrative staff in the North Down and Ards unit of management is in the table:

Year	Number[1]	Salaries[2] £000's
1986-87	113	701·7
1987-88	129	916
1988-89	131	1,028·1

[1] Full-time administrative and clerical staff.
[2] And related expenses.

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the salary of the new post of manager of a unit of management in a health board; and what was the salary payable to the person who was previously in charge of a unit of management.

Mr. Needham: The unit general manager grading structure provides for five grades based on the unit's estimated revenue expenditure and on the presence or absence of teaching responsibilities. The flat rate salaries range from £22,150 to £31,020 in addition to which discretionary awards of up to 15 per cent. on basic salary, and performance related pay are available. As these are new posts and units were previously managed by a unit management team acting collectively, no direct comparison with previous post holders is possible.

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will set out the job description agreed by the Eastern health and social services board for the position of manager of units of management.

Mr. Needham: I have arranged for a copy of the job description, which is considerably detailed, to be sent to the hon. Member.

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the personal circumstances taken into account by the Eastern health board in targeting the individual clients most in need of the home help service; what is the reason for the exclusion of former clients from the benefits of the service; and whether there are any differences between the various units of management in the criteria they adopt.

Mr. Needham: Assessment of clients for the home help service in all boards is based on the ability of the individual to perform a wide range of daily personal and domestic tasks including dressing, washing, feeding and lavatorial functions. Account is also taken of the level of support available from the client's family and other sources. Decisions about the level of assistance appropriate in individual cases and the criteria to be applied are matters for the boards in the light of local circumstances and priorities.

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the positions of manager of the various units of management of the Eastern health board were publicly advertised before the recent appointments were made; whether the job description was the same for each post; and when the interviews took place.

Mr. Needham: The unit general manager posts in the Eastern health and social services board were publicly advertised before the appointments were made. The outline job description was the same for each post and interviews were held from 22 to 29 November 1989.

Military Personnel

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many military personnel who have been sentenced to custody have been transferred to a gaol in England and Wales in the past 10 years.

Mr. Cope: During the 10-year period ended 31 December 1989, seven members of the armed services, sentenced to custody in Northern Ireland, have been transferred to serve the remainder of their sentences in England and Wales.

Prison Population

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the certified normal accommodation and current population of gaols in Northern Ireland; and if he will list them for each establishment for the latest date available.

Mr. Cope: The certified normal accommodation of each prison in Northern Ireland together with the actual number of prisoners currently housed is:

	Single cell accommodation	Population as at 0830 hours 9 January 1990
HMP Belfast	433	496
HMP Maghaberry	486	[1]294
HMP Magilligan	288	258
HMP Maze	744	517

[1] Including 20 female prisoners.
These figures include prisoners on home leave and in outside hospitals.
In addition, the young offenders centre, Hydebank has single cell accommodation for 300 and has a current population of 140.

HEALTH

Mental Health Act

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence led to the conclusion in the preface to the Mental Health Act 1983 Code of Practice laid before the House on 5 December that most of the guidance in the code has no resource implications; and what steps are being taken to ensure that adequate resources will be provided for those parts of the code which require them.

Mr. Freeman: The code covers matters which are part of the daily work of thousands of health and social services staff. We have no systematic evidence as to how much of the practice of all these staff is in conformity with the recommendations, but believe that many of the recommendations represent common practice. Where this is not the case, changing current practice will sometimes be possible without additional resources. Where new resources are required, authorities must judge the pace at which the changes can be introduced, as we have no plans to make resources available specifically to enable the code to be implemented.

Private Nursing Homes

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement concerning the growth in use of private nursing homes in community care programmes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In our White Paper "Caring for People" we are firmly committed to a policy of community care which provides dignity and choice to the frail and vulnerable. While for most people this will be achieved by continuing to live in their own homes, others would benefit from care in a more supportive environment. We welcome the growth of private nursing home provision and believe that this sector will continue to play an important part in meeting people's care needs along with other providers.

NHS Reform

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the timetable under the White Paper "Working for Patients" for health authorities to contract with hospital and community units for the provision of services.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Subject to approval of the Bill currently before Parliament, all DHAs will use contracts from April 1991 to obtain services they require from NHS trusts or units in other districts. To enable them to do this, all DHAs will be funded to meet the cost of services currently used by their residents from the same date. The services that DHAs obtain from their own directly managed units will be placed on a similar footing on the same timetable. This means that from April 1991 all DHAs will be obtaining hospital and community health services for their residents through contracts and the objective will be for these to be negotiated direct with the units concerned wherever possible.

This timetable will enable the benefits of contractual funding to be achieved more quickly and more uniformly than original proposals in working paper 2, which involved different DHAs and units moving at different timescales. The timetable has been discussed and agreed with NHS managers.

We are issuing a working paper on information requirements. Guidance on DHA allocations and further guidance on contracts will be issued shortly.

Copies of the working paper on information requirements, Working Paper 11, "Framework for Information Systems: Overview", have been placed in the Library.

Nurses

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people responded to the Government's recent television campaign to recruit nursing staff; what proportion then returned the application form and administration fee; and, if available, how many indicated they were unable to afford the fee.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To date the most recent television nursing recruitment campaign has produced 86,653 initial responses; 5,428 inquirers have subsequently returned the application form and administration fee. We are aware of only one case where a potential applicant indicated that he was unable to afford the £6 administration fee levied by the nurses' central clearing house.

Mortuary Charges

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will as a matter of urgency instruct Wakefield district health authority to cease charging for the measurement of bodies within its hospital mortuary prior to their removal by undertakers.

Mr. Freeman: This is a local mangement issue and I refer the hon. Member to Mr. Brian Hayward, the chairman of Wakefield health authority.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is his Department's policy to encourage health authorities to charge undertakers for the measurement of bodies prior to their removal from hospital mortuaries.

Mr. Freeman: The Department does not encourage health authorities to charge for services provided to undertakers. If, however, undertakers make use of health authority personnel to assist in the measurement of bodies, it is reasonable for authorities to recoup any costs incurred.

Dental Practice Board

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to reduce the number of those employed at the dental practice board, Eastbourne.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have no such proposals. The dental practice board is an independent statutory body: decisions about its staffing requirements are a matter for the board.

Operations, Canterbury and Thanet

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many operations have been cancelled in the Canterbury and Thanet health authority area, between 10 December 1989 and 10 January 1990, as a result of a shortage of blood supplies; what steps he is taking to ensure that supplies reach the district immediately and to prevent a recurrence of shortage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Between 10 December 1989 and 10 January 1990, operations on 21 non-emergency patients were postponed by Canterbury and Thanet health authority because these would have required large amounts of blood. The theatres were, however, used to full capacity by rescheduling operations. Patients whose operations were postponed will be given priority for new dates.

Donor attendances at blood collection sessions in the pre-Christmas period is traditionally low. Promotional effort is therefore increased at that time to maintain adequate blood supplies. In particular in December 1989, the national directorate of the blood transfusion service co-ordinated the mailing of a quarter of a million special reminder cards in a £65,000 campaign intended to encourage blood donors to keep their appointments. In the event, the unforeseeable complicaton of the flu epidemic severely reduced the number of donors available, and additional national and local media were used to boost donor attendance.

Nationally, through the good response of blood donors, the campaign was successful in maintaining blood supplies in most areas through a period of particular difficulty, and blood stocks have returned to normal levels.

Residential Homes

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many places are currently provided by local authorities for the elderly in residential homes in each county in England and Wales.

Mr. Freeman: The provisional number of places in local authority homes for elderly people as at 31 March 1988, by local authority, is set out in the table. Information for Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Children (Smoking)

Mr. Aspinwall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest Government statistical information available on the prevalence of children who smoke; and what trend these figures reflect.

Mr. Freeman: The latest information is contained in the report entitled "Smoking among secondary school children in England in 1988" prepared by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys and published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office in 1989 (ISBN 0 11 691267 7). The report, which is in the Library, shows that in 1988, 7 per cent. of first to fifth form boys (mainly aged 11-15) and 9 per cent. of first to fifth form girls smoked at least one cigarette per week. This represents a welcome decline in smoking prevalence among 11 to 15-year-olds since 1984 when 13 per cent. of boys and girls smoked at least one cigarette per week.

Hyperkinesis

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by regional health authority, for the latest data he has available, what tests are being carried out on children for hyperkinesis; what is the percentage of those diagnosed as suffering from this condition; at what ages these tests are carried out; what were the comparable figures (a) five and (b) 10 years ago; and at what age these tests are stopped.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not collected centrally.

In-vitro Fertilisation

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will place a copy of the ministerial briefing on legislation and controls covering in-vitro fertilisation in other countries in the Library.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This research report, which is a descriptive survey of the law and practice in a number of countries, will be made available when it is ready. This is expected shortly.

Prescription Costs

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether, pursuant to the answer Official Report, column 81-82 on 18 December, he will publish a table showing prescription costs for each region and family practitioner committee area for 1986-87 and 1987-88 on the same price base as previously, showing both total cost and cost per head.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is set out in the table.

3. Figures are based on OPCS estimates of resident populations for mid years 1986 and 1987.
4. Figures for 1986-87 and 1987-88 have been revalued to 1988-89 prices using the GDP deflator.

Airline Food

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many food poisoning incidents have been recorded for each year from 1980 to 1989 involving food served on passenger aeroplanes; if he will list the airlines involved; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many people have died as a result of food poisoning incidents aboard passenger aeroplanes for each year from 1980 to 1989; and if he will list the airlines involved.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 14 December 1989]: In the period 1980 to 1989 there were 22 suspected food poisoning reports to the public health laboratory service communicable disease surveillance centre by laboratories and local authorities associated with commercial air flights arriving or departing from England and Wales. No information is available about any deaths resulting from in-flight catering.

The table shows the 22 reported outbreaks of food poisoning associated with in-flight meals, although the carrier airline was not identified in every case.

West Lambeth Health Authority

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information his Department has received from the regional liaison committee concerning the West Lambeth health authority.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 20 December 1989]: The South East Thames regional health authority provides information regularly and frequently to the Department about all the health authorities within the region, and as necessary provides information about activities concerning individual health authorities. Perhaps the hon. Member would write to me if she is seeking information about a particular event.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total number of income support claimants who continue to receive transitional addition; and what proportion of these are pensioners.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that the information requested is not available. Based on the May 1988 annual statistical inquiry an estimated 570,000 income support claimants were receiving a transitional addition immediately after the April 1989 annual benefit uprating, of whom an estimated 255,000 were aged 60 or over.

Local Officers, Doncaster and Wath upon Dearne

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many staff at his Department's offices in (a) Doncaster and (b) Wath upon Dearne, speak (i) Urdu, (ii) Punjabi, (iii) Bengali, including the Sylheti dialect, (iv) Chinese, (v) Farsi, (vi) Hindi and (vii) Gujerati.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Should the need arise, local offices have access to local community interpreters.

Social Security Reform

Miss Widdicombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will respond to the report by the Social Services Select Committee on the reform of social security in April 1988.

Mr. Newton: I have today laid before Parliament copies of the Government's observations on the Committee's report, which I recognise as a constructive contribution to the debate on these issues.

Pensions

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table indicating for each of the last 10 years (a) the level of the basic state pension, (b) the average industrial wage and (c) the percentage of average industrial wage represented by the basic state pension.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 19 December 1989]: The latest available information is set out in the table. The relationship between state retirement pension and earnings is not the key factor in improving pensioners' income. The key factor is pensioners' total incomes. Pensioners' average total net incomes increased by 23 per cent. in real terms between 1979 and 1986.

WALES

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to ensure that Wales retains the use of hill livestock compensatory allowances to assist farms in the less favoured areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I fully recognise the importance of hill livestock compensatory allowance payments to farmers in the less-favoured areas of Wales and remain committed to their continuance.

Welsh Dairy Sector

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next intends to meet the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board to discuss the dairy sector in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have no current plans to meet the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board, but I am in frequent contact with him.

Energy Conservation

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state for each year since 1979 (a) spending by local authorities under the energy conservation programme in cash and real terms for Wales and by local authority and (b) the number of dwellings receiving energy efficiency improvements in Wales and by local authority.

Mr. Peter Walker: The available information on dwellings receiving energy efficiency improvements under the energy conservation programme or the homes insulation scheme are shown in the following tables for years since 1982. Figures for earlier years appear in table 10 of "Local Housing Statistics No. 66", a copy of which is available in the Library. Information on spending by local authorities under the energy conservation programme is not collected centrally.

[1] Figures for Wales were not collected from April 1981 to December 1983. Figures relate to activity where the only work carried out to the dwelling is under the energy conservation programme. Local authority dwellings may also be insulated when other general renovation work is carried out, but these cases cannot be separately identified.

Skills Shortages

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of skills shortages and training needs in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Training Agency for Wales monitors constantly labour market developments in Wales, with particular emphasis on skills and training issues. The findings of its research are published in its annual labour market assessments and in the quarterly "Marchnad Lafur Cymru/Labour Market Wales".

Valleys Programme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the Training Agency to publish the skills audit contained within the Valleys Programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The skills audit consists of a number of individual research projects convering the subjects of labour supply, labour demand and training provision. An introductory report was published on 5 October 1989. A report on each individual project will be published as results become available over the coming months. A final report will then bring together the separate components.

Employment Training

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, by district and county, the number of trainees undergoing employment training in Wales; and how many training scheme vacancies exist.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information requested is shown in the table:

County	Total numbers in training at 29 December 1989	Total number of unfilled places at 29 December 1989
Mid Glamorgan	3,080	600
South Glamorgan	1,837	978
Gwent	2,665	969
Dyfed	2,503	30
West Glamorgan	2,083	348
Clwyd	2,037	291
Powys	536	11
Gwynedd	1,315	289

Information at district level is not available.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the cost of writing to every business concerning the uniform business rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I will not be writing to each business concerning the uniform business rate. Several months ago

I made available to Welsh local authorities and business organisations a booklet "The New Business Rating System in Wales". Copies have also been sent to ratepayers in response to inquiries, and continue to be available from the Welsh Office on request.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the new uniform business rate for (a) the national museum of Wales, (b) Theatre Clwyd, (c) the Deeside leisure centre and (d) the national stadium, Cardiff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The uniform business rate for each of the hereditaments listed is 36·8p in the pound. This is the same as for all rateable hereditaments in Wales.

Businesses

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many businesses there are in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: There were 81,790 VAT-registered businesses in Wales at the end of 1988.

Allocation of Resources

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has now reached decisions about the allocation of resources of hospital and community health services in Wales for 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I announced on 19 December, columns 161-62, that, subject to parliamentary approval, I propose to provide £1,055·8 million for the hospital and community health services in Wales. Excluding the cost of the artificial limb and appliance service (which is administered on my behalf by the Welsh health common services authority) £962·6 million will be provided for current purposes and £86·9 million for capital spending.

For current spending this represents a cash increase of £72·8 million over estimated outturn for the current financial year and together with the additional £12 million which Welsh health authorities are expected to realise, as a minimum target, from new cost improvements and income generation schemes, provides an effective total increase in resources over 1989-90 of 9·5 per cent. This is on top of the extra funding which is being provided to meet the recurrent effect of the supplementary provisions made available in 1989-90 for the review body pay awards and also as a contribution toward the cost of implementing the White Paper "Working for Patients".

£57·6 million of this sum will be made available to health authorities for their discretionary use, which represents a cash increase of 6·5 per cent. over this year's provision. £7·5 million will be allocated to fund the balance of the full-year cost of developments which are being funded centrally in 1989-90 including those associated with the implementation of "Working for Patients". £7·7 million will be allocated to new centrally-funded developments. These developments, which are listed in the table, will considerably assist authorities in meeting future service requirements.

	£ million
Regional Services and Centrally-funded developments	2·0
Project 2000 including nurse education and support worker training and facilities	1·2
Consultant Expansion Programme	0·3
New Developments arising from the implementation of the White Paper "Working for Patients"	3·2
Other	1·0

Of the capital provision, £45 million will be made available to health authorities for their discretionary use. This amounts to a cash increase of almost 14 per cent. over last year's capital allocation. The balance is required for the all-Wales capital programme, including provision for developments associated with implementation of "Working for Patients" and further developments to be undertaken under my Programme for the Valleys initiative. Further details will be announced in due course.

Authorities will be able to retain all the proceeds of their cost improvement programmes and income-generation schemes. They will also retain the income which they raise from charges for private treatment and the receipts which they obtain from the sale of surplus land and buildings. Property sales are expected to generate a further £5 million in 1990-91. In total, I will expect authorities to achieve additional savings, income and receipts amounting to at least 1·3 per cent. of their recurrent revenue allocations.

The current and capital allocations to individual authorities will be as shown in the table. These allocations do not take into account the further sums which will be allocated when decisions have been taken on the distribution of the funds available for centrally-directed developments.

£ million

	Allocation current element	Capital element
Clwyd	116·584	6·277
East Dyfed	74·897	3·205
Pembrokeshire	28·379	1·968
Gwent	137·968	6·184
Gwynedd	69·164	1·710
Mid Glamorgan	161·446	8·054
Powys	33·393	1·113
South Glamorgan	188·955	7·938
West Glamorgan	119·263	8·072

These current and capital allocations provide for a real increase in spending by health authorities after taking into account the level of general inflation forecast by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Autumn Statement. They more than fulfil the resource planning assumptions which were issued to authorities last year.

The current allocation, as in previous years, have been weighted in favour of those authorities which are shown by the latest revenue formula assessment to be furthest below their target shares of available revenue resources (which are based on the catchment populations for the services which they provide).

The revenue formula has been subject to further refinements this year to include a weighting for the effects of sparsity of population on community health services and, in accordance with allocations in England, to adjust the allowance which South Glamorgan health authority receives in respect of the medical teaching service that it provides.

The effect of the new revenue formula assessment is to weight the distribution of the 6·5 per cent. cash increase to be made available to health authorities, in favour of the Clwyd, East Dyfed, Pembrokeshire, Gwent and Powys health authorities in such a way as to bring all these authorities to within 1·4 per cent. of their revised revenue formula target shares. This represents a continuance of the Government's longstanding commitment to the progressive equalisation of resources between health authorities in Wales.

It also provides a firm foundation for moving towards an allocation system based directly upon shares of the population served as set out in "Working for Patients". The joint Welsh Office-NHS resources allocation working group is currently considering how resource allocation arrangements in Wales might best be changed to achieve the objectives of the White Paper, and I look forward to receiving its recommendations and the comments of health authorities during 1990.

The capital allocations have, accordingly, also been determined in accordance with the existing allocation procedures, using the second revise of the original capital formula assessment, which, as in previous years, includes an allowance for the progressive equalisation of capital stock between authorities.

PRIME MINISTER

Flora and Fauna

Q89. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Prime Minister which Departments have responsibility for the genetic conservation of flora and fauna.

The Prime Minister: The following Departments all have responsibilities for aspects of the genetic conservation of flora and fauna: Department of the Environment, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, Department of Education and Science, Department of Environment for Northern Ireland, Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland, Welsh Office Agriculture Department and the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland.

Textiles

Q99. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to a textile factory.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

European Social Charter

Q110. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the programme for directives covered by the social charter.

The Prime Minister: At the European Council in December in Strasbourg Heads of Government took note of the European Commission's action programme of measures necessary to implement the proposed charter of fundamental social rights of workers. I have at present no plans to raise the matter at the next European Council meeting in June. However, we will of course examine carefully the individual proposals in the action programme as they are brought forward by the European Commission, and will participate fully in the detailed negotiations.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to raise the matter of the forthcoming fourth review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty with Prime Minister Kaifu of Japan when they meet on 12 January.

The Prime Minister: No.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister whether during her meeting with the Soviet Foreign Minister on 19 December 1989, the forthcoming fourth review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty was discussed.

The Prime Minister: No.

Greenhouse Effect

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if she plans to propose any joint Anglo-Japanese initiative on mitigation of the greenhouse effect during her meeting with Prime Minister Kaifu of Japan on 12 January.

The Prime Minister: I look forward to discussing with the Japanese Prime Minister ways of meeting the challenge of climate change, including action to mitigate the adverse effect of greenhouse gas emissions. However, this is a global problem requiring global solutions: the intergovernmental panel on climate change was set up to report precisely on this.

I am happy to say that there is very close, harmonious and productive Anglo-Japanese co-operation in that body and in other international fora dealing with these matters.

Plutonium Transfer

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her meeting with Prime Minister Kaifu of Japan on 12 January, she plans to raise the issue of United Kingdom-Japanese collaboration on the design of safe transport systems to transfer plutonium from the United Kingdom back to Japan after reprocessing at Sellafield.

The Prime Minister: In my talks with the Japanese Prime Minister I shall be discussing a wide range of issues. Responsibility for developing transport proposals rests with BNFL in association with its foreign customers. These arrangements will have to comply with international regulations.

Daya Bay Nuclear Reactor

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister whether safety of the Daya Bay nuclear reactor and evacuation plans for Hong Kong in the event of an accident involving radiation release therefrom have been discussed with the Chinese authorities.

The Prime Minister: There has been regular contact between the British and Chinese Governments about the safety of the plant. The Chinese authorities have assured us that the construction and operation of the plant will be to the highest safety standards. A consultancy undertaken by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, subsequently confirmed by experts from the International Atomic Energy Authority, concluded that planning for evacuation from Hong Kong was not required in view of the territory's distance from the plant.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 11 January.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 11 January.

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 11 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Nuclear Weapon States

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if she has given consideration to the implications for (a) national and (b) global security that would arise from the complete separation of military and civilian nuclear facilities in nuclear weapon states.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 10 January 1990]: Such matters are kept under review, and to a large extent civil and military nuclear facilities are already separated in the United Kingdom. However, the complete separation of the remaining nuclear facilities is currently regarded as uneconomic and the additional costs would outweigh any security gains.

SCOTLAND

Postgraduate Student Allowance

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are his detailed criteria for deciding whether courses qualify for assistance under the postgraduate students allowances scheme.

Mr. Lang: All postgraduate courses which have been approved by a validating body are considered for assistance under the postgraduate students allowances scheme. Decisions on specific courses are made in the light of changing trends in education and vocational requirements and the bids received from institutions.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland why the M.Sc. in finance at the University of Strathclyde does not qualify for assistance under the post-graduate students allowances scheme.

Mr. Lang: Assistance for higher postgraduate degree study is not offered under the postgraduate students allowances scheme and assistance for this course is the responsibility of the Economic and Social Research Council.

Hospices

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the current Government funding arrangements for hospices in Scotland; when they came into effect; and what changes are anticipated in the near future.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Many health boards in Scotland directly use the services of hospices on a contractual basis and others provide assistance by way of financial support or provision of supplies.

With effect from 1 April 1990, the support given to independent hospices will be increased to provide public funding of at least 50 per cent. of their running costs.

Mental Health (Scotland) Act 1984

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance he plans to issue on the grounds on which a patient can be detained under section 18 of the Mental Health (Scotland) Act 1984 and to clarify section 20(1)(b) of that Act.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Guidance on the compulsory detention of patients under part V of the 1984 Act is contained in a code of practice currently lying before Parliament in terms of section 119 of the Act.

I am considering separately the question of clarification of section 20(1)(b) in the light of the circumstances of a particular case which the hon. Member has drawn to my attention and hope to reach conclusions shortly.

Scottish Transport Group

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Scottish Transport Group's external financing limit for 1989-90.

Mr. Rifkind: The Scottish Transport Group's external financing limit for 1989-90 was originally set at minus £4·7 million as recorded in the Government's Expenditure Plans 1989-90 to 1991-92 published in January 1989 (Cm 616). I have now set a revised EFL for 1989-90 of minus £12·1 million to reflect the changed financial circumstances of the group, particularly in relation to lower capital expenditure requirements in the Scottish Bus Group in advance of privatisation.

Department of the Registers of Scotland

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the candidature of the Department of the Registers of Scotland for agency status.

Mr. Rifkind: I have concluded that the Department would benefit from establishment as an agency and hope that this may be achieved on 1 April 1990. It will be the first such agency from within my areas of responsibility.

The agency will be headed by the Keeper of the Registers of Scotland who, as chief executive, will enjoy extensive managerial freedom to organise the work of the agency so as to provide the best possible service to the public within a policy and resources framework which I shall set. The Keeper will be responsible to me for meeting specific objectives and challenging targets but will be free to determine how those are to be achieved. The staff of the agency will remain within the Civil Service.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Bicycles

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police authorities provide a post-coding service for bicycles seven days per week; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not held centrally. Police forces encourage owners of bicycles to have them marked with their post code; owners should contact the police crime prevention officer who will be able to advise on local arrangements for marking to be carried out.

Prison Transfers

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many petitions for transfer from a gaol in England and Wales to a gaol in Northern Ireland or the Republic of Ireland are currently outstanding;

(2) how many petitions for transfer from gaols in England and Wales to gaols in Northern Ireland or the Republic of Ireland have been received in the last 10 years; and how many have been successful;

(3) how many prisoners who are serving a prison sentence in England and Wales have been transferred following a petition, to a gaol in Northern Ireland or the Republic of Ireland in the last 10 years.

Mr. Mellor: The table gives the numbers of petitions that have been received for permanent transfer under section 26(1) of the Criminal Justice Act 1961 from prisons in England and Wales to prisons in Northern Ireland, and the number granted, in each year since 1980.

Year	Petitions	Transfers
1980	10	1
1981	7	—
1982	7	—
1983	20	3
1984	12	1
1985	26	4
1986	25	2
1987	31	3
1988	62	10
1989	55	17

There are 15 petitions for permanent transfer to Northern Ireland to which a final reply has not yet been given; and three prisoners whose transfers have been agreed are currently awaiting transfer.

Transfers of prisoners are not possible between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland as, although the Republic of Ireland has signed the Council of Europe convention on the transfer of sentenced persons, it has not yet ratified it. The United Kingdom ratified the convention in 1985.

Category A Prisoners

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in England and Wales who orginally came from (a) Northern Ireland or (b) the Republic of Ireland are deemed category A.

Mr. Mellor: The figures are (a) 21 and (b) 17.

Prisoners

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners who are currently serving a prison sentence in England and Wales originally emanated from (a) Northern Ireland or (b) the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Mellor: According to the records held centrally, on 30 September 1989, about 320 sentenced prisoners in prison service establishments in England and Wales who were citizens of the United Kingdom or whose citizenship was unknown were known to have been born in Northern Ireland.

The recording of nationality in the records held currently for citizens of the Republic of Ireland is not completely reliable because it depends upon information provided by the prisoner. On 30 September, about 460 sentenced prisoners in establishments in England and Wales were recorded as citizens of or born in the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners who are serving a sentence in England and Wales have petitioned for transfer to gaol in either Northern Ireland or the Republic of Ireland on more than (a) two occasions, (b) four occasions, (c) six occasions, (d) eight occasions or (e) 10 occasions.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not readily available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

NTVLRO

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek an explanation from the NTVLRO as to the reasons for its delay in making a substantive response to Manchester city council's application for Keary close, Gorton, to be accepted as eligible for the reduced television licence; and if he will request the NTVLRO to make such a response without further delay.

Mr. Mellor: On 18 April 1989 NTVLRO refused an application made in March 1989 by the city of Manchester social services department in respect of accommodation at Annesley gardens and Keary close. In response to representations dated 16 June, NTVLRO wrote again on 28 June 1989 seeking more information. NTVLRO has no trace of a reply to that letter, and has therefore been unable to consider the matter further.

Ambulance Stations (Telephone Numbers)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to authorise the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to make available to the public telephone numbers of ambulance stations in London.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The question of the publication of the telephone numbers of ambulance stations in London is not a matter for the Home Office or the police but for the London ambulance service.

Concessionary Television Licences

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the provision of concessionary television licences for pensioners living in residential or sheltered accommodation;

(2) what is his estimate of the number of individuals currently covered by the television concessionary licence available to retirement pensioners' sheltered and residential accommodation.

Mr. Mellor: The concessionary licence is available to retirement pensioners and disabled people living in residential or nursing homes, or in equivalent sheltered accommodation provided by a local authority or a housing association. New regulations governing the issue of the licence came into force on 19 May 1988.

Since then about 33,000 schemes have been reviewed by NTVLRO. Four thousand outstanding applications will be resolved when further information requested by NTVLRO is supplied by the applicant authorities.

The annual £5 fee is now payable per household, rather than per individual. At 30 November 1989, it is estimated that about 864,240 people in 677,835 households were covered by the licence.

Welsh Television Broadcasting

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Government's proposals for extending to the English-speaking population of Wales similar television broadcasting facilities to those provided to Welsh speakers by S4C.

Mr. Mellor: The Government have made no proposal to provide a specific alternative to S4C programmes. But English speakers in Wales already receive three UHF channels and the majority of English programmes on the fourth channel, and with the encouragement of the Government's Broadcasting Bill the choice for the viewer is likely progressively to increase through the addition of new services.

Detective Chief Inspector Paul Matthews

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the nature of the disciplinary offence for which DCI Paul Matthews was ordered to return to uniform duties in 1986.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the chief constable of the West Midlands that Mr. Matthews was transferred to uniform duties in 1985. This was a management decision and not the result of any disciplinary action.

Explosives Charges

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list any cases in the last two years where persons facing explosives charges have been released despite positive forensic tests.

Mr. Waddington: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will name the forensic test which proved positive against Mr. Daniel McBrearty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Positive results were obtained from three separate tests—(i) gas chromatography with chemiluminescent detection; (i) gas chromatography with mass spectrometric detection; (iii) thin layer chromatography.

Prison Visitors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, for each region, the names of the individual members of boards of visitors of prisons for England and Wales; who their representing body is; and if he will indicate those who are members of an ethnic minority.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) on 20 December 1989 at column 270. I am arranging for details of the current membership of the board of visitors for each prison establishment in England and Wales to be placed in the Library but it would not be appropriate, without seeking their individual consent, to indicate those who are members of ethnic minorities.

The Co-ordinating Committee of Boards of Visitors considers and raises matters of common concern to boards with the Department.

Prison Service

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what conclusions he has reached on the review of the organisation and location above establishment level of the prison service in England and Wales.

Mr. Waddington: The report was published on 10 August and copies were placed in the Library. I have been able to consider the report's recommendations in the light of over 150 written submissions, and of comments made in presentations conducted by prison service management. I have myself had discussions with many people in the service, and have met representatives of all the major trade unions concerned.

I am satisfied that it is right to accept all the main recommendations of the review. The Prisons Board will be restructured by the creation of operational directorates. The regional system will be replaced by area managers who will be part of the headquarters structure. More work will be devolved to establishments from headquarters and regional offices. The whole of headquarters up to and including the Director General will in due course be relocated to the midlands. Work will begin to determine whether, and if so when, the prison service should become an executive agency.

The new organisation will come into being in September and will be based in existing accommodation in London and Birmingham until a new midlands location is available.

I believe that these radical changes will place the service in a stronger position to meet the challenges it faces. They will build on the existing major programme of reforms and modernisation resulting from "Fresh Start", the prison building and refurbishment programme, an increased use of information technology and renewed work to improve regimes for inmates.

Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the statement by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on his strategy for 1990.

Mr. Waddington: I am placing copies of the commissioner's strategy statement for 1990 in the Library today. I am also sending copies to all right hon. and hon. Members whose constituencies fall wholly or partly within the Metropolitan police district. I am inviting London Members to discuss the statement with me.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Lead-contaminated Feed

5. Mr. Conway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what tests are available to ensure that meat from cattle whose feed has been contaminated by lead is safe for human consumption.

Mr. Gummer: Every animal going to slaughter which has eaten contaminated feed is tested and consumers can be fully assured that the meat will not enter the food chain unless it is safe for it to do so.

18. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current position regarding the lead-contaminated feed problem; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: We have lifted restrictions from all 1,162 farms subject to milk controls and the orderly disposal of contaminated feed is proceeding as planned. Schemes are in operation to enable livestock to be removed from restricted farms as soon as that can be done without compromising the safety of the food chain.

60. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what co-operation he received from the Dutch in dealing with the lead contamination of cattle feed.

Mr. Gummer: The Dutch authorities alerted my officials on 1 November that a consignment of contaminated feed had been imported into the United Kingdom. Subsequently there was close liaison between Dutch officials and United Kingdom embassy staff in the Hague and between officials in London in our efforts to clarify the events leading to the contamination. A more detailed account will become available once the Dutch court case on this matter is concluded.

National Farmers Union

12. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the president of the National Farmers Union; and what subjects he discussed.

20. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the president of the National Farmers Union; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Gummer: I last met the chairman of the National Farmers Union yesterday, when we discussed a range of agricultural matters.

58. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the National Farmers Union; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Gummer: I meet representatives of the National Farmers Union frequently to discuss agricultural matters.

Lead in Milk

13. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the arrangements in his Department for dealing with lead contamination in milk.

Mr. Gummer: My overriding concern has been to protect the consumer. I therefore required the milk from affected farms to be segregated and converted into butter and powder. An intensive sampling/testing programme was introduced and the restrictions were not lifted until we were satisfied that there was no longer any danger to public health.

Harbour Grants

14. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what financial aid is being made available in 1989-90 in the form of harbour grants to the sea fish industry.

Mr. Curry: Some £4·4 million is being made available in 1989-90 for such harbour improvements in the United Kingdom.

Green Pound

15. Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to place a ceiling on any future movements of the green pound.

Mr. Gummer: The level of the green pound will be considered as part of the annual price review. The Commission is to produce proposals on the long-term future of the agrimonetary system; when these emerge they will be considered by the Council.

Bread Production

16. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what factors will affect bread production in the next 12 months.

Mr. Curry: The main factors affecting bread production are: raw material prices, mainly grain, which have eased in the past few months; and labour costs, which have recently increased quite significantly, together with energy and other manufacturing costs. However, the price increases announced by the major bakeries are likely to be offset by the effects of discounting and other promotions by retailers.

Sell-by Dates

17. Mr. Stern: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will initiate national guidelines on sell-by dates.

Mr. Maclean: "Sell-by" dates will soon be phased out and "use by" dates for highly perishable foods will be introduced. This will give better protection and information to our consumers. I am presently considering with interested parties whether guidelines should be developed setting out the criteria to be used to determine which foodstuffs should carry a "use by" date.

Food Safety

19. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to ensure that the consumer has access to safe, wholesome food.

30. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to improve food safety in the United Kingdom.

62. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about his Ministry's work on food safety.

Mr. Maclean: It is our policy to encourage the widest availability of wholesome, attractive foods throughout the country as set out in the recent White Paper, "Food Safety —Protecting the Consumer" (Cm. 732), and the Food Safety Bill. While encouraging freedom of choice, we give the highest priority to the safety of the consumer and examples of recent work to improve this are set out in the White Paper. For the future the Food Safety Bill sets out proposals for a wider, stronger and more flexible legislative base for improving food safety right through the food chain from the farm to the shop.

My right hon. Friend has established a food safety directorate which brings together all the main aspects of the Ministry's food safety work. We shall continue to be advised by various independent expert committees on all aspects of food safety.

59. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to meet the local authority associations to discuss the role of environmental health officers in ensuring food safety.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. Friend maintains regular contacts with the enforcement authorities. In addition, I have recently met several local authority associations to discuss the enforcement of food safety legislation in the context of the Food Safety Bill and my officials are discussing with the local authority and enforcement associations the implementation of the Official Control of Foodstuffs Directive.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether requirements of food safety measures in the Food Safety Bill have been taken into account in the calculations of the standard spending assessment of metropolitan and non-metropolitan local authorities for 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The majority of new requirements involving costs to local authorities will be in regulations to be made after the Bill has received Royal Assent. Local authorities are unlikely to have to incur additional expenditure before 1 April 1991. This is why the additional £30 million to enable local authorities to enforce the additional requirements of the Bill is to be taken into account in the revenue support grant settlement for 1991-92.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will outline his consultation process with local authorities concerning the additional costs to them of the measures in the Food Safety Bill; if he will list those local authorities which have been consulted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Officials in the Departments concerned held discussions with a number of organisations and individuals from local authorities in order to assess the resources needed. The following local authority bodies were consulted:

The Institution of Environmental Health Officers;
The Association of District Councils;
The Association of County Councils;
The Local Authorities Co-ordinating Body on Trading Standards;
The Association of Public Analysts;
The Association of Metropolitan Authorities;
The Association of Port Health Authorities;
The Convention of Scottish Local Authorities;
The Institute of Trading Standards Administration.

The Government have announced that an additional £30 million will be taken into account in the revenue support grant for 1991-92 onwards. This has been widely welcomed.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will describe the formulation and basis of his calculation of the additional cost to local authorities of the Food Safety Bill; how he expects this to be distributed among (a) shire counties, (b) non-metropolitan districts and boroughs, and (c) metropolitan districts and boroughs including London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Officials in the Departments concerned consulted interested parties in order to assess the additional resources local authorities would need in order to finance the additional requirements arising from the Food Safety Bill. The Government concluded that an additional £30 million should be taken into account in the revenue support grant settlement for 1991-92 onwards. The additional resources will be distributed between local authorities according to the usual conventions.

Straw Burning

21. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received since his announcement on straw burning.

Mr. Gummer: I have received 54 letters from right hon. and hon. Members and members of the public. Most expressed support for my decision to prohibit straw burning subject to strictly limited exemptions, on which I shall be consulting the industry.

Isle of Man

22. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement about the fishing limit around the Isle of Man.

Mr. Curry: I have nothing to add to what my fellow Parliamentary Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Penrith and the Border (Mr. Maclean) said in the Adjournment debate on 13 December (Official Report, columns 1142-48.)

Sheepmeat Regime

23. Dr. Marek: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what meetings he has had with outside organisations to discuss the future of the sheepmeat regime.

Mr. Curry: During the recent review of the sheepmeat regime Ministers and officials consulted widely with interested parties. We shall continue to do so on the details that remain to be resolved.

28. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the future of the sheepmeat regime.

Mr. Curry: The recent reform of the sheepmeat regime offers excellent prospects for United Kingdom producers to compete on an equal basis in Europe as they enter the next decade.

61. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about recent discussions he has had in the European Council concerning the sheepmeat regime.

Mr. Curry: The Agriculture Council on 11-12 December, as part of the follow-up to the reform of the sheepmeat regime, agreed a definition of a heavy lamb carcase for the purpose of determinin the level of ewe premium payments to be paid to sheep milk producers. That will not affect the payments under the 1990 scheme to sheep milk producers in this country. The special arrangements governing payments to sheeps' milk producers, which were agreed by the September Council, will come into effect in the United Kingdom from the beginning of 1991. The Council also agreed revised terms of access for Argentinian and Australian sheepmeat exports to the EC.

Food and Farming Year

24. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the key achievements of Food and Farming Year; and what assessment he has made of its effectiveness.

Mr. Gummer: Food and Farming Year was organised by the industry to increase public awareness of farming and food production as an industry and as a way of life. The high interest shown at food and farming events throughout the country, and particularly at the major exhibitions at Hyde park and Gateshead, is a clear indication of the year's success.

Salmonella

25. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what support his Department has given to scheme quality certification for British eggs and for the exclusion of imported eggs that do not meet the United Kingdom's anti-salmonella measures.

Mr. Curry: This certification scheme is an initiative by Food from Britain, which we welcome. We are also encouraging egg packers and retailers to market "British eggs" positively so that consumers are able to identify, and select, such eggs. As for the banning of imported eggs, we have no evidence that would justify such action at present.

49. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about controlling salmonella food poisoning.

Mr Maclean: Control of salmonella in food is a complex problem. The Government have taken action in areas of particular concern, especially through the adoption of a comprehensive package of measures in relation to salmonella in eggs. The Government have also issued important advice to consumers on the hygienic handling and preparation of food in the home.

64. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many chickens have been officially slaughtered in the current year because his inspectors have found salmonella infection in their eggs.

Mr. Maclean: The compulsory slaughter arrangements are based on the testing of birds rather than eggs. Up to 22 December 1989 1,024,149 birds have been slaughtered compulsorily because of the presence of salmonella enteritidis or S. Typhimurium in the flock.

Food Safety Bill

26. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which organisations have made representations to him since the publication of the Food Safety Bill.

38. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has received any further representations concerning the Food Safety Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I have received representations from a wide range of interests, including those of consumers, enforcement bodies and the food industry. The Bill has received a broad welcome from all sides.

Horticultural Growers

27. Mr. Moss: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what analysis his Department has undertaken on the principal input costs for horticultural growers.

Mr. Curry: Comprehensive economic information on full-time horticultural businesses, including data on input costs, is collected in the farm business survey. The latest published information is in the 1989 edition of "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

EEC Butter

29. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the method of distributing supplies of European Economic Community butter.

Mr. Curry: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer).

Microwave Ovens

31. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to improve consumer information about the operation of microwave ovens.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. Friend the Minister published the report on the study commissioned by the Ministry on the uniformity and reproducibility of reheating in domestic microwave ovens on 4 December 1989, the day on which he received it. He was immediately in touch with the oven manufacturers' representatives. As a result, as the Minister informed the House in response to a private notice question from the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 6 December at columms 323-27, the manufacturers issued updated and improved instructions on that day in relation to the models for which that was appropriate. The manufacturers were also able to make fuller information available through retail outlets and, as the Minister indicated in his reply to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 18 December at column 30, we have encouraged retailers to stock this information.

Farm Incomes

32. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on current and future levels of farm incomes.

Mr. Gummer: Estimates of farm incomes for 1989 will be published in "Agriculture in the United Kingdom 1989" within the next few weeks. Incomes for future years will be influenced by many factors and it is not possible to give reliable estimates at this stage.

Rutland Water

33. Mr. Latham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement on the findings of his departmental veterinary service into the deaths of animals connected with Rutland Water in the weeks up to 8 September.

Mr. Maclean: Ten dead lambs and two dogs were examined by Ministry veterinary investigation centres in the period from 21 August to 7 September. Tissue samples were also examined at the university of Dundee. There is evidence that some of the sheep were suffering from relatively common diseases, such as pulpy kidney and pasteurella. However, results show that some of the sheep deaths and that of both dogs may be linked to the ingestion of blue green algal toxins.

Fishing Industry

34. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of prospects for the fishing industry in 1990; and if he will make a statement.

46. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the prospects for the fishing industry in 1990; and if he will make a statement.

51. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the prospects for the fishing industry in 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The value of landings increased by 44 per cent. between 1983 and 1988 against a generally stable volume of catches, but opportunities in 1990 will be less. However, while in the interests of conservation 20 quotas are lower than in 1989, including substantial cuts for North sea cod and haddock, 17 others remain stable and 12 quotas have increased.

Where quotas have been reduced, that has been in order to conserve stocks and safeguard the long-term future of the fishing industry. The extent to which earnings are affected will depend upon the market response to the lower landings.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will take steps to devolve central control of the inshore fishing industry of England and Wales to a regional fisheries management organisation which would co-ordinate the work of his Ministry's fisheries inspectorate and provide the contract and administrative body for the sea fisheries committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I have no plans to create such a regional fisheries management body, but I am looking at alternative quota management measures.

Irish Sea

35. Mr. McGrady: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about fishing limits in the Irish sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I have received inquiries from the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations but am aware of the concern of others. Any arrangement made to implement the provision for a 12-mile territorial sea for the Isle of Man would clearly, in relation to fisheries, have to safeguard the interests of all our fishermen and our Community obligations. I refer the hon. Member to the Adjournment debate on 13 December, Official Report, columns 1142-48.

Trawsgoed Laboratories

36. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of the Trawsgoed laboratories.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the penultimate paragraph of the written answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Ashford (Mr. Speed) on 14 December 1989, Official Report, column 800.

Transportation of Live Animals

37. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to improve the conditions under which live animals are transported.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 20 December, Official Report, column 349.

Dairy Sector

39. Mr. Knox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next intends to meet the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board to discuss the dairy sector.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend and I have regular meetings with the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board.

Green Currencies

40. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will next meet the Agriculture Commissioner of the European Economic Community to discuss green currencies.

Mr. Curry: I meet the Agriculture Commissioner regularly. I shall discuss green currencies with him in the context of the cap price fixing, on which the Agriculture Council may have a preliminary discussion at its meeting on 22-23 January.

HSE Agricultural Inspectorate

41. Mr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives from the Health and Safety Executive's agriculture inspectorate; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Gummer: Ministerial responsibilities for the agricultural inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive fall to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Food Labelling

42. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on progress in establishing a common European standard for the labelling of fats and other nutritional contents of food offered for sale.

Mr. Maclean: A European Community "Common Position" was reached on the Draft Nutrition Labelling (Rules) Directive, which includes provision for the labelling of fats, at the Internal Market Council on 21 December last. The proposals will now go to the Euopean Parliament for its second opinion before returning to Council for final adoption. The Council agreed a two-stage approach similar to the Ministry's nutrition labelling guidelines, consisting of a minimum declaration of the "Big 4" nutrients (energy, protein carbohydrate and fat) plus any other nutrient for which a claim is made. A second group of nutrients (sugars, saturates, fibre and sodium) will be added to the "Big 4" six years after notification of the directive, with the declaration of the "Big 4" only continuing to be an option. The giving of nutrition information will be voluntary except when a nutrient claim is made.

The United Kingdom would have preferred to introduce the second group of nutrients immediately but had to accept the phasing-in arrangements in order to obtain agreement on the total package which, on our initiative, includes provision to review the directive, in the light of experience, eight years after notification. A number of the directive's detailed provisions remain to be agreed at Community level but it is intended that those outstanding matters will be resolved within the time allowed for implementation, which is three years after the directive was adopted. Some changes to United Kingdom regulations will be needed, but there is no reason why manufacturers and retailers cannot adopt the main provisions of the directive as soon as it is finalised and I shall be urging them to give as much nutrition information as possible within the format laid down in the directive. In particular, I believe that a full nutrition declaration should be given whenever a nutrition claim is made, to ensure that consumers are not misled by selective claims.

No progress has been made on the directive to enable the introduction of the compulsory labelling of certain nutrients and that remains on the table for further discussion.

52. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to undertake a comprehensive review of food labelling.

Mr. Maclean: I announced on 15 November that I have asked the Food Advisory Committee to undertake a comprehensive review of food labelling.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

43. Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to ensure that Britain retains the use of hill livestock compensatory allowances to assist farmers in the less favoured areas.

Mr. Curry: In the negotiations last year on the reforms of the EC structural funds, my right hon. Friend argued vigorously in support of the United Kingdom arrangements for paying hill livestock compensatory allowances. The Government remain fully committed to continuing to provide appropriate support to farmers in the less favoured areas of the United Kingdom including support through the HLCA scheme.

Imported Eggs

44. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many eggs have been imported into the United Kingdom in each of the last three months.

Mr. Curry: The latest monthly data supplied by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise are as follows:

1989	Thousand eggs
September	58,044
October	38,285
November	74,354

Set-Aside

45. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement on his policy regarding set-aside.

Mr. Curry: I shall be announcing in due course the arrangements for the third year of the scheme starting on 1 October 1990.

Consumers Association

47. Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the Consumers Association; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Maclean: I met the Consumers Association on 21 November 1989 when we discussed healthy methods of cooking in catering as a contribution to reducing the incidence of coronary heart disease.

Food Advisory Committee

48. Mr. Mans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes he has made to the membership of the Food Advisory Committee in order to improve consumer representation.

Mr. Maclean: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 13 December 1989 (Official Report, columns 695-97).

Agriculture Council

50. Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last attended an Agriculture Council meeting; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Lee) on 13 December (Official Report, column 698).

Farm-Bred Turkeys

53. Mr. Key: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has received any proposals from the European Commission concerning the future of traditional farm-bred turkeys.

Mr. Maclean: The European Commission officials are working on a draft measure for the production of all poultry meat in the single market but have not yet made a formal proposal to the Council. The industry and other interests concerned are being kept fully informed of developments and I shall take account of their views in future negotiations.

Newcastle upon Tyne

54. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how long his Department has used Newcastle upon Tyne as a location for their administration activities.

Mr. Curry: My Department and the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries before it has used Newcastle upon Tyne as an office location since at least 1939.

Farm Animal Welfare

55. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on farm animal welfare.

Mr. Maclean: I receive representations from the public, the industry and welfare organisations on many aspects of farm animal welfare.

Fishing Vessels (Licensing)

56. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to amend current licence arrangements for United Kingdom fishing vessels.

Mr. Curry: We have recently consulted the industry on proposed changes to the licensing system, which would permit the aggregation of vessel capacity. We are still awaiting some industry views but hope to be able to make an arrangement shortly.

We are likely to have to make some changes to licensing conditions once the Divisional Court has considered the recent judgment of the European Court of Justice in cases 3/87 Agegate and 216/87 Jaderow.

Cereal Production

57. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons the Agriculture Council determined to disregard the automatic stabiliser for cereal production in December.

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him on 19 December by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister (Official Report column 122).

Upland Farmers

63. Mr. Hague: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest assessment of economic conditions for upland farmers.

Mr. Curry: A statement on the outcome of the annual review of the economic conditions in the United Kingdom's hill and upland areas will be made as soon as possible.

Agricultural Development and Advisory Service

65. Mr. Hind: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what policies are being developed to ensure that the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service is becoming more commercial in its operations.

Mr. Gummer: ADAS introduced its commercial services in April 1987. Since then it has exceeded its revenue targets in both 1987-88 and 1988-89, and is expected to do so again in the current financial year. Steps have also been taken to improve efficiency and reduce costs. The performance of ADAS is kept under review and in the medium term it has been set a target of recovering 50 per cent. of the full economic cost of providing commercial advisory services by 1993-94.

Pollution Control

66. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what uptake there has been in 1989 for pollution control projects under the farm and conservation grant scheme.

Mr. Curry: Interest in the grants available under the farm and conservation grant scheme for pollution control projects has been high. To date nearly 3,000 farmers in England have notified us of their intention to carry out this type of work. Grant paid on work already carried out under the scheme as a whole, which also includes other conservation items, so far amounts to about £1·5 million.

Eggs

67. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will undertake a review of the overall effectiveness of recent legislation affecting the egg producing industry.

Mr. Maclean: The requirements on testing of poultry flocks for salmonella, introduced in March 1989, have already been modified. This and related legislation will be kept under review.

73. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the present state of the egg industry.

Mr. Curry: Egg supplies are still somewhat lower than in November 1988 and consumption is also down, but packer to producer prices are very firm and are currently at their highest levels for over five years.

I am encouraging our egg packers and retailers to market British eggs, which are now produced to the highest standards, in a way that will enable consumers to identify and select them.

Papain

68. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the administration of the tendering agent papain to cattle prior to slaughter.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the full statement that I made on this matter during the Adjournment debate on 7 November 1989.

Meat Prices

69. Mr. Archer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the effect upon retail prices of meat if European Economic Community directive 64/433 is implemented.

Mr. Curry: EC directive 64/433 is already in force and sets down hygiene, inspection and structural requirements for meat plants exporting to other EC member states. Draft proposals currently under discussion would extend similar requirements to all meat plants. Any impact on retail prices of meat would depend on the individual decisions of meat plant operators in the light of the competitive market situation that they faced.

Farm Woodland Scheme

70. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the operation of the farm woodland scheme.

Mr. Gummer: The farm woodland scheme came into operation on 1 October 1988. By the end of November 1989 applications had been received to plant 8,938 hectares, 75 per cent. with broadleaved trees. The scheme is clearly successful in encouraging farmers to plant woodlands on land that would otherwise contribute to production of surplus food. It also holds out the prospect of environmental and landscape improvements in the longer term.

71. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current uptake of the farm woodland scheme.

72. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the current uptake of applications for the farm woodland scheme.

Mr. Gummer: In the first 14 months of the farm woodland scheme 1,323 farmers applied to plant a total of 8,938 hectares of trees throughout the United Kingdom. The trees will be planted in small areas, which average around 6 hectares per farm and 75 per cent. will be broadleaved species.

Wastes

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields, 14 December, Official Report, column 800, if he will place in the Library the comments of (a) Sweden, (b) Denmark, (c) the Netherlands, (d) Germany and (e) Norway to his proposals to permit licences for the dumping of the relevant wastes.

Mr. Gummer: I have arranged for the material requested to be placed in the Library, together with the documents to which the comments relate and my Department's replies to these comments. The departmental papers show that the wastes concerned will not harm the marine environment and that at present there exists no alternative means of disposal for them on land which would be environmentally acceptable.

Pesticides

Dr. David Clark To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many new active ingredients of pesticides have been (a) received (b) approved and (c) rejected for each year since 1985.

Mr. Maclean: The following information relates to new pesticides (active ingredients) for which my Department has responsibility.

	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989
(a) Received	26	28	23	12	15
(b) Approved (full/ provisional/ experimental permit)	21	12	11	5	5
(c) Rejected	0	3	1	—	1

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food further to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields of 11 December 1989, Official Report, columns 512-16, on what basis he has selected the pesticides for which a review is planned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The pesticides planned for review cover all those active ingredients approved prior to 1981.

Atlantic Salmon

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek to initiate discussions at European Community level about the need for action to combat illegal drift net fishing for Atlantic salmon in international waters.

Mr. Gummer: Ministers and officials discuss the enforcement of regulations with other EC member states and with the Commission and will continue to do so. For international waters, the main forum for discussion of regulatory measures is the North Atlantic Conservation Organisation (NASCO) to which the European Community is a contracting party. That organisation is well aware of the problem of illegal drift netting for Atlantic salmon in international waters.

We have consistently taken a strong line on all forms of illegal fishing for Atlantic salmon and will continue to do so.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Ko Hsuan School

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when his inspectors last visited Ko Hsuan school in North Devon; what inquiries they made; if he will publish their report; and if he will now make a statement on the information he has concerning the recent suicide of a pupil at the school.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My Department has asked for a full explanation from the school of the circumstances leading up to the tragic death of Nicholas Shultz.

Her Majesty's inspectors last visited the school in September 1988 to advise the Department about its final registration. The visit involved not only observation of work in progress but discussions with senior management about the curriculum. The boarding accommodation was briefly visited; there was no evidence of boys and girls sharing the same dormitory or bedroom. This was one of the many visits to independent schools carried out by Her Majesty's inspectorate as part of its routine information-gathering. As such, it will not lead to a published report.

Teacher Shortages

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information is kept on the number of children sent home due to lack of teaching staff in each local education authority.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Local education authorities are responsible for the deployment of teachers, and comprehensive information about the number of pupils sent home is not held centrally by the Department.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average annual salary earned by graduates in (a) teaching, (b) the Civil Service, (c) industry and (d) commerce in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Cope: This information is not available.

Recruitment Advertising

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give for each health and social services board in Northern Ireland amounts spent on recruitment advertising for the last three years, together with a breakdown of the spending between (a) national press, (b) regional press, (c) specialist or periodical press and (d) other, stating which; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is as follows:

Drought Orders

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by (a) water company and (b) location, where drought orders still remain in force.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no drought orders currently in force in Northern Ireland.

Police Officers (Housing Allowance)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he intends to implement the recommendation of the police negotiating board that officers in provided accommodation should receive a housing allowance and pay rent for their accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: No. The police authority will need to provide accommodation free of rent for the foreseeable future to meet operational requirements and as an incentive to recruitment. It has therefore been decided to maintain the status quo with officers in provided accommodation receiving no housing allowance but living rent-free. Draft regulations which amend the rent allowance provisions of the Royal Ulster Constabulary regulations 1984 have been sent to the police negotiating board for comment.

Beef

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has made any representations to the Commission of the European Communities about the beef industry in Northern Ireland; whether he is prepared to give additional assistance to the beef industry; what representations he has received about the beef industry; and if he will make a statement about the present state of the beef industry.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 11 January 1990]: The Government are aware of the concerns being expressed about the current state of the beef industry in Northern Ireland. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has had preliminary discussions with the Ulster Farmers Union on the matter and I intend to have a further meeting with the union shortly.

In the light of discussions with the union we will consider what action, including representations to the Commission of the European Communities through my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, might be taken to alleviate the concerns expressed.

Terrorism (Compensation)

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list in the Official Report the criteria by which compensation is awarded to the victims of terrorism and to the families of the victims of terrorism in Northern Ireland and the amount of and the circumstances in which payments have been made in each of the past 10 years; and whether he is satisfied with the way in which the present system operates.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 11 January 1990]: In Northern Ireland, as in Great Britain, the victim of a criminal injury is entitled to be compensated for pain, suffering and loss of amenities, and for any expenses or pecuniary loss resulting from his injuries. If the victim dies as a result of a criminal injury, compensation is payable to his relatives in respect of expenses incurred or pecuniary loss suffered as a result of the death. Additionally, in the case of incidents occuring on or after 1 July 1988, a bereavement award of £3,500 is payable to the spouse of the deceased victim or to the parents if the victim was unmarried and under 18 years of age. The rationale of the scheme is to ensure that victims and their families do not suffer financial hardship. The legislation makes no distinction between terrorist and other criminal acts except that in terrorist cases there is no upper limit to the amount of compensation for pecuniary loss which can be paid to victims or their dependants.

Where a victim survives his injuries the amount of pecuniary loss arising from his partial or total incapacity for work is based on his earnings and future career prospects and account is also taken of any occupational pension or gratuity and social security benefits payable as a result of the injury. The same considerations apply in assessing the amount of pecuniary loss suffered by the dependants of a deceased victim. In the case of pecuniary loss suffered by other relatives, including the deceased victim's parents, account has to be taken of the amount of the victim's financial contributions and the length of time such contributions could reasonably have been expected to have continued.

In all cases compensation is paid as a tax-free lump sum. Any applicant who is dissatisfied with the amount determined has a statutory right of appeal to the courts.

The compensation provisions broadly follow common law practice and are similar to the compensation provisions in the rest of the United Kingdom. The scheme operates in a fair and reasonable way.

The table shows the total amount of compensation paid in each of the past 10 years to the victims of terrorism, their dependants and other relatives.

Traffic Flows

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the last census of traffic was carried out on each road which enters Limavady town; what were the traffic figures for each road on that occasion; and what is his estimate of the present figures, numbers to be given for daily, and maximum and minimum hourly traffic volumes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 9 January 1990]: Traffic figures on each road entering Limavady are obtained continually from automatic census points and annual figures are derived from these. The information for 1989 is as follows:

	Average daily traffic flow	Maximum hourly traffic flow	Minimum hourly traffic flow
Roe Bridge, A2	13,142	1,335	13
Ballyquin Road, B68	4,273	396	0
Rathmore Road, A37	6,927	742	3
Dowland Road, A2	3,861	346	0

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of the present flow of traffic on a daily and maximum and minimum hourly flow basis across the Bann bridge, Coleraine and the Mountsandel bridge, Coleraine; what were the figures when the last traffic census was taken; and what were the figures for the Bann bridge before the Mountsandel bridge was opened.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 9 January 1990]: The present daily and maximum and minimum hourly traffic flows across the Bann bridge are estimated to be 26,452, 2,600 and 10 respectively. These are based on the last census in 1988 but there have been no significant traffic flow changes since then. Automatic census points on the Sandelford bridge gave actual figures for 1989 of 14,745, 1,463 and eight respectively. The last complete census in 1987 gave figures of 13,450 and 1,350 vehicles with no minimum figure being available.

The average 16-hour daily flow for the Bann bridge in 1972, before the Sandelford bridge was opened, was 22,290 vehicles. Maximum and minimum hourly flows are not available.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show (a) the number of vehicles which cross the Roe bridge at Limavady, and (b) the number of vehicles which cross the Roe bridge at Dungiven, each day and the number of such vehicles which are believed to be heavy commercial vehicles, and also the highest and lowest hourly traffic flows.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 9 January 1990]: The information is as follows:

	Number of vehicles per day	Number of heavy goods vehicles per day	Highest hourly traffic flow	Lowest hourly traffic flow
Roe bridge, Limavady	13,142	920	1,335	13
Roe bridge, Dungiven	7,324	732	728	3

Civil Service

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will give details of the religious composition of the successful applicants for posts offered by the Department of the Environment, at each grade level in the (a) supervisory, (b) craft and (c) the non-craft grade groups of the industrial staff and: (i) the general service and (ii) the scientific grade groups of the non-industrial staff; and if he will give comparable figures for each year since 1983;

(2) if he will give details of the religious denomination of all applicants for posts offered by the Department of the Environment, at each grade level in (a) the supervisory, (b) the craft and (c) the non-craft grade groups of the industrial staff, and (i) the general service and (ii) the scientific grade groups of the non-industrial staff; and if he will give comparable figures for each year since 1983.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 7 December 1989]: Equal opportunities monitoring in the Northern Ireland Civil Service began in 1985 when staff were asked to complete, on a voluntary basis, a confidential questionnaire about their schooling background. From this information the religious affiliation of staff was determined.

The statistics available are as follows:

Information about successful applicants is not provided because the numbers appointed were so small that it could serve to identify the religious affiliation of individuals.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of the religious denomination of the members of the directorate of (a) the planning service, (b) the roads service, and (c) the water service; and if he will give comparable details for each year for 1983 to 1988 respectively.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 7 December 1989]: Equal opportunities monitoring in the Northern Ireland Civil Service began in 1985 when staff were asked to complete, on a voluntary basis, a confidential questionnaire about their schooling background. From this information the religious affiliation of staff was determined.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Barlow Clowes

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry why compensation paid by Her Majesty's Government to Barlow Clowes investors includes compound interest from the date of deposit to the end of December 1989; and why this interest is deemed to be free of liability for tax.

Mr. Redwood: The terms of the Government's scheme of payments to investors in Barlow Clowes are in accordance with the recommendation of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration. The Department's statement regarding the tax liability of these payments reflects the advice of the Inland Revenue and is a matter for it.

Vietnam

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when export credits guarantee cover was restored to Vietnam.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 11 January 1990]: Export Credits Guarantee Department cover for business with Vietnam on medium and long-term credit was withdrawn in March 1982. Since December that year cover for short-term business has remained available subject to payment being made on terms of cash against documents out of an irrevocable letter of credit confirmed before shipment by a bank in the United Kingdom.

While ECGD continues to monitor developments no early relaxation of these terms is envisaged.

Balance of Trade

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the balance of trade with (a) the rest of the European Communiity, (b) the USA and (c) Japan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have been asked to reply.

Information from which crude trade balances[1] may be derived can be found in the Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics, available from the Library of the House, or on the central statistical office databank which may be accessed through the Library.

[1] Crude balances slightly overstate deficits (or understate surpluses) since the value of imports, but not that of exports, includes insurance and freight.

Manufacturing Output

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish a table showing the increase in the volume of manufacturing output less food etc. and of exports of manufactures based on current values.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have been asked to reply.

Index numbers of the volume of output of manufacturing industries and of food, drink and tobacco —at 1985 prices—are published in the index of output of the production industries press notice, tables 1 and 2 respectively, together with their relative weights. Manufacturing output less food, drink and tobacco can be derived for these two series. Exports of total manufactures —in current value terms—are published in the United Kingdom balance of payments current account press notice, table 8. Both press notices give percentage changes for the latest three months on the previous three months and on the same three months a year earlier. The press notices are available from the House of Commons Library.

PRIME MINISTER

Lords Lieutenant for England and Wales

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the lords lieutenant for England and Wales, the dates of their appointment and projected date of retirement.

The Prime Minister: A list of lords lieutenant for England and Wales follows, together with the dates of their appointment and expected retirement.

EC Internal Matters (Director General)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what steps are being taken to fill the post of Director General for internal matters in the EEC.

The Prime Minister: Appointments in the Commission are made by the Commission. The Government naturally make every effort to ensure that there is an equitable proportion of British personnel on the staff of the EC institutions, in particular in important posts.

Mr. John Mogg

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister when she expects Mr. John Mogg to leave the service of the Cabinet Office.

The Prime Minister: Mr. Mogg joined the Cabinet Office in July 1989. On present plans, his posting would last for two to three years.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Hillsborough Disaster

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what compensation has been offered to Mr. Trevor Hicks in respect of each of his daughters killed in the Hillsborough stadium disaster; what is the total compensation to be awarded to bereaved families; and on what basis their claims will be met;

(2) what compensation will be payable to parents who lost a child aged under 18 years, or a spouse aged over 18 years, in the Hillsborough disaster.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend has no power to intervene in these matters. I understand, however, that the South Yorkshire police authority, through its insurers, has been in touch with Mr. Hicks's solicitors asking for further information about his claim.

Official Secrets

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the effect of the draft Official Secrets Act 1989 (Prescription) Order 1989 will enable prosecution of the officials listed in schedule 2 to the order under the Official Secrets Act 1989 for disclosing certain categories of information to hon. Members; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The draft order establishes that the office holders listed in schedule 2 and some associated staff (all of whom at present fall within the scope of section 2 of the Official Secrets Act 1911) are to be treated as Crown servants for the purposes of the Official Secrets Act 1989. They will be liable to prosecution for unauthorised disclosures in the limited circumstances laid down in the Act.

Drugs

Mr. Knowles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on opportunities for new manufacturers of opium derivatives to enter the United Kingdom market in the light of the recommendations in the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report published in April 1989.

Mr. Waddington: While I shall continue to apply strict security measures to the manufacture and distribution of controlled drugs, I shall ensure that they do not create unnecessary restrictions on competition. I therefore welcome firm proposals from new manufacturers to establish opium derivative production.

TRANSPORT

Leeds City Station

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to approve the additional funds required for British Rail's completion of the upgrading of the west end of Leeds City station with an additional platform and improved track and signalling.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that British Rail has started design work on a major scheme at Leeds, to be undertaken in the early 1990s.

No question of approval by this Department arises at present.

Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by year for the last 10 years the number of loaded waste nuclear fuel train movements through Doncaster that were completed (a) with no accidents involved and (b) with an accident involved.

Mr. Portillo: The Department does not collect this information, but I understand that loaded nuclear fuel flasks do not normally travel through Doncaster and there has not been an accident involving this type of traffic in the Doncaster area.

Blind People

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to require all contractors or councils that dig up pavements or road surfaces to place firm barriers around the holes to ensure blind people are not endangered.

Mr. Atkins: A revised version of chapter 8 of the traffic signs manual to be published later this year will include such measures. The manual is a code of practice, compliance with which is taken to satisfy general legal requirements for the proper guarding of works. The proposed legislation to reform the Public Utilities Street Works Act 1950 will be used to enforce such requirements for utility works. This legislation will be introduced as soon as there is a suitable opportunity.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Departmental Staff

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he intends to take concerning the involvement of Mr. Peter Wetherby, an employee of his Department, under the pseudonym of Dominic Delaney in the organisation of the Troops Out movement or the Martyrs Committee.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 7 December 1989]: The activities of Mr. Peter Wetherby in relation to the Troops

Out movement and the Manchester Martyrs are being investigated by his employers, the Inland Revenue. Any subsequent action will depend on the outcome of those investigations.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current position and place of work of Mr. Peter Wetherby.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 7 December 1989]: Mr. Peter Wetherby is a revenue executive employed by the Inland Revenue in its Greater Manchester region.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has issued any guidance to his employees on involvement with the Troops Out movement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 7 December 1989]: General guidance on the extent to which civil servants may take part in political activities is given in the Civil Service pay and conditions of service code and in departmental instructions.

Manufactured Goods

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the balance of trade in manufactured goods.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 9 January 1990]: The information was published on 29 December 1989, in table 12 of the montly press notice on the current account of the balance of payments, copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what forecasts he has made of the impact on the rate of inflation of the uniform business rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 10 January 1990]: The uniform business rate in 1990-91 will raise in real terms broadly the same amount from business as in 1989-90: it will not add to real business costs as a whole. For future years, there is a statutory guarantee that the national non-domestic rate poundage will increase by no more than the rate of inflation.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Parliamentary Rifle Range

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what use is made of the parliamentary rifle range; what representations he has had seeking its closure and replacement by (a) a childcare facility or (b) a use likely to benefit a large number of hon. Members and staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

Th sports and social club's rifle range occupies a windowless basement room within the House of Lords. I have received no proposals concerning the room since I answered the hon. Member's question on 29 November.

ENERGY

IAEA Safeguards

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information his Department collects on a routine basis on the imports and exports of nuclear materials for the purposes of reporting to the international safeguards authorities.

Mr. Baldry: Under articles 24 and 25 of Euratom Regulations 3227/76 (of the Official Journal) the Department forwards to the Euratom safeguards directorate reports by all nuclear operators of exports and imports of nuclear materials. These reports are, in turn, passed by Euratom to the IAEA.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if Her Majesty's Government have given any consideration to the International Atomic Energy Agency playing a role in safeguarding fissile materials involved in non-explosive military uses.

Mr. Baldry: I am content with the UK-Euratom-IAEA agreement which excludes material and facilities in the United Kingdom's military cycle.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to seek an extension to the International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards regime to cover visits to non-declared suspect facilities.

Mr. Baldry: No. Safeguards-related visits and inspections are matters for the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) and the relevant state. In the case of non-nuclear weapon states party to the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons (NPT), the treaty obliges them not to manufacture or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons, and accept IAEA safeguards on all source or fissionable material in all their peaceful nuclear activities.

In relation to non-parties to the NPT, IAEA safeguards can be applied only on a voluntary basis.

In either case the agency's statutes require the inspectors to report any non-compliance to the director general who shall thereupon transmit the report to the board of governors.

Fuel Exports and Imports

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will provide the latest available equivalent figures about fuel exports and imports to those given in the tables in his answers of 9 November, Official Report, column 767 and 19 December 1989, Official Report, columns 118 and 119.

Mr. Wakeham: The equivalent information for fuel exports and imports for the 11 months to November 1989 following my previous answers on 9 November and 19 December is as follows:

Table 1
January to November 1989

	Thousand tonnes
Exports (fob)
Coal	1,890
Oil	[1]63,320

	Thousand tonnes
Imports (cif)
Coal	10,918
Gas[2]	13,726
Oil	53,636

[1] Contains a small amount of natural gas exports.
[2] Coal equivalent.

Notes:
The volume figures are in thousand tonnes. For oil this is consistent with the basis used in Overseas Trade Statistics publications. However if figures are required on a common basis then the oil figures should be multiplied by a factor of 1·7 to convert them to thousand tonnes of coal equivalent.
Provisional data for the whole of 1989 should be available in mid-February.

Table 2
January to November 1989

	£ million at 1985 prices[2]
Exports (fob)
Coal	73
Oil	[1]10,820
Imports (cif)
Coal	584
Gas	1,032
Oil	8,648

[1] Contains a small amount of natural gas exports.
[2] Figures at 1985 constant prices have been derived by applying the unit value for exports in 1985 to the relevant volumes in 1989. The figures for gas are estimated.

Note:
Provisional data for the whole of 1989 should be available in mid-February.

ENVIRONMENT

Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 14 December, Official report, column 751, if he will list separately the contracts that have been extended by the Property Services Agency and the Crown Suppliers to the Department of the Environment.

Mr. Chope: Government Departments cannot contract with each other. There are therefore no contracts extended by the Property Services Agency and the Crown Suppliers to the Department of the Environment.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current estimated population of the London borough of Lambeth aged 18 years and over and who will be eligible to pay the community charge.

Mr. Chope: The information available to the Department shows that 172,529 people in the London borough of Lambeth were eligible to pay the community charge on 1 December 1989, counting students as one fifth and including the estimated full-year equivalent of contributors to the collective community charge.

Commons Crypt

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what work is to be carried out during 1990 to the fabric and structure in the Commons Crypt.

Mr. Chope: There is a major dampness problem in the Crypt Chapel caused by the long-term seepage of moisture through the porous stone.
Consultants have been appointed to identify possible remedies and their report is due shortly. It is therefore, I regret, too soon to say what work will be done this year.

Home Ownership

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in which 10 local authority areas in the United Kingdom the largest percentage increases in home ownership have occurred since 1979.

Mr. Chope: This information is not available.
The latest information on the percentage change in the number of owner-occupier households at the local authority level comes from the 1981 Census for the period 1971 to 1981 and can be found in table 17 of "Census 1981: Key statistics for local authorities". We expect the 1991 census to provide corresponding information for the period 1981 to 1991. The Department does, however, make regional estimates of the proportion of the housing stock in owner-occupation and figures for April 1981 and December 1988 are published in table 9.4 of "Housing and Construction Statistics 1978-1988". Copies of both publications are in the Library.

Tyre Fire (Powys)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will instruct Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to investigate the pollution implications of the tyre fire at Knighton and Heyhope in Powys.

Mr. Trippier: No. Inspectors have given advice to the local authority which is responsible for regulating waste disposal sites and the burning of tyres.
Questions about the incident itself should be addressed to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Reports

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria he uses to decide when to publish a report commissioned by his Department (a) through Her Majesty's Stationery Office and (b) by placing a single copy in the Library.

Mr. Chris Patten: Each case is considered on its merits. The factors involved also include an assessment of the likely public interest, the cost of publication and whether the report concerned should be priced or unpriced.

Northern Industrialised Nations (Conference)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for policy initiatives to be taken at the forthcoming international conference of northern industrialised nations in Bergen, Norway in May.

Mr. Trippier: The Bergen conference, which is being organised by the Norwegian Government under the auspices of the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe, will examine the extent to which the recommendations of the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development have been implemented. It will enable Ministers from ECE countries to decide what co-operative action is needed to tackle the main environmental problems of the world, particularly those confronting eastern Europe.

The United Kingdom is playing a prominent part in the preparations for the conference. Last year we hosted the first of four international preparatory workshops. We have also contributed a report, "Sustaining Our Common future", reviewing the substantial progress we have made within the United Kingdom in following up the WCED report.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the main findings and conclusions of the most recent joint Department of the Environment-Nature Conservancy Council staff inspection of the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mr. Trippier: The report of the staff inspection last year of the chief scientist's directorate of the Nature Conservancy Council (NCC) is an internal NCC document which has not yet been finalised. It would therefore be inappropriate to list its findings and conclusions.

Vehicle Smoke Checks

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of smoke in urban areas is estimated to come from diesel vehicles.

Mr. Trippier: Figures for emissions of black smoke from diesel vehicles have not yet been finalised, but will be published for the first time in the Department's annual digest of environmental protection and water statistics early in 1990.

EC Habitats Directive

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will take to ensure that Community funding made available to implement the European Community habitats directive will be directed to the most-needed areas.

Mr. Trippier: We understand that the European Commission is working up a proposal for funding to assist implementation of the habitats directive once it has been agreed. We shall certainly be keen to ensure that any such funding will be used as effectively as possible.

Rateable Values

Mr. Benyon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the report by consultants on substitutes for rateable values as they are used in housing legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Copies of the report by Price Waterhouse on market rents as substitutes for rateable values as used in housing legislation have today been placed in the House Libraries. The consultants were commissioned to survey rents in certain sectors of the private rented market, to provide evidence on which to base substitutes for the rateable value limits which define protection under certain rent, landlord and tenant and housing Acts, and to make recommendations. The proposed substitutes, set out in the table, would apply to agreements made on or after 1 April when the community charge comes into effect. They will be provided by means of regulations under section 149 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, applying in England and Wales, to come into force on 1 April.

Housing Act 1988: Rent Act 1977 (new tenancies)

Upper Limit for protection	In Greater London	Tenancies with an annual rent of less than £25,000 (excluding certain service charges)
	Outside Greater London	Tenancies with an annual rent of less than £25,000 (excluding certain service charges)
Lower Limit	In Greater London	Tenancies with an annual rent of more than £1,000 (excluding certain service charges)
	Outside Greater London	Tenancies with an annual rent of more than £250 (excluding certain service charges)

Landlord and Tenant Act 1954 Part I: Local Government and Housing Act 1989, Schedule 10

Ground rent qualification	In Greater London	£1,000 pa
	Outside Greater London	£250 pa

The upper limit will broadly be based on the rental equivalent for the premium paid ie an annual equivalent payment taken over the unexpired length of the lease, assuming a maximum lease length of 100 years. The annual equivalent would be derived using the formula shown in the consultants' report, using an interest rate of 6 per cent. Both inside and outside Greater London, it is proposed that protection will generally apply to leases where the rental equivalent of the premium computed on this basis is £25,000 pa and below.

Leasehold Reform Act 1967

Both the ground rent and the upper limit qualifications will be the same as those under the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954, part I, and Local Government and Housing Act 1989, schedule 10, above.

Commercial Rates

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all local rating authorities which have increased commercial rates (a) by 20 per cent. per annum compound in real terms and (b) by 15 per cent. per annum compound in real terms, for five successive years since 1979.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 10 January 1990]: There is none in either category.

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each local authority in England the gross commercial and non-domestic rateable value totals in (a) 1973 and (b) on 2 January 1990; and if he will list in each case the percentage increase.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 10 January 1990]: I will write to my hon. Friend shortly.

Institute for European Environmental Policy

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent reports commissioned by his Department from the Institute for European Environmental Policy have been published; and what plans he has for commissioning further reports from the Institute for European Environmental Policy.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 11 January 1990]: A study by the Institute for European Environmental Policy commissioned by my Department was published on 12 December under the title "Environmental Policy and 1992". My Department has recently let a contract to the institute to provide advice and information on the international aspects of integrated pollution control. The institute also provides regular advice and information to my Department on European Community environmental policy issues under a standing consultancy agreement.

Pollution, Bexhill

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will investigate the risks posed by drums of (a) sodium cyanide, (b) dioxins, (c) sulphuric and (d) hydrochloric acids on beaches at and near Bexhill in Sussex.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 1 January 1990]: I am aware that containers, drums and packages, a few containing hazardous substances, have been washed ashore at a number of locations along the south and east coasts in recent weeks. It is thought that they originate from a Pakistani-owned and registered vessel, the Muree, which sank off the Devon coast on 28 October last year.

The Department of Transport's marine pollution control unit has examined the ship's manifest and has advised Ministers that none of the cargo would pose a significant threat to the marine environment. However, some substances which were on board could be hazardous to people who come into direct contact with them. Warning messages have been issued to fishermen and local authorities in areas where it is thought they may come ashore.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Social Security Commissioners (Appeals)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Attorney-General how many decisions were issued by the social security commissioners relating to each social security benefit, distinguishing between single payments and other supplementary benefits, in each month since January 1988; how many appeals to the commissioners relating to each benefit are outstanding; and in how many of these cases the appeal (a) is not ready for hearing, (b) is awaiting a hearing and (c) has been heard but the commissioner's decision has not been issued.

The Attorney-General: The information is not readily available in the form requested. However, the number of decisions issued by the commissioners in calendar years 1988 and 1989 for each category of benefit is shown in the tables, although existing statistics do not distinguish between supplementary benefit and single payment appeals.

Information on the number of appeals outstanding relating to each category of benefit is not readily available, but the current total of outstanding appeals is 3,331. In 1988, 19 per cent. of appeals, and in 1989 24 per cent. of appeals, were decided after an oral hearing; the balance of appeals in each year was decided without an oral hearing. Of the total of outstanding appeals (a) 1,559 are not ready for decision; (b) 1,528 are awaiting a decision; and (c) 244 have been decided and a commissioner's decision has not yet been issued.

Number of Decisions issued by the Social Security Commissioners in 1988

	Number
Supplementary Benefit	1,198
Family Income Supplement	18
Unemployment Benefit	176
Sickness Benefit	196
Attendance Allowance	173

Child Benefit	34
Retirement Pensions	41
Statutory Sick Pay	3
General Benefits
e.g. widows benefit, guardian allowance	68
Income Support	47
Family Credit	2
Total	2,315

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Attorney-General what is the average cost to public funds of an appeal to the social security commissioners, with or without an oral hearing.

The Attorney-General: It is estimated that the average cost to public funds is £2,428·29.

Compensation

Mr. Alton: To ask the Attorney-General (1) what representations he has received about the present levels of compensation payable under the Administration of Justice Act 1982; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will review the current levels of compensation provided for under the Administration of Justice Act 1982.

The Attorney-General: The Solicitor-General and I, as well as the Lord Chancellor, have received a number of letters from members of the public expressing their concern about the present level of bereavement damages which may be awarded under the Administration of Justice Act 1982. The Solicitor-General announced in May 1989 during the Committee stage of the Citizens Compensation Bill (Official Report, Standing Committee C, 3 May 1989, col. 21) that the Lord Chancellor would be reviewing the sum specified in the 1982 Act. Since then, the Lord Chancellor has been studying the question whether it would be appropriate to raise the sum and, if so, to what new level, and he will be issuing a consultation paper shortly.

Constitution (Judicial Review)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he or the Lord Chancellor have received seeking a judicial review of the constitution.

The Attorney-General: No such representations have been received either by me or by the Lord Chancellor.

HEALTH

Malaria

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of malaria contracted in the United Kingdom have been reported in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: During the years 1979-88 two cases of malaria contracted by mosquito bite in the United Kingdom were reported to the malaria reference laboratory at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine (both in 1983).

In addition there were reports of cases contracted following congenital infection, organ transplant or blood transfusion in the following years: 1984 (four cases), 1985 (four cases) and 1986 (three cases).

Powered Wheelchairs

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether his Department has received a report from the Disablement Services Authority concerning the provision of occupant-controlled indoor and outdoor powered wheelchairs; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether his Department will make available the funds to enable the Disablement Services Authority to provide occupant-controlled indoor and outdoor powered wheelchairs to those more severely disabled people who would benefit from such a chair.

Mr. Freeman: The Disablement Services Authority is at present undertaking a study to assess the numbers of most severely disabled people who would benefit from this type of wheelchair. Once the results of the study are known, the authority will consider the resource implications and advise me in due course.

Sight Tests

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what surveys of sight test numbers in late 1989 his Department commissioned; if he will publish details of the form of the survey and its results; and if he will publish comparable figures for each of the last 10 years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The results of a survey of the number of sight tests in the first quarter of 1990 compared with earlier periods should be available after Easter, when we expect to provide a summary of the findings for the Library.

Adopted Children

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children were adopted in each of the last five years in (a) England and Wales and (b) the Basildon area.

Mr. Freeman: The total numbers of adoption orders granted by courts in England and Wales for children aged under 18 years during each of the last five years are given in the table.

	Number
1984	8,648
1985	7,615
1986	7,892
1987	7,201
1988	7,390

Data for 1989 for England and Wales are expected to be available in April. Because the form from which adoption statistics are derived does not record the residential address of either the child or his/her parents, the numbers of adoptions in particular areas are not available.

Children in Care

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has of the number of children in the care of local authorities in (a) England and Wales and (b) the Basildon area, for each of the last five years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information is collected centrally on children in the care of local authorities with social services responsibilities. This is published in "Children in the Care of Local Authorities" and is available in the Library. Information is not available centrally for the Basildon area, but data on children in the care of Essex local authority are available; the most recent data relate to 31 March 1987. These figures and data for each of the last five years are given in the table.

Children in care at 31 March in Essex and England and Wales

	Essex	England and Wales
1983	1,594	86,552
1984	1,438	78,889
1985	1,224	73,302
1986	1,189	70,919
1987	1,234	69,249

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average time for which a child is kept in the care of a local authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information is available centrally about episodes of care, that is, the continuous length of time a child is in care without a change in legal status. The length of care episodes for children leaving care is shown by time bands in the publication "Children in the Care of Local Authorities", which is available in the Library. This information is also shown by the legal status of the child, the reason the episode ceased and the age of the child.

Genito-urinary Medicine

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for the last financial year the special sums to each regional health authority for genito-urinary medicine; which authorities took up all or part of those allocations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 10 January 1990]: We have not provided any specific funding for genito-urinary medicine. We have, however, made it clear to health authorities that we expect them to make full use of the opportunity provided by the extra resources made available for AIDS to improve these services given their role in preventing the spread of HIV infection and sexually transmitted diseases.

A total of £130 million was made available for AIDS in 1989-90.

WALES

Jobs

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many major job announcements have been made in the past six months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Investment in Wales has continued at a high level over the past six months with a new investment on average every eight working days. Major announcements include Toyota's £140 million investment at Shotton, the Gooding-Sanken joint venture at Aberaman promising 520 jobs, and an expansion of RF Brookes, Rogerstone promising 220 full-time and 50 part-time jobs.

Forests

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to develop forests as a tourist resource in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Welsh forests already provide a substantial tourist resource. Most of those managed by the Forestry Commission are open to the public and attract millions of visits a year. They offer a variety of recreational facilities such as visitor centres, forest walks and picnic places, as well as opportunities for specialist pursuits ranging from horse riding to orienteering. The commission also promotes camping and caravanning holidays to both home and overseas markets and co-operates with tourist boards on a range of initiatives.

A growing number of private forests are open to the public, and applicants under the commission's woodland grant scheme are required to take into account the recreational potential of new woodlands.

Rally Driving School (Powys)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will call in the planning application to Montgomeryshire district council concerning the proposed expansion of the rally driving school at Gribyn Forest, Powys.

Mr. Grist: On the information available to him, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State sees no reason why an application of this nature, which does not appear to raise issues of more than local importance, should not be decided by the local planning authority.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the possible expansion of the rally driving school in the Gribyn Forest, Powys.

Mr. Grist: None.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has issued any guidance to the Forestry Commission concerning the possible expansion of the rally driving school at Gribyn Forest, Powys.

Mr. Peter Walker: No. Gribyn Forest is not managed by the Forestry Commission; it is privately owned.

Earnings

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report tables showing the proportion of part-time employees earning less than (a) £4·16, (b) £4·32, (c) £3·12 and (d) £2·80 per hour, excluding overtime, shift and PBR premiums, in Wales and each county in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: Information is not readily available for all part-time employees, nor for hourly earnings excluding shift and PBR premiums as well as overtime. Statistics could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales why the information on standard spending assessments, referred to in his answer to the hon. Member for Durham, North-West (Ms. Armstrong) of 13 November 1989, Official Report, column 34, is not yet available.

Mr. Peter Walker: The 1990-91 standard spending assessments, and the formulae underlying their calculation, are given in the Welsh revenue support grant distribution report, which was laid before the House of Commons on 20 December 1989.

Margam

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will investigate the level of releases of natural gas to the atmosphere from normal operations at the British Steel plant at Margam.

Mr. Grist: No. I have no reason to believe that there are any significant releases of natural gas from the works.

DEFENCE

Hong Kong

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any members of Her Majesty's armed forces stationed in Hong Kong were involved in armed confrontation with Vietnamese emigrants on Lantau Island during the Christmas period.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Her Majesty's armed forces had no involvement in the quelling of the disturbances at Chi Ma Wan camp on 29 December; this was carried out by the Hong Kong correctional services department and police.

One RAF helicopter was, however, deployed to evacuate six injured Vietnamese boat people for medical treatment.

Fissile Material

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies his Department has conducted concerning arrangements for safeguarding fissile material from nuclear weapons dismantled as part of arms reduction agreements.

Mr. Neubert: None.

Aircraft Collision, Northumberland

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the collision of two RAF fighters in Northumberland on Tuesday 9 January.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if the two RAF aircraft involved in the mid-air collision over the Hexham constituency on Tuesday 9 January were both engaged on low-flying exercises; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the mid-air collision between the RAF jets over the Hexham constituency on Tuesday 9 January.

Mr. Neubert: On Tuesday 9 January 1990 an RAF Tornado and an RAF Jaguar aircraft engaged on routine low-flying training missions were involved in a mid-air collision over Northumberland. The Tornado aircraft crashed about five miles east of Hexham and some wreckage fell on the A68 and A69. There were no civilian casualties. The Jaguar remained airborne and was able to land at RAF Leeming. The crew of the Tornado sustained major injuires and are in hospital in Newcastle. The pilot of the Jaguar was uninjured.

A board of inquiry has been convened in the normal way and a summary of its findings will be published in due course. It would be inappropriate to speculate about the causes of the accident until the inquiry is complete.

Army Scholarships

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the schools in respect of which tuition fees were paid and from whose head teachers endorsements of candidature were received and the numbers of (a) boys and (b) girls from each school who have received awards under the Army scholarship scheme for pupils aged 15 and 16 years for the latest year in which information is available;

(2) what has been the total cost in grants and tuition paid in respect of (a) boys and (b) girls receiving both grants and tuition in the latest year for which information is available in respect of the Army scholarship scheme for children aged 15 and 16 years.

Mr. Neubert: The information is not available in the format requested. In financial year 1988-89, a total of £92,000 was spent on the Army scholarship scheme. Each scholar received £750 per academic year at that time. The award was increased to £1,050 with effect from 1 April 1989.

There are currently 96 scholars, including nine females.

The award of an Army scholarship does not rest on the head teacher's endorsement alone. Applicants are required to meet the necessary academic standards as well as passing a test, a medical examination and an interview.

Educational Allowances

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the approxiamte cost of holiday visit passages paid in respect of children of defence service personnel in receipt of educational allowances, for the latest year available.

Mr. Neubert: The information available does not allow the costs of school children's visits to be identified separately from the costs of other types of travel.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total sum paid to (a) officers and (b) other ranks in educational allowances in the years 1987-88 and 1988-89; what were the numbers of individuals receiving allowances in categories (a) and (b) above; and what is the average grossed-up value of an allowance in each category.

Mr. Neubert: The information requested is as follows:

	Total sum paid in educational allowances		Numbers of individuals in receipt of allowances		Average allowance paid per child[1]
	1987-88 (£ million)	1988-89 (£ million)	1987-88	1988-89	1987-88 (£)	1988-89 (£)
Officers	67·955	65·524	7,951	7,599	5,431	5,423
Other ranks	38·626	41·196	6,559	6,533	4,144	4,378

[1] This is the average allowance paid per child and is inclusive of grossing-up for income tax.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Salmon

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he now expects to be in a position to publish the departmental report on the effect in the salmon fishery of draft netting at sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Work on the review required by section 39 of the Salmon Act 1986 is in progress. My colleagues and I will submit a report to Parliament as soon as possible.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the institutions where the research work into bovine spongiform encephalopathy as recommended by the Tyrrell report will be carried out.

Mr. Gummer: The MAFF-funded research work into bovine spongiform encephalopathy will be carried out mainly at the MAFF central veterinary laboratory, Weybridge, and at the Institute of Animal Health at the AFRC/MRC neuropathogenesis unit in Edinburgh, although some work may be conducted at other research establishments.

Antibiotic Hormone Drugs

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the antibiotic hormone drugs given a product licence without reference to the veterinary products committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The only product of this kind licensed without specific reference to the veterinary products committee is Synulox Lactating Cow intrammary suspension (PL 0030/4000), which contains two antibiotics and a glucocorticoid anti-inflammatory agent. Between 1978 and 1984 the VPC reviewed fully the data relating to all intrammary products then on the market and recommended the renewal of licences for a number of them. When the Ministry's expert assessors examined the product licence application for Synulox in 1986 they considered that it raised no new issues not already addressed by the VPC and a licence was therefore granted.

Several members of the VPC subsequently asked for details of the assessment. They accepted officials' conclusions that no new safety or other issue was involved and it was agreed that any future applications for similar products would be referred to the VPC. No further applications have been received.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Fund

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the social fund allocation for each local office, both in respect of grants and loans, for the year 1990-91.

Mr. Scott: Individual local office allocations for 1990-91 are now being considered and will be announced in due course.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to which offices he is allocating the extra £3 million for the social fund which he announced on 19 December 1989, Official Report, column 174; and, for each office, whether this is for loans or grants.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is in the Library.

Mobility Allowance (Deaf-blind People)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by what date he intends to announce eligibility criteria for mobility allowance in the case of people who are deaf-blind.

Mr. Scott: We intend to bring forward proposed amendments to the relevant regulations as soon as possible.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what consultation has been undertaken in drawing up the criteria of deaf-blind people for the purpose of entitlement to mobility allowance;

(2) if he will consult the mobility allowance campaign on suitable eligibility criteria for deaf-blind people.

Mr. Scott: We are aware of the representations that have been made on behalf of deaf-blind people for extending mobility allowance to them.

Single Payments

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish (a) the annual amounts paid in single payments in the last year in which these payments were available for each of the area offices in Dundee (b) the budgets for (i) grants and (ii) loans and (c) the actual amounts paid under these headings in the Dundee offices for each year for which figures are available.

Mr. Scott: Details of single payment expenditure for 1987-88, and annual social fund allocations for loans and grants for 1988-89 and 1989-90, listed by local office, are available in the Library, together with details of the amounts of loans and grants paid since 11 April 1988.

Pensions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps have been taken to ensure that people contracting out by means of personal pension schemes have been advised of the approximate age at which, assuming a rate of return of 0·5 or 2·5 per cent. above the annual increase in earnings, it is likely to be in their interest to return to the state scheme.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: It is for an individual wishing to take out a personal pension to seek advice appropriate to his or her needs. In the case of personal pension schemes which are investments as defined in the Financial Services Act, persons regulated by bodies under that Act have a duty to provide best advice on such products. It is for the individual to make arrangements for obtaining any further advice which may be necessary in the light of changing circumstances.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether anyone contracting out by means of a personal pension scheme will be allowed to return to the state scheme at any age.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Yes.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report, for each uprating from 1973 to 1990, the percentage above inflation by which the basic state pension has, and is to be, uprated.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 13 December 1989]: The information requested is set out in the table.

Uprating	Increase of retirement pension above RPI (percentage)
October 1973	4·9
July 1974	15·6
April 1975	−1·7
November 1975	3
November 1976	0
November 1977	1·4
November 1978	3·3
November 1979	2·1
November 1980	1·2
November 1981	−3
November 1982	4·7
November 1983	0
November 1984	0
November 1985	0
July 1986	0
April 1987	0

Uprating	Increase of retirement pension above RPI (percentage)
April 1988	0
April 1989	0
April 1990	0

In November 1983 the method of uprating changed from being partly based on forecasts of future inflation to being based on known movements in the retail prices index.

EMPLOYMENT

Apprentices

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people are currently participating in apprenticeship training.

Mr. Nicholls: Comprehensive statistics on all types of apprenticeship are not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in which 20 parliamentary constituencies the largest percentage fall in unemployment occurred in the last 12 months.

Mr. Nicholls: The following information is in the Library. The table shows the 20 parliamentary constituencies which have experienced the largest percentage falls in unemployment over the last 12 months.

The figures are not seasonally adjusted.

Percentage change in the number of unemployed over the year to November 1989

Constituency name	Per cent.

Sutton and Cheam	−4·4

Labour Statistics, Cleveland

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the latest figure for people in employment in Cleveland.

Mr. Nicholls: The latest available employment estimates for the county are from the September 1987 census of employment. There were then 184,700 employees in employment, excluding self-employed people and members of Her Majesty's forces, in Cleveland.

Labour Statistics, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the largest 15 categories of employment in the Doncaster area (a) to date, (b) five years ago and (c) 10 years ago; how many were employed in each category; and what percentage of the total work force these represent.

Mr. Nicholls: Information about employment in local areas is available only for dates when censuses of employment are taken. The table gives the available information for the Doncaster travel-to-work area from censuses of employment taken in September 1981, September 1984, and September 1987 (latest available).

Key Training

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment pursuant to his answer of 12 December, Official Report, column 589, how many employees of his Department and of what grades it is intended to second to Key Training of 10 Eaton place, Reading, in the fiscal year 1990-91.

Mr. Nicholls: There are no plans at present to second any employees of this Department to Key Training in the fiscal year 1990-91.

Earnings

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will estimate the proportion of wages council employees earning below (a) £4·16, (b) £4·32, (c) £3·12 and (d) £2·80 per hour, excluding overtime, shift and PBR premiums;

(2) if he will estimate the proportion of wages council employees, broken down by region, earning below (a) £4·16, (b) £4·32, (c) £3·12 and (d) £2·80 per hour, excluding overtime, shift and PBR premiums;

(3) if he will estimate the proportion of wages council employees, broken down by industry earning below (a) £4·16, (b) £4·32, (c) £3·12 and (d) 2·80 per hour, excluding overtime, shift and PBR premiums;

(4) if he will estimate the proportion of wages council employees, broken down by collective agreement, earning below (a) £4·16, (b) £4·32, (c) £3·12 and (d) £2·80 per hour, excluding overtime, shift and PBR premiums.

Mr. Nicholls: No information is readily available for hourly earnings excluding shift and PBR premiums as well as overtime, nor for wages council employees broken down by region or by industry, and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will publish in the Official Report tables showing the proportion of part-time employees earning less than (a) £4·16, (b) £4·32, (c) £3·12 and (d) £2·80 per hour, excluding overtime, shift and PBR premiums, for each London borough;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report tables showing the proportion of part-time employees earning less than (a) £4·16, (b) £4·32, (c) £3·12 and (d) £2·80 per hour, excluding overtime, shift and PBR premiums, in Great Britain and in each standard economic region;

(3) if he will publish in the Official Report tables showing the proportion of part-time employees earning less than (a) £4·16, (b) £4·32, (c) £3·12 and (d) £2·80 per hour, excluding overtime, shift and PBR premiums, in Great Britain and in each county.

Mr. Nicholls: No information is readily available for all part-time employees regionally, nor for hourly earnings excluding shift and PBR premiums as well as overtime, and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Strikes

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many unofficial strikes took place in Great Britain in 1989; and what were the comparable figures for each of the five previous years;

(2) what was the total number of days lost through unofficial strikes in Great Britain in 1989; and what were the comparable figures for the five previous years.

Mr. Nicholls: Separate statistics on unofficial strikes ceased to be published as a regular series in 1981. However, a limited amount of information from a special exercise was included in the Government's Green Paper "Unofficial Action and the Law", a copy of which is in the House of Commons Library.

Action Credit Scheme

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have taken part in the action credit scheme in each of the three pilot areas; how many ceased claiming income support to start full-time work; how many ceased claiming income support to start part-time work; how many failed to secure employment after the three-month jobsearch period; and whether he has any plans to extend the scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested will not be available until after the end of the action credit scheme pilot, which is due to finish at the end of August 1990.

SCOTLAND

NHS

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much of the £220 million additional expenditure earmarked for the National Health Service in Scotland is new cash; how much is from cash improvement schemes; and how much is from income generation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The figure is £223 million and all of it is new money. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave her on 11 December 1989, Vol. 163, column 510.

Training and Employment Programmes

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the training and employment programmes run by the Department of Employment in Scotland; and if he will indicate which, if any, of these programmes will not be wholly transferred to the new Scottish Enterprise Agency when it is established.

Mr. Lang: The training and employment programmes run by the Department of Employment in Scotland are set out in the table:

Youth Training Scheme
Employment Training
Community Opportunities
Enterprise Allowance Scheme
Business Growth Scheme
Technical and Vocational Education Initiative
Training Access Points
Compacts
Development of Vocational Qualifications
Enterprise in Higher Education
Scottish Wider Access Programme
Employment Rehabilitation Service
Community Industry
Restart
Job Clubs
Job Start
Job Share
Disablement Advisory Service
Disablement Resettlement Service
Sheltered Employment
Travel to Interview Scheme

The programmes which will not be wholly transferred to Scottish Enterprise are:

Technical and Vocational Education Initiative
Enterprise in Higher Education
Employment Rehabilitation Service
Restart
Job Clubs
Job Start
Job Share
Disablement Advisory Service
Disablement Resettlement Service
Sheltered Employment
Travel to Interview Scheme

Earnings

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report tables showing the proportion of part-time employees earning less than (a) £4·16, (b) £4·32, (c) £3·12 and (d) £2·80 per hour, excluding overtime, shift and PBR premiums, for Scotland and in each regional authority and, if possible, each borough.

Mr. Lang: No information is readily available for part-time employees regionally, nor for hourly earnings excluding shift and PBR premiums as well as overtime, and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Vocational Courses

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent on vocational courses in colleges of further education in Scotland each year for the past 10 years.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is not available centrally.

Capital Building Programme

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much of the capital building programme for the Scottish new towns for the next five years comes from (a) private and (b) public revenue.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish commentary on the Government's expenditure plans for the years 1989-90 to 1991-92 (published in March 1989) indicates at tables 15.5 and 15.6 projected gross capital expenditure on the new town development corporations' housing and other environmental services programmes. Planned expenditure on these programmes for 1990-91 to 1992-93 arising from the recent public expenditure survey will be published shortly in the 1990 Scottish commentary. The Government do not hold projections of private sector capital investment in the new towns. The relative contributions of private and public capital investment in the new towns over the next five years will depend upon decisions made in future public expenditure surveys and the private sector's perception of investment opportunities.

Further Education

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was spent by Scottish local authorities on further education provision each year for the past 10 years.

Mr. Lang: The expenditure by Scottish local authorities on further education provision for each year from 1978-79 to 1987-88 (latest available) is set out in the table.

Financial Year	Scottish LA Expenditure £000s
1978-79	77,120
1979-80	98,961
1980-81	125,149
1981-82	144,847
1982-83	166,964
1983-84	183,055
1984-85	195,262
1985-86	188,102
1986-87	193,520
1987-88	213,586

Source: Local Financial Returns
Note: Figures cover local authority current expenditure on further education.

New Towns

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the capital building programmes for each of the Scottish new towns for the next five years.

Mr. Lang: The capital programmes for each of the new town development corporations in 1990-91 will be the subject of discussion between my Department and each corporation following the submission of each corporation's annual budget submission later this month. The composition of the corporations' capital programmes and their financing requirements for the following four years will be determined at the same time in subsequent financial years.

Poinding Orders

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations the Lord Advocate has had with sheriff officers and messengers-at-arms as to how they will cope with poinding orders arising out of poll tax debts.

Mr. Rifkind: There has been no request for any such consultations.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision is to be taken by the post in Islamabad on the application of Mr. Basaharat Ali Shakir, who was born on 14 November 1956, Ref. Imm/93660; HO Ref. 5725181, to join his wife in the United Kingdom; when a report from the Home Office concerning this application was received at the post; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Mr. Shakir applied for entry clearance at the British High Commission in Islamabad on 18 February 1988. Following an interview on 9 January 1989 the entry clearance officer referred the application to the Home Office on 27 February 1989 for Mr. Shakir's wife to be interviewed.

Copies of the immigration service report on the interview with Mrs. Shakir were sent to Islamabad on 14 June and 13 October 1989. I regret that both copies of the report appear to have been lost in transit. The Home Office has now sent a further copy, on receipt of which the entry clearance officer hopes to reach a decision without further delay.

Vietnamese Refugees

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Vietnamese children classified as having family members in Hong Kong live in separate camps from their relations.

Mr. Maude: We do not have figures for the number of children who fall into this category. The policy in Hong Kong is to ensure that families are not divided. As soon as any case comes to notice in which children are separated from family members they are wherever possible transferred between camps so that they can be reunited.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will convene an international conference to seek co-operation in providing third country settlement for those Vietnamese currently in camps in Hong Kong.

Mr. Maude: An international conference on Indo-China refugees was held in Geneva in June last year. At that conference the international community pledged sufficient places to resettle all Vietnamese refugees in the South-East Asian region, including Hong Kong. It was also agreed that those who were not refugees should return to their country of origin.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the reasons why no legal advice is available to Vietnamese refugees before screening in Hong Kong; and why no representatives from independent bodies are allowed to accompany refugees to the screening interview.

Mr. Maude: The UNHCR is permitted access to Vietnamese asylum-seekers and may provide legal advice to them both before and after screening. The UNHCR is also permitted to attend any screening interview for monitoring purposes.

Under Hong Kong law there is no provision for Government legal aid to be provided for Vietnamese asylum-seekers for screening and review procedures.

Vietnamese Prisoners

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those persons imprisoned in Vietnam for their political or religious beliefs on whose behalf Her Majesty's Government have made representations to the Government of Vietnam.

Mr. Sainsbury: We regularly raise the question of human rights with the Government of Vietnam. Both bilaterally and together with our partners in the European Community, we have in the course of 1989 raised a number of specific cases, including individuals imprisoned for their political or religious beliefs. These include:

Father Dominic Tran Ninh Thu
Tran Van Luong
Doan Quoc Sy
Pham Van Thuong
Le Manh
Thich Quang Do
Thich Huyen Quang
Thich Tue Sy
Thich Duc Nhuan
Thich Tri Sieu
Nguyen Chi Thien

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of Stae for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on (a) the incidence of cholera and (b) the availability of sufficient quantities of fresh water in the camps used for holding Vietnamese refugees in Hong Kong.

Mr. Maude: In 1989 there were 23 cases of cholera in camps holding Vietnamese in Hong Kong.

Enough drinkable fresh water is available in all centres. In 1988 the average daily consumption of water per preson was about 250 litres for all purposes, and in 1989 about 235 litres. Drinking water standards in Hong Kong comply with WHO guidelines on drinking water quality.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding the practice followed in holding appeals against the findings of the screening procedure for Vietnamee refugees.

Mr. Maude: When the director of immigration refuses an asylum-seeker's claim to refugee status, the asylum-seeker has 28 days to apply to the refugee status review board (RSRB) for a review of the decision. The immigration department file on the asylum-seeker is made available to both the RSRB and the UNHCR. The asylum-seeker or the UNHCR may present additional information or documentation to the RSRB in support of the claim for refugee status. The RSRB considers the whole of the facts and submissions made by the applicants and/or by those acting on the applicant's behalf before confirming or reversing the director of immigration's decision. Where the RSRB considers it necessary, it may interview the asylum-seekers or the immigration officer before arriving at its decision.

If the immigration officer is so interviewed, it is in the presence of the applicant who has the right to comment on what the immigration officer has said in answer to questions put by the board. Of the 4,594 appeals considered so far 392 (7·9 per cent.) have been upheld. In all, including appeals and UNHCR mandate cases, 922 persons (11·3 per cent.) have been classified as refugees out of 8,167 screened so far.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy not to repatriate unaccompanied Vietnamese children until their parents have been positively traced and identified.

Mr. Maude: We propose to take up this suggestion with the UNHCR's committee on unaccompanied minors in Hong Kong, which has a mandate to decide on a solution on a case-by-case basis in the best interests of each child.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is his policy to subject Vietnamese unaccompanied children in camps in Hong Kong to the same screening procedures as those used for adult Vietnamese; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Guidelines for the screening of unaccompanied minors were endorsed by the international conference in Geneva in June last year. These stipulate that for children over 15 the interview procedure should be modified to take into account the special situation of each child. For those under 15, the UNHCR special committee on unaccompanied minors would be delegated to carry out the refugee status assessment. The Hong Kong authorities abide by these guidelines in their treatment of unaccompanied minors.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs under what age the term unaccompanied minor is applied by Her Majesty's Government to Vietnamese children in the camps in Hong Kong.

Mr. Maude: This term is applied to children under the age of 18 in accordance with documentation associated with the comprehensive plan of action endorsed by the international conference on Indo-Chinese refugees in Geneva in June 1989.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assurances he has received from the Vietnamese Government concerning passes for repatriated persons.

Mr. Maude: No assurances have been sought from the Vietnamese on this subject. We have no reason to believe that identity cards have not been issued to those who have returned. This is one of the issues to be raised in the course of monitoring.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he intends to take to improve conditions in the camps used to house Vietnamese refugees in Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: We can most effectively improve conditions in the camps by accelerating the rate at which people leave them, through resettlement in the case of refugees, and repatriation in the case of those who are not. Our policy is directed firmly at these aims. In addition we have contributed or pledged over £21 million since mid-1989 towards accommodation for boat people in Hong Kong.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to complete screening and resulting appeals at the current rate for the Vietnamese boat people currently in camps in Hong Kong.

Mr. Maude: At the current rate of screening and appeals, it is estimated that it will take about two years to complete the process for all Vietnamese boat people currently in camps in Hong Kong.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to respond to the petition regarding the plight of the boat people in Hong Kong presented to him by the honourable Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs is studying the petition presented by the hon. Member and will be replying to him very soon on the points which are raised in it.

Vietnam

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the number of places of worship recently destroyed in Vietnam; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: We are not aware that places of worship have recently been deliberately destroyed in Vietnam. On the contrary; the Bishop's conference has recently published a letter acknowledging the number of churches which have been rebuilt or repaired in the past few years.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the penalties specified by the Vietnamese authorities for Catholics attending mass in Vietnam; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: We are not aware of penalties imposed for attending mass. Congregations at the regular masses given at the cathedrals in Hanoi and Ho Chi Minh City are large.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the provision for religious worship in Vietnam's re-education camps.

Mr. Sainsbury: We understand that individuals detained in prisons or camps in Vietnam are permitted personal religious observances and practices. There are no provisions for collective worship or freedom of access for ministers of religion.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has concerning Vietnamese provincial decrees limiting religious services, church building and repair and the numbers of priests and ministers.

Mr. Sainsbury: We understand that local government organisations in Vietnam no longer have the power to issue this sort of regulation. In recent months the Government have authorised a relaxation of control over the building and repair of churches, although there remain problems of funds and resources. State authorisation is required before beginning study for the priesthood. Nevertheless 24 new bishops have been consecrated since 1975, and there are currently some 200 seminarians in four seminaries in Vietnam.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the number of prisoners currently detained in re-education camps in Vietnam and the reasons for their detention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The official figure for prisoners still detained in re-education camps is 1,000. A substantial number of political prisoners were released in 1987 and 1988. We have lobbied the Vietnamese Government on a number of occasions, both bilaterally and together with our EC partners, on behalf of specific cases of alleged abuses of human rights.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received concerning the incidence of detention without trial, torture and execution in Vietnam; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: We understand that approximately 1,000 people remain in detention without trial in Vietnam. We are aware of reports of instances of torture. In the course of 1988 (figures are not yet available for 1989) five people were sentenced to death but no executions were announced.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has regarding the number of (a) Buddhist monks and nuns, (b) Catholic priests and nuns, (c) Cao Dai and Hoa Hao priests and (d) Protestant ministers currently held in prison in Vietnam and the offences for which they were imprisoned.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is not possible to give authoritative figures for these categories, although various individual cases in these categories are known. The charges laid against most of the best known currently in detention involve the organisation of armed disaffected groups.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has regarding the persecution of Buddhists who refuse to worship under the auspices of the state Buddhist church in Vietnam.

Mr. Sainsbury: Vietnam does not have a state Buddhist church.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the number of staff required by Her Majesty's embassy in Hanoi to monitor the welfare of repatriated persons, per 10,000.

Mr. Maude: The number of staff required by Her Majesty's embassy in Hanoi to monitor the welfare of repatriated persons would depend on the number of non-volunteers returned. At present UNHCR monitors those who volunteer to return. We hope that they will agree to monitor all who return as they do with those returned to Laos from Thailand. It also depends on the regularity of the visits proposed. A requirement to monitor 10,000 people could be covered by two to three full-time staff bearing in mind the fact that those returned will be divided into family groups and that the majority of those come from a relatively small area.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the number of flights from Hong Kong carrying volunteers for repatriation that have been refused landing rights in Vietnam: and if he will make a statement on the reasons for refusal given by the Vietnamese authorities.

Mr. Maude: None.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Vietnamese Government regarding their policy towards religious activity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: We and our EC partners regularly raise the question of human rights with the Government of Vietnam, including cases of individuals imprisoned for their political or religious beliefs. We recently raised the imprisonment of Father Dominic Tran Dinh Thu.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a member of Her Majesty's embassy in Vietnam last visited a Vietnamese re-education camp; and if he will summarise the contents of any report resulting from the visit.

Mr. Sainsbury: No member of Her Majesty's embassy Hanoi has visited a Vietnamese re-education camp in the past three years.

British Ambassadors

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British ambassadors are currently in service; and how many are (a) black, (b) Asian and (c) women.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are 123 ambassadors and high commissioners currently in service, including non-resident ambassadors and high commissioners. In addition, there are nine heads of delegation to international organisations currently in service who have the personal rank of ambassador.

Of these, five are women. None is black or Asian.

Hong Kong

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many citizens of Hong Kong of non-United Kingdom origin are entitled to right of abode in the United Kingdom in addition to the 225,000 specified in his statement of 20 December.

Mr. Maude: There may be people in Hong Kong who have qualified for right of abode under existing United Kingdom law, for example, a Commonwealth citizen who before 1 January 1983 was married to a man who had right of abode in the United Kingdom. The information is not available but the numbers are likely to be very small.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what commitments were given by Her Majesty's Government to the authorities or other bodies in Hong Kong concerning the numbers and nature of right of abode to be offered in the United Kingdom prior to the statement of 20 December.

Mr. Maude: None.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) attempted and

(b) successful suicides have taken place among Vietnamese nationals in detention camps at Hei Ling Chan, Sham Shui, Po and Whitehead in Hong Kong in 1989.

Mr. Maude: The figures are:

	(a) Attempted	(b) Successful
Hei Ling Chan	0	0
Whitehead	1	0

United States of America

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to visit the United States of America; and how he plans to explain British policy and promote British interests there.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs expects to visit the United States soon for wide-ranging discussions with members of the United States Government.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions since May 1979 Her Majesty's Government have conveyed reservations to the United States Government concerning (a) United States internal human rights policies and (b) United States military interventions in sovereign states.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is not our practice to convey formal reservations to the United States Government in these contexts.

Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has received from non-governmental organisations in regard to initiatives that may be taken at the forthcoming nuclear non-proliferation treaty review conference in Geneva.

Mr. Waldegrave: Only one such proposal has been received, in a letter from Dr. David Lowry of the European Proliferation Information Centre (EPIC). It concerned the possibility of diverting resources from weapons development to measures to combat global warming.

Eastern Bloc

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to meet his counterparts in (a) Romania, (b) the German Democratic Republic, (c) Hungary, (d) Bulgaria, (e) Czechoslovakia, (f) Poland, (g) Albania and (h) the Soviet Union.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs plans to meet over the next few months his counterparts from all these countries except Albania, with which we have no diplomatic relations. He will meet the GDR Foreign Minister during his visit to East Berlin on 22-24 January.

Parliamentary Questions

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his practice on making statements and answering parliamentary questions on the internal affairs and human rights records of other countries.

Mr. Sainsbury: We answer questions as they arise, and make statements when it is appropriate.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 164

SESSION 1989–90

18th December 1989—12th January 1990

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
